the Paramount Picture that seemed permanent on Broadway makes its exit next Saturday, after playing to capacity crowds for 62 weeks which breaks all long run records for a picture anywhere in the world. It could remain at the CRITERION THEATRE indefinitely to entertain the thousands who still want to see Cecil B. De Mille's Cinemasterpiece.

But an International gesture sends "THE TEN COMMANDMENTS" into temporary oblivion. The French government wants a theatre for an American showing of its prize picture made in France under government subsidy.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, grateful to the French for many courtesies accorded Gloria Swanson and her company which recently produced "Madame Sans Gene" in Paris and Versailles, and in appreciation of the great popularity of Paramount Pictures in France, yields its theatre.

It is for France!

"'The Swan' Attains Spectacular Heights at the Missouri"!

—ST. LOUIS GLOBE DEMOCRAT

They raved about "The Swan" in St. Louis. They jammed the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, last week to see it, and the Cleveland papers said, "A beautifully done picture. Exceptionally well cast. Adolphe Menjou gives one of his best performances."

And they'll like "The Swan" everywhere. For just as the stage play was hailed as "the perfect comedy of 1924," the picture is THE screen classic of romantic love. Be sure to play and get behind this one, boys. There's a fortune in it!

WAS HE FEAR-BOUND?

What More Do You Want?

When "Fear-Bound" played at the Colonial Theatre, Detroit, the Detroit Times said:

"Motion picture fans who crave fighting scenes will get their fill at the Colonial this week. 'Fear-Bound' is spliced with action from the first foot to the last and it develops a rough and tumble battle between two huskies that will be long remembered. In addition to its thrills, 'Fear-Bound' has a nice love story that meets with a happy ending and there are comedy touches of a unique character. The case is excellent."

In that long list of American historical pictures, and that list includes "The Birth of a Nation," "America," "The Covered Wagon," "The Iron Horse" and "Janice Meredith," none is so rich in the vivid portrayal of convincing patriotism as "The Man Without a Country." For this picture is as inspiring as any ever produced, its message is confined to no land or period, it neither preaches nor offers to teach, yet by its magnificently worked out story it delivers a crashing, thundering lesson that had its opening night audience working the handkerchiefs overtime. And any film that jumps from the screen into an audience is "there."

The theme, sad and pathetic, is forceful but different from the usual patriotic drama. There are but two efforts for a big mass thrill—and those efforts go across with a wow. The rest of the time is concerned with the story itself, and it's a great story. For a good many years it has been one of the classics of American literature. Primarily, because the theme was something surefire. So is the production.

The story, which is probably familiar everywhere, bears this much retelling. Lieut. Nolan, a promising young officer in the American army, is attached to an army post on the frontier around 1800. Before him his father was in the army, so patriotism is rife in the family. Along comes Aaron Burr with his dream of a great western empire. He wins the lad to his cause, and when word comes from President Jefferson that Burr is to be apprehended, young Nolan is still firm in his belief that Burr is a great man and worth following. So the deluded youth, firm in a belief, is court-martialed and, after his jurors have returned, he is asked if he wishes to recant. Then he utters the words:

"Damn the United States. I hope that I may never hear of the United States again."

Then the sentence, he is sent aboard ship and word is given that he is never to hear the words "United States" again, nor is he to ever set foot in America. The long journey begins, a journey which carries him through the world and the administrations of 10 Presidents and during which time his faithful sweetheart, Anne Bissell, is untiring in her efforts to free him. But he is a man without a country, the government knows little of him.

Finally, however, Lieut. Nolan distinguishes himself in several heroisms at sea. In a fight with a pirate vessel he saves the day, and Miss Bissell, old and nearly dead, secures a pardon from Lincoln. Word of the pardon comes to Lieut. Nolan. He dies. On the end of a pier his waiting sweetheart also dies, but these deaths are gently done. After which comes the wallop. From the dead, gaunt spectre of a once promising man the figure of his youth arises, while down the cabin comes the spirit of his sweetheart in her youth. Around the shoulders of the lad she drapes the American flag and that is the finish. It signifies all anyone could want. It meant that at death Lieut. Nolan had absolved himself, that he had fought a hard fight and won.

Commercially, where "The Man Without a Country" has it over some of the others is that no conflicting nationalities are involved. There is no fighting with either the French or the British nations and the theme itself is as universal as music. Its one fault is that it starts slowly. Quite a few elisions could be made and some of the subtitles could come out. However, it is being shown in two sections, so a little padding was probably necessary.

The production looks like money in spots. The thing about it is that the theme has been rigidly adhered to, no cheap or sensational stuff is pulled nor is any effort made to drag in a detrimental scene. In the sea stuff a good storm is shown, the classic of the big cannon loose in a storm is also used, and in the sea fight between the U. S. ship and the pirate vessel good direction is apparent.

The cast is okay. Pauline Starke is probably the best name in the list and her performance of "Miss Bissell" is just as corking as that of Edward Hearn, a newcomer, who plays the "Nolan" role. Everybody else is up to scratch, but it is the tremendous theme itself and the innumerable opportunities it offers for tieups of the finest type which make it something out of the ordinary.

William Fox was born a Hungarian. He is now a naturalized American and has to his everlasting credit the distinction of having produced a dramatization of America's greatest patriotic classic. It is a production that in the picture houses, once pared and shortened, will stand up with the best of them.

MOVING PICTURE
WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

HERE are two pictures, painted by two film observers. Both sincere, but each seeing things from a different angle.

The first man said, "You are going to see some action in this 'independent versus the big fellow' argument this coming season. Already there is an active independent buying circuit in Milwaukee. One is on the way in Minneapolis. New York is seething with conferences and conversations looking towards a real independent line-up. You'll soon hear from other sections. Local exchanges are talking business with these circuit organizers—and there are national distributors ready to join hands. There's ACTION on the way."

Said the second man, "It will all blow over. You can't get anywhere counting on individual exhibitors to pull together. It's the old, old story—twenty or more bosses, as against the single controlling head of the big circuit. They won't stick together locally—what chance is there for a dozen or more groups to cooperate nationally? You only multiply the bosses, increase the number of diverging interests, and hasten the end.

"There is only one hope—an OUTSTANDING leader. Another Will Hays. But where is he?"

There are the two viewpoints. Take your choice.

MEANWHILE, the "big fellows" continue to dig in, and to extend the line of trenches. Rumor links the name of Famous to a purchase of the Hostettler circuit, the next caller to your office whispers something about Famous and Poli. And so it goes.

With this outstanding fact: The department under Harold Franklin's direction is making money, real money. The theater atmosphere at Famous is cheerful—more than cheerful. Especially when you mention the long-lamented South, and when you emphasize Florida.

Judgment seems to lean towards support of the second speaker quoted above. It is difficult to view a line-up of scattered independent groups, with the friction of individual petty differences, and in the same moment consider the careful planning, the foresight, and far-reaching resources of a Harold Franklin, a Nicholas Schenck, or a Sam Katz.

THE laugh is king. Roam the world in search of the spectacular, harness the imaginations of the greatest creators to the dramatic—and you have done something. But for downright joy in living—rub elbows with real folks who have just come from a theater after two hours of plain, ordinary, boisterous laughter.

We have dropped into the Colony Theater at least three times since the opening of "Charley's Aunt." And we are at a loss right now to know whether on our later trips we have gone to see the picture or to watch the audiences. It's a toss-up for entertainment.

Yessir, the laugh is king. You don't hear John Jones and Mrs. Jones murmuring "hokum," "ancient," "rough-stuff"—all you hear is laughter, and all you see is the joy of living.

Which reminds us. The same birdie that began whispering to us long before the arrival of "Charley's Aunt" has now returned to give us an advance tip on another one.

"Introduce Me" is the title, Douglas MacLean the star, and Associated Exhibitors the lucky distributor. Jot those items in the book.

One enthusiast whom we met said, "Better than 'Safety Last.'" We allowed him to escape with a sympathetic smile for his bounding optimism. But he has us interested. For we want to see another picture that gives us the double show for a single admission—the screen and the audience.

Believe Conspiracy Exists in America

theatre-goers do not go shopping for their films the way ours do. The happy theory of 1907 that every film that is made is bound to be a box-office attraction still prevails as the dominating factor in the European calculation. Our European friends fail to appreciate the fact that the American film in Europe is now too well known and too well liked to be displaced by a mere edict of the European interest. They possibly do not consider that the American film people might not stand aside as idle spectators while the process of displacing was going on. Appeals to the government to keep out the American films or to hamper their distribution are nothing new, but the American films seem to thrive in spite of them. The attempt to denationalize or internationalize a film is constantly failing even as between one European country and another. There is a variety of reasons, mainly psychological. In this latter respect there seems to be more of an approach between France and America and between Germany and America than between the two European countries, though geography might seem to negative such a proposition. The famous French film, "The Miracle of the Wolves," taken on for distribution by the Ufa in Germany is still on the shelves, for the German company is afraid to show this distinctly French production on the German screens. No doubt there are other cases where reciprocity is out of the question.

France—Germany—other countries.

They have good films—made, and in the making.

They plan to "invade" America with their big productions.

They won't find any alliances trying to keep them out.

What they will find is that their films are welcome to succeed through the same test that makes or destroys the future of any American film—

The test by audience approval.

What American audiences like, they will go to see.

Just as European audiences do.

To Invade Our Markets

In the mean time both French and German producers seem determined to invade our markets even if the bridge of reciprocity which flattered their imagination will never be built. They say they have the films and that they will show them to the American public if they have to lease or build their own theatres.

The French are putting the finishing touches on a great spectacular production based on Flaubert's famous story "Salammbo." "Salammbo" deals with the immortal struggle between Rome and Carthage—a theme that has been made familiar to screen patrons by "Cabiria." The dramatic elements in the story itself were none too gripping, but the scenario, as I understand, has been much improved to fit the requirements of a sensational picture. M. Louis Aubert, the noted French producer, decided to stage and film the spectacle in Vienna "for technical reasons," which must be taken to mean that the cost of production is lower in Vienna than it would have been in France, or else that better backgrounds were to be found in and around the Austrian capital. Vienna surely is not a cheap city for the average foreigner, but the cost of labor and the hire of supers, big items in a spectacular production of any magnitude, no doubt had something to do with the choice of location. The negative is said to contain 180,000 feet.

Try for American Approval

Other French productions that may try for American approval are "Le Diable dans la ville," "The Devil in Town" and a picturization of Pirandello's "Feu Mathias Pascal," a good part of which was made in Italy under the direction of M. Marcel L'Herbier, who will film one or two other Pirandello subjects in the near future. The German producers of prominence are advertising various big films most of which deal with subjects of contemporaneous fiction.

While in Berlin I visited B. F. Brinch, who has charge of the Paramount interests in Germany and the countries east of Germany. He is a thorough believer in the future conquests of the American films in Europe and makes no secret of his faith in the growing financial power of Germany. He looks upon Germany as the most promising field for the selling and renting of American films.

"To judge by the high-brow critics," Mr. Brinch said, "our films would have but little chance here. Fortunately the verdict of the box-office is quite different. The learned and sophisticated Germans in the daily press fell most unmercifully on 'The Ten Commandments,' but the people who pay their admissions liked it very well. I did not hesitate to tell the highbrows whom we entertained here that with all due respect to their great mental superiority we cared more for the views and tastes of the great multitude.

No Idea of Intensive Selling

"People in Germany, or for that matter anywhere in Continental Europe, have no conception of the scientific and intensive selling and renting of films as we know it in the States. Somehow they all seem to be in the woods and unable to find their way out. The German government makes things hard for us, but we succeed nevertheless. They let American films in and then hold them up arbitrarily before they will allow them to be exhibited. Talk about reciprocity—why it seems to me that if the States acted the same way in their treatment of German films you would hear a howl all through Germany. Germany has about 3,500 motion picture houses, while the rest of my territory consisting of Austria, Poland, Russia, Rumania, Bulgaria, Tscheko-Slovakia, Yugo-Slavia, and Hungary has about 2,500. In all of these countries the number of our pictures and other American films is constantly on the increase."

The press throughout Continental Europe had recently busied itself with supposed plans of Samuel Goldwyn to hire the famous psycho-analyst, Sigmund Freud, for some use or other in the further development of picture making. Just as I am putting this letter in the "flying mail" Dr. Freud is out with an indignant denial and a rather vehement declaration that he will refuse to see Mr. Goldwyn. Our films whether they need it or not are surely getting a lot of valuable advertising such as it would be most difficult to obtain in the American press except at the regular rate for amusements.

Mr. Bush, being on the ground, is fully conversant with up-to-the-minute conditions and mental attitudes in Europe. This assures the interest of the further articles which will come from him in future issues of Moving Picture World.

A Test Case For Press Sheets

By
TOM WALLER

SEVERAL of the prominent exhibitors who filled out Principal Pictures' questionnaire on press sheets, and whose comments were included in a series of articles on that subject published recently in Moving Picture World, again come to the fore with some more ideas on the campaign sheets for picture showmen. Their rank this time is augmented by a number of new press sheet analysts from the actual box office angle.

The latest movement in this respect is by Vitagraph. Apparently that company had carefully digested Moving Picture World's verbatim report of the frank opinions and suggestions to better these mediums for publicising the finished product by the 350 representative theatre owners throughout the company who received the original list of questions.

Decided on Test Case

Obviously determined that their press sheets shall provide bookers of their product with a maximum aid in truthfully selling their pictures to their customers' public, Vitagraph decided that for a test case it would use its campaign sheet on "The Redeeming Woman." Accordingly the Albert E. Smith organization deluged the post office with copies of a letter seeking unveneered comment and the most critical criticism on this sales medium. The company in turn was deluged with replies, the vast majority of which acclaim this particular press sheet as one of the finest Vitagraph has ever turned out and one truly of the new school.

"The Redeeming Woman" press sheet conforms in nearly every respect, as far as we can find from the replies, with the general requisites ascertained through Moving Picture World's survey. It is of newspaper size, confined to four pages exactly seven columns of which are devoted to writing matter. By the latter we mean stories, reviews, exploitation and every bit of concrete space that the machinations of a typewriter could fill. Everything is meaty, short and snappy, truthful and plausible, judging from a careful reading of the multiplicity of replies. The remaining three pages and one column are composed of advertising and poster cuts and mats which most of the exhibitor writers agree also "ring the bell."

The first press sheet to be singularized and made into a test case, since Moving Picture World published its series of constructive articles on press sheets based upon exhibitor criticisms, is one gotten out by Vitagraph on its "The Redeeming Sin." Many of the showmen whose comments helped to make up the recent series founded upon the questionnaire, submitted to 350 representative watchers of box offices throughout the country by Principal Pictures Corporation, have answered in all frankness the request for frank criticism of its effort by the Albert E. Smith organization. The vast majority of the letters received remark that in "The Redeeming Sin" press sheet Vitagraph has made a great improvement. Despite the praise there are also suggestions which some writers believe would be for its betterment, if executed. The effort made by Vitagraph to produce a model press sheet—the quick acknowledgment of that endeavor by the critics for whom all such material is produced, and the "tips" by some of them as to how to make it even better as a sales medium, are well worth reading.

Suggestions for Improvement

Some of the outstanding suggestions for improvement in this Vitagraph press sheet are: that there be more reading matter incorporated in the ads.; that the line drawings be darker; that some of the four and six-column ad cuts include some half-tone; that a big drawing be so designed as to be able to be cut up into several smaller mats; that the title be hand-lettered by an artist instead of being set up in type; that there be at least three advance stories.

Although the above suggestions are made it should be borne in mind that they comprise only a minor portion of the majority of letters which devote most of their space to glowing praise.

The one letter we were able to find which is devoted entirely to constructive criticism is from Eller Metzger of the Strand theatre, Creston, Iowa. The following five points are made:

1.—"You weaken your statements by using 'is said to be' or similar expressions.

3.—"Captions to readers should also incite interest of reader who is presumed to be absolutely neutral.

Display Ads Lack Kick

4.—"Your display ads lack the kick. They are announcements rather than business pullers. An ad. should first attract attention, (this you accomplish with your cuts which are okay) but next it should interest—then convince the reader that he must see this picture. A little more copy is necessary and it should be copy that will pull so hard that it will make folks leave a comfortable warm fireside, plod through rain or snow to get to the theatre that has this picture. Your display ads. simply say so and so is here in a great drama or—we have a vivid picture, etc. In this day when advertising has advanced to present-day standards, an announcement is insufficient. You have to go out with a message that pulls them hard or you'll have no effect as others are up in the science of pulling by means of the printed word and they will pull them all in other directions.

5.—"A good pulling reader or ad. can be completely ruined by some little reference to an unpleasant situation such as sewers, etc."

Lack of space prohibits us from publishing all of the letters. Below, however, are important excerpts from several of them.

J. Victor Wilson, Robbins-Watertown Co., Inc.: "After carefully perusing your press work sheet on 'The Redeeming Sin,' I am free to say that it is one of the most satisfying publicity sheets I have seen during my eleven years' experience in the motion picture field. I make this statement from the view of editor, press agent, and exhibitor in each of which capacities I have served.

"Your stories are concise and to the point. They all pertain to the attraction. There is no attempt of space grabbing. Your material does not insult one's intelligence. It is interestingly constructed and just long enough to get it ALL printed in newspapers. Your exploitation suggestions are helpful. The scene and advertising cuts are attractive and the units of poster, lobby, slides and insert cards look good.

"I consider it an ideal press sheet. You have not wasted paper and printer's ink. I like it."

W. M. Smith, Orpheum and Rialto Theatres, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "This press sheet is quite an improvement on your past ones. One suggestion, and the only thing they now need to meet our requirements, for instance, in some of the largest ads you use, A Great Drama of a Mysterious Apache, etc. This is all right but only appears in three ads out of nine. What we want is plenty of descriptive reading in each ad."

W. F. Dagon, Illinois State Journal: "I have looked over the press sheet you sent me on the 'Redeeming Sin' and I think it is exceptionally fine. I believe that the material used in this press sheet will sell the picture in any city in which it may be placed.

"I am glad to see better press sheets coming from the distributors and I firmly believe that it will tend to better business all along the line."

Ralph T. Kettering, Jones Linick & Schaefer Co.: "Your press sheet on 'The Redeeming Sin' is a great improvement."

E. W. Berg, D. F. & R. Enterprises, Inc.: "In reply to your letter of the 24th, requesting my opinion of the press sheet on 'The Redeeming Sin,' will say that I think it is a great improvement over the former Vitagraph press books.

"I find that in each one of the stories you have combined all of the points that really sell the picture, that is an attractive outline of the story, the star, the supporting cast, etc.

"The average picture patron cares nothing for the whims of stars, directors, and so on, they want to know something about what they are going to pay their money to see, and the more attractive you can paint the story in words, the more points of interest you can bring out in the screen play, the more tickets it will sell.

The Vitagraph press sheet which has reaped so much favorable exhibitor comment is of newspaper size, confined to four pages. Exactly seven columns are devoted to advance readers, reviews, exploitation and other material in this category. The rest of the sheet is composed of advertising and poster cuts and mats. The consensus of opinion of showmen writers, who responded to Vitagraph's request for an analysis of this campaign paper, appears to us as being that the writing matter is meaty, short and snappy, truthful and plausible and that the cuts and mats for the greater part also "ring the bell."

"Press sheets for the last five years have had so much hokum about the peculiarity, likes and dislikes of stars, directors, etc., that the public have become sick of it. They know that ninety-five per cent. of it is bunk, or think it is, which amounts to the same thing. So quit trying to sell the stars and directors and sell the pictures, the stars won't suffer if the pictures are good.

"Your ad cuts and layouts also show improvement. However, I notice that the line drawings are all very light and also the signature of Nazimova is light. In my opinion either the drawing or the signature should have been a great deal blacker, especially in the smaller layouts. I am inclosing some layouts which will illustrate what I mean. Notice the difference in the ones inclosed and your ads. See how much blacker they are than yours. You can't overlook them in any paper.

"Note the two-col. two-inch layout on 'Learning to Love.' I consider this layout the most valuable in the press book because of its size and shape. You cannot bury a two-col. ad and by adding your signature and a catch line and your extras you have an ad that is very attractive and also inexpensive.

"In papers with a dollar an inch or more theatres cannot afford to take large ads daily. And somehow I never did like a single col. ad as it is too easily lost in a paper.

"Your publicity cuts, too, are better. I notice that you have quit the practice of trying to crowd two or more scenes in one cut. On average cuts stick to illustrating one scene and do it well. Your single col. cut No. 1 is very good. Also the two-col. No. 5. The figures stand out against the white paper and are eye-catching. The three-col. cuts, while I like them better than your former ones, there is not enough contrast between the figures and the backgrounds. They should have been given the same treatment as cut No. 5. Of course, what I said doesn't go with large layouts, several scenes can be combined very attractively in three or four-col. layouts for papers that will use them.

"My same idea holds good for lobby photos. In the 11 x 14 size stick to illustrating one scene. Also have the title of the production very prominently on each photo as now-a-days nearly every theatre has 11 x 14 frames holding single photographs placed around in windows, on fountains and numerous other locations which are changed with each picture, consequently the photo should have the title on it large enough to be seen easily. The 22 x 28 photos on this picture are excellent. The titling is fine, also the 11 x 14s are good.

"All in all in 'The Redeeming Sin' you have a very good press sheet."

J. W. Sayre, Jensen & Von Herberg Theatres: "In answer to your recent letter, I have looked over your new press book carefully. On the whole, I think it admirable—well adapted to its purpose and much above the average.

"Here are two or three little things that in my opinion would improve it. The six-column ad cut on page one and the four-column ad cut on page four should include some half-tone work. In other words, they should be combined half-tone and line work instead of all line work, as they are now.

"Second, in a big lay-out like the one on your first page, figure out the drawing so that it may be cut up into several mats after the big one is used. For example, that dancing girl—if her foot had not been cut off—could have been taken out for a good two-column mat.

"Third, there should be at least one single-column half-tone mat, two or three inches deep, of the head and bust of your star, Nazimova. There is no such thing in the press book now. The nearest good one to it is about five inches deep, but that is far too big for a small ad. Something on the order of the line cut No. 12 on the back page, only in half-tone. Your reading matter is all good."

John A. Schwalm, President of the Jewel Photoplay Co., Hamilton, Ohio: "Regarding the press sheet on Nazimova in the 'Redeeming Sin' that you sent to me in your letter of the 24th inst., I beg to state that it appears to me as an excellent piece of work. The advertising mats are very fine and denote a great deal of action. The production mats are also along this line. The 1-3-6 sheets are very good. The only change I would make would be in the 24 sheets. There is not enough action. It is simply a plain announcement of the picture. The mat No. M 20 would be a fine 24 sheet for this picture.

"The press stories are interesting and should help get business for this picture. Your work on this press sheet has been very good and you have not overlooked anything."

Vic Gauntlett, of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Seattle: "Personally would think that improvement could have been made on the ad cuts by having 'The Redeeming Sin' hand-lettered by the artist, instead of setting up in type. Also on the big half page mat would have liked to see the head of the star in a half-tone and then with the splendid action drawings would have given more tone to the mat. Artists with pen and ink cannot get the details of the star in the face like a half-tone. The pen work by the artist is good and one of the best that I have seen. Glad to see you carry extracts from New York reviews on the picture. This is good and should always be used in press matter."

"I wish at this time to state that press matter and ad mats have been coming in too late at the local exchange for much use on my part. I had to make up all ad mats on 'The Beloved Brute' due to the late arrival of accessories and now with 'The Pampered Youth' going on this coming Saturday as yet no press matter or mats have arrived, when you figure we advance our advertising one week in advance, you can see the handicap that I have to encounter."

Your Box-Office

An Interview with Major H. C. S. Thomson, By the Editor

THERE are many reasons why we like to call at the F. B. O. offices. And principal among them is the fact that we are not awed by the prospect of lengthy generalizations on "bigger and better art," the whichness of the why, and all the rest of the conversational twaddle and theory that go far to make up so many film discussions.

We may be reasonably certain, whether it is Major Thomson to whom we are talking, Joe Schnitzer, Harry Berman, or Nat Rothstein, that we are going to hear "film man's talk," about film subjects, and theatre box-offices. Chief of which—the box offices.

MAJOR H. C. S. THOMSON

There are other reasons. Major H. C. S. Thomson, the soft-spoken, mild-mannered Britisher who has been holding the F. B. O. reins for the better part of a year now, is good company. Likable, interesting, with an internationally trained business-man's viewpoint on this industry, and a clear-headed, unemotional idea of the position of his organization and the direction in which it is headed.

You can't discuss current conditions in the industry with him without unconsciously absorbing much of his own confidence in F. B. O.'s plans to meet those conditions, and assurances of ability to carry out the plans.

"We are not losing our night's sleep here at F. B. O. worrying about the politics of the industry and the cross-currents of various interests," he tells you. "We are on the job of supplying the exhibitor with pictures that will entertain his patrons and MAKE MONEY for him. So our first task is to prepare for the production of a sufficient quantity of those pictures, our second to sell them to the exhibitor, our third to help him sell them to the public. And at every step to have dollars-and-cents figures in mind that allow all concerned—producer, distributor, and exhibitor—to MAKE MONEY.

"We are trying to keep our feet on the ground and our thoughts on box-offices—which means avoiding the self-hypnotic enthusiasms that lead to any of the wild extremes.

"F. B. O. has its production plans for the coming season well set, quite a number of the pictures already completed, and a definite decision to have a greater proportion of COMPLETED productions on hand before an exhibitor is even approached, than has ever been the policy among distributors. The day of title-selling is rapidly passing.

"In the first place there will be forty-eight of what can be called the program type—thoroughly entertaining pictures. Aside from the fact that a great proportion of these will be completed before selling starts, they present, in addition, known factors.

"There will be the Fred Thomson series, for example. There is a KNOWN factor—I needn't add a word of explanation to the exhibitors who have made a favorite of Fred and his wonderful horse, Silver King. Likewise, the Richard Talmadges need no description or sales talk. Then there will be a series starring 'Yakima' Canutt, America's champion cowboy—and after seeing his first screen work I am ready to yield to the usual film man's enthusiasm in prophesying 'Yakima's' future. He has a wonderfully likable screen personality and, of course, as a rider has no equal.

"These represent the outdoor and action type of picture. Balance will be given to the forty-eight productions by the series presenting Evelyn Brent, 'Lefty' Flynn and Bob Custer. These players will be continued in the type of productions in which they have gained popularity.

"F. B. O. specials—and the type of live-wire, hammer-and-tong exploitation that is put behind them—have gained their own position in the minds of exhibitors and earned their spurs at the box office. We will be on the job there again. There is 'Parisian Nights,' with Lou Tellegen, Renee Adoree, Elaine Hammerstein, and a cast of that caliber. Emory Johnson is going to give exhibitors more of the type of 'The Third Alarm.' Enough said. And we have a surprise for theatres in 'Drusilla With a Million' —but that picture will do its own shouting when we bring it on East and the critics get their first look. Another promising production will present Gene Stratton Porter's latest novel, 'Her Father's Daughter.' "

"Incidentally, a deal has just been closed by which we have the pick of over forty stories written by the world-famous Laura Jean Libby. It doesn't require any conversation to point out the box-office titles that we will be able to cull from that lot of stories.

"Nor will we fail to add strength to our short subject program. We have a long term contract with H. C. Witwer, who has established himself as a sure-fire provider of screen material ever since 'Fighting Blood.' Added to these will be the Jimmie Aubrey Comedies, the Stan Laurel Comedies, Screen Almanac, Bray Cartoons, etc.

"And first and last—what with volume of product, volume of sales, and quality of product—just, however, register this fact: F. B. O. does all its thinking with the box office right down in the foreground. Watch Film Booking Offices of America, Inc."

Exhibiting Pictures in Italy

By Charles Simone

TO make a tour of Italy, meeting the exhibitor in his den, and studying up the local film conditions of each community is indeed a rare treat; to be abie to repeat the performance is an experience doubly interesting and delightful.

Estimates as to the number of cinemas range from a minimum of 800 to a maximum of 5,000. These figures are wrong. Exclusive of village halls, school auditoriums and regular theatres where pictures are occasionally shown, the active and semi-active "cinemas" in Italy are approximately 2,100.

Picture Houses Rather Small

From the American viewpoint, Italian picture houses are rather primitive and small, the average seating capacity being about 350. Here and there a truly modern house is found, which, though not capitolesque in size, leaves nothing to be desired and convincingly proves that Italy knows how to build up-to-date cinemas.

There is no insignificant difference between house capacity and seating capacity; usually the former is two-thirds larger than the latter. A picture that strikes the public's fancy will often cause 2,000 people to crowd in a house with hardly 1,000 seats.

Shows Ninety Minutes Long

Due to the smallness of the cinemas exhibitors as a whole fight shy of programs lasting longer than ninety minutes. It is self-evident that a long bill shortens the number of shows, which vary from two to four daily according to class of theatre and location. The Italian exhibitor seems to be a good blend of native artistry and Yankee business sense.

A complete program usually consists of one lone feature; a short subject (generally a comedy) is added only when the feature booked is short or deficient. All-comedy programs (two or three different short subjects) are sometimes given, but the results are not always satisfactory. This does not imply that Italians do not care for screen humor; on the contrary they actually eat it up, especially the American brand. But comedies in large and mixed doses over-reach the mark.

One Projection Machine

Most of the cinemas are equipped with but one projection machine, and the fans, therefore, are regaled to a number of short intermissions while changing reels. The machines, except a few of old American vintage, are of Italian or German make. The operators' work is indeed remarkable considering the below-par quality of the projectors in use. The film, however, has a rough road to travel; thus the life of the average print is strenuous and short.

That old American reliable, the piano, is not popular, for even the steenth run house has its "orchestrina," a small but efficient orchestra. The music is almost always delightful and appropriate. The orchestra leaders of the first-run houses in Rome, Naples, Florence, Genoa, Turin and a few other key cities are composers of no mean ability and invariably arrange their individual music scores which seldom fail to fit the picture like the proverbial glove.

Clever Advertising Men

Italians are clever advertising and publicity men, but unfortunately they are yet to enter the film field. Some block type announcements, a few posters (usually the three-sheet size) and a small ad. in one or two of the local papers constitute the advertising that is generally given to a picture. When a superfeature is launched, the number of posters is augmented, more liberal space taken in the dailies and some photographs (stars and scenes) scattered far and wide in shop-windows.

Publicity is practically non-existent. Programs are issued by very few cinemas, and, like most programs, are hastily thrown together and poor in more ways than one. Coming attractions are sometimes announced on the screen in true, typical American fashion.

Prices Compare Favorably With Ours

Admission prices compare favorably with those prevailing in America, the average being fifteen cents a person. The price of admission differs according to class of cinema, seat, quality of picture, section of country, etc. The prices now obtained throughout the peninsula range from six cents to twenty-five cents. Better pictures get a maximum of thirty-five cents, while the best productions occasionally reach the seventy-five cent mark. The figures given include the government tax.

The Italian exhibitor, though long accustomed to rank film service and low rentals, is unwilling but not averse to "come across" to get good pictures. He is not an easy customer (does anyone know of an exhibitor anywhere who deserves the appellative "easy?") and, like his American brother, he is from Missouri.

There are some exhibitor-distributors and distributor-exhibitors, more or less powerful, whose motto seems to be: "All for us, and we for ourselves!" Their control of this or that zone is used to frighten the independent exhibitor and to persuade the weak-kneed or corrupt distributor in giving "concessions."

Difficult to Get Decent First-Runs

American distributors find it exceedingly difficult to get decent first-runs in such rich cities as Milan, Turin and Genoa because of conditions existing there. Monopolistic methods, however, are not countenanced in Italy and, with the advent of American pictures, the independent exhibitors are even now at work throwing off the yoke.

Exhibiting in Italy is undeniably profitable. This branch of the film industry is just beginning to develop, and yet it's paying handsome dividends. The field is ripe for improvement and pregnant with financial success. More commodious cinemas conducted a la Broadway are needed in certain Italian cities. American enterprise is equal to the task; is it ready? Whoever makes the first step will be sure to reap a wonderful harvest.

Coming and Going

John Golden, theatrical producer, is at the Fox plant in California.

Harry Franklin has returned to New York from a trip through the South.

Pat Dowling is expected to sail for Europe shortly.

E. A. Eschmann, First National Pictures, left aboard the Twentieth Century Limited on Wednesday of this week for the heart of the film industry, Hollywood. He spent part of Thursday in Chicago and then traveled direct to Los Angeles.

Samuel Goldwyn, independent producer who went abroad the early part of December to make an extensive survey of film conditions in England and the continent, has sailed on board the Olympic for the United States.

FILM CARNIVAL BIG SUCCESS

The second annual society motion picture carnival was held on the evening of February 20 at the Plaza Hotel, N. Y., under the auspices of the film bureau for the benefit of several charitable organizations. The affair was a gala event, many prominent folk and organizations of the industry being participants and promoters.

Milwaukee Trade Unit Tightens Sales to Non-Theatricals

Seeking to eliminate fire hazards resulting from the handling of films, the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade adopted a resolution at its last meeting pledging its members not to sell to non-theatrical agencies that are not equipped with all modern appliances for the protection of their audiences.

The resolution, according to Ben Koenig, secretary, was the result of the scrap film disaster in Boston some time ago.

The Film board at the same meeting appointed Sam Pyle to pick up and destroy all scrap film of members at least once each week.

Fists Clenched But No Need for Bell

When Alderman Staunton's proposal to increase the license fee from $300 to $500 on houses of over 1,000 seats in Syracuse was introduced, theatre owners in that city took up arms, figuratively speaking.

During a conference between an exhibitor delegation and the city's license committee Staunton and Morris Fitzer of the Empire are reported to have waxed so loquacious as to have such loquacity nearly materialize into materiality—in other words, they nearly had a fistic debate.

Kaplans Arraigned in Haverhill Court on Criminal Charges

Maurice Kaplan and Keville Kaplan, brothers, were arraigned on February 21 in district court in Haverhill, Mass., on the charge of robbery and assault upon Julius Morse of Dorchester, treasurer of the Strand Theatre in Haverhill. This is but another phase of the litigation among members of the family of Benjamin Kaplan of Winchester over the Strand.

The robbery occurred the night of February 20 when the Kaplan brothers are alleged to have grabbed a bag from one of the hands of the theatre treasurer. It contained the receipts for that day, approximately $300. They claim that their father, who is the lessee of the Strand, no longer is in possession of the house and that the funds and receipts of the theatre no longer should be held by the father, in whose employ Morse acted as treasurer.

According to the complaint, after the two Kaplans had set upon Morse in front of the theatre and had seized the bag of cash they fled. Morse chased them and they ran into the Nichols Hotel. They quickly handed the bag to the manager of the hotel; saw it placed in the safe; took a receipt for it and directed that the money be kept in the safe pending a court order as to the ownership of it. A police officer took the two Kaplans and Morse to the police station. After hearing Morse's story the brothers were released in bonds of $1,000.

At the court hearing it was agreed that the money should remain in the hotel safe until the court decides who shall take possession of it.

Developments during the past week indicate a record-breaking attendance at the Milwaukee convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in May. The mail to the M. P. T. O. A. headquarters has trebled as the theatreowners from the different states write for information. A statement issued by the convention committee this week cites this fact and continues:

"To such an extent has the independent spirit reasserted itself in exhibitor circles and among others in the motion picture industry, that the Milwaukee convention promises to eclipse everything hitherto associated with our industry in point of attendance and enthusiasm."

The transportation committee will soon issue complete rate-schedules showing the concessions granted by the Trunk Line and other railroads, and also hotel rate-guide.

The Wisconsin men are going to bedeck themselves with an "ASK ME" badge, and there will be many of these "personal information bureaus" on hand to give the delegates and visitors all information as to the city, points of interest, etc.

STANDING ROOM BILL IN MO.

A bill to prohibit the sales of standing room in theatres is now pending before the Missouri legislature. Advices from Jefferson City are that it will be passed.

$2,500,000 House for Penn. Town

Before leaving for California this week, James B. Clark, president of the Rowland and Clark Theatres, announced that plans had been consummated for the construction of a $2,500,000 motion picture theatre and office building to be erected in East Liberty, Pa. The company has acquired a tract of land one hundred eighty one feet fronting on Penn Avenue and a two hundred foot depth through to Mignonette Street, on Penn Avenue between Euclid and Beatty.

Mr. Clark plans to visit the theatres in the middle West and California to study the architecture, so that the new Pittsburgh theatre will represent the combined finish and construction of the largest theatres in the country. The big new East End Theatre will be the last word in theatre construction, combining the best examples of Egyptian and modern architecture and interior harmony in existence. The plans call for comfortable seating arrangements to accommodate between 3,500 and 4,000 people.

Mo. Legislature Now Hearing a Bill for Censor Autocracy

State censorship of Motion Pictures again threatens Missouri. Senator Q. A. Pickett, Republican, of Trenton, Mo., the home of the former Governor Arthur M. Hyde, during the past week, introduced a bill for the creation of a bi-partisan board composed of one man and woman to dictate to the state residents what pictures they shall and shall not look at. The Governor would appoint this board.

The recent victory of the reformers at Springfield paved the way for the present censorship bill now before the lawmakers. It provides the censors shall be paid $2,400 a year each and employ such an organization as they see fit.

The powers granted the censors under the bill are absolute. They shall be the dictators, and tell the people what they shall see at all times. The bill destroys the rights of contract and property with a few terse words, providing that the censors shall have authortiy "to disapprove all films that are sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral, or such as tend, in the judgment of the board, to debase or corrupt morals."

It will be noted that the films need not be corrupt or disbasing in fact, but merely in the judgment of the board. This gives the censors an absolute club to force their views on everyone.

CASHIER ROBBED OF $83

Miss Ruby Gluck, cashier of the Plaza Theatre, 5597 Etzel avenue, St. Louis, was held up by two armed bandits during a performance at the theatre on February 19 and robbed of $83. The robbers worked very quickly and had consummated the crime before other attaches or spectators were aware of what was happening in the box office. The theatre is owned by the Super Theatres Corporation.

N. Y. Censor Situation Perplexing As Governor Fills Commission Post

Job to Albany Democrat Who Decries "Fanatical Censorship"—Senator Walker Would Abolish It—Lowman Defends

WITH Governor Alfred E. Smith naming a woman Democratic leader of Albany to the New York State Motion Picture Commission, to succeed a Republican woman whose term had expired nearly two months ago, and with the Democratic leader in the Senate introducing a bill to abolish the Commission, to which the woman had been named, the censorship situation in New York state took a pecular twist during the past week. Many politicians, particularly the Republicans, looked upon the appointment of Governor Smith as indicative of a feeling on his part that the Commission would not be abolished, despite the fact that such action is a part of the proposed Democratic program, and one repeatedly urged by the Governor himself.

On top of this came Lieut-Gov. Seymour Lowman's speech in Utica, in which there was not only a vigorous defense of censorship, but also the assertion that inasmuch as the Republican party is now in control of both houses of the legislature, that censorship would continue in New York state. And then, to add to the many odd twists of the week, came the statement from the woman named by governor to the commission, that she herself does not believe in "fanatical" motion picture censorship, but that in view of the fact that the statute requiring censorship is on the books of New York state, that she will do all within her power and through her work to see to its enforcement.

The week might be said to have started off with the naming of Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert, of Albany, to the Censorship Commission. Mrs. Colbert is the wife of a physician in the capital city, and has been identified with Democratic politics for a number of years, holding a city position which she will relinquish in order to take the state job which pays $7,500 a year.

"I do not favor any fanatical notions on censorship," said Mrs. Colbert, "but I do believe in the observance of the law and its enforcement. I do not think that the movies should depict anything derogatory to the American home."

Almost at the same time that the announcement of Mrs. Colbert's appointment was made from the executive chamber, Senator James J. Walker, minority leader in the upper house of the legislature and long a foe to censorship, was introducing a bill calling for the repeal of the commission on July 1 next. The bill was framed in identically the same phraseology as the one introduced by Assemblyman Frederick Hackenburg a few days before. Following the customary procedure, both bills have been referred to committees and may or may not be reported out. It is quite possible that on account of the importance of the bills there will be a public hearing before a joint committee in order that members of the committee may be better able to judge from the sentiment expressed whether or not the censorship repeal bills should be reported out and go to a vote.

In a speech at Utica during the week, Lieut.-Gov. Seymour Lowman had this to say in regard to motion picture censorship:

"Governor Smith has always advocated the repeal of the motion picture censorship law. Last year it was suggested that if the motion picture act was repealed the laws of the state could be amended so as to make owners of theatres, where picture were shown, personally liable for the character of the pictures, with a severe penalty in the way of a fine or imprisonment as well as a provision that on conviction the house should be padlocked for the period of a year.

"The Republican party favors the retention of motion picture censorship, and as that party now controls both branches of the legislature, it is very apparent that we are going to have the benefit of this censorship for a few more years at least. We are not going to let the Democratic party open up our theatres to all kinds of indecent and nasty shows."

Advises Avoidance of False Ad Copy

"Misrepresented sensationalism in motion picture advertising does not pay," said John Flynn, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, in an address to the Association of Young Advertising Men, at their Cafe Boulevard, New York, club rooms. "You can do it once, but after that you're through."

Michigan M. P. T. O. School on Contracts Is Thriving

A campaign instituted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan to correct, as far as possible, the number of differences that arise between exhibitor and exchange over contracts, is already bearing fruit, according to a statement from Henderson M. Richey, general manager of the organization.

"The number of cases being handled by the arbitration board of the exhibitors' organization and the Film Board of Trade is becoming fewer and fewer. This is a very good indication. It shows that exhibitors are studying their dealings with the exchanges, examining contracts, etc., closely and thus are forestalling any differences that may arise in the future over neglect.

"More and more theatre owners are knowing what they are signing, are putting everything into writing, are knowing what they are buying and why. More and more care is also being exercised by exchange managers through their salesmen in completing contracts—and fulfilling those contracts to the letter.

"More and more exchanges and exhibitors are attempting to iron out their little difficulties before resorting to arbitration. And here is a rule that is well followed: If you have a difference with an exchange, show them the courtesy of taking the matter up with them first before taking it up either with the exhibitor organization or the arbitration board."

CHICAGO SUBURB REFERENDUM

Although twice defeated by referendum another effort is being made for Sunday pictures in Oak Park, the big suburb on the west side of the city. The question will be submitted to voters at the April 4 election and the number of signatures required for the submission at the next election have been secured.

Sanford Amusement Company Is Growing Rapidly in St. Louis

THE Sanford Amusement Company officials, owners of the Union Theatre, Easton and Union boulevard, and promoters of the proposed Sanford Theatre, Union boulevard at Northland avenue, St. Louis, have closed a deal for the purchase of a half interest in the Mikado Theatre, 5951 Easton avenue, owned by Scherrer Brothers. The same interests have closed a lease on the Hamilton Skydome, Easton at Hamilton avenue, and will operate it in conjunction with the Mikado. It will be known in the future as the Mikado Skydome. The deal is most important, as it is a further link in the exhibition chain in northwest St. Louis which Louis and Maurice Stahl and associates have been forging in recent months.

Maurice Stahl, with his father, is interested in the Sanford Amusement Company. He also is interested with George Skouras in the Aubert Theatre, Aubert and Easton avenue, and the Chippewa Theatre, Broadway, near Chippewa street, in South St. Louis.

Through a booking arrangement with the Ashland Theatre, Newstead and Lexington avenue, and the Newstead, Lee and Newstead avenue, the Union, Aubert, Chippewa, Ashland and Newstead are in a position to deal for films on a circuit basis. The bringing in of the Mikado and Hamilton Skydome into this arrangement gives the combination absolute domination of the situation in northwest St. Louis.

It is reported that Sanford Amusement Company is dickering for two other houses and that an important announcement can be expected within the next few weeks.

The air is filled with other rumors of consolidations. The name of William Goldman has been connected with some of these deals, but no official confirmation is at hand.

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, after months of preparation, last week launched a state-wide campaign for a liberal interpretation of the Sunday laws, including the right to keep their theatres open on Sunday.

Assemblywoman Carty's Bill No. 65, introduced in the New Jersey House of Assembly, under which the theatre owners hope to win the several points for which they are fighting, has been the objective of the most serious opposition by those favoring the rigid observance of every existing law in the state.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O., N. J., on February 19, in Camden, Charles Hildinger, chairman of the legislative committee of the state body, submitted a report favoring an early vote by the Assembly, in order that the legislators may be put on record with regard to their sentiments for or against a liberal Sunday. No date has been fixed for a public hearing on the bill. The legislative committee has, it is stated, created an unusually favorable opinion in the House as a result of its tactful handling of this problem.

Another measure of state-wide importance now pending is Senate Bill No. 241, introduced by Senator Blackwell, which confers on the Board of Tenement House Supervision of the State of New Jersey authority to license and inspect theatres, places of public assembly, etc., in boroughs, towns or cities having a population less than ten thousand.

This measure, intended to protect the public in communities having no local Tenement House Commission, has met with unanimous support from all the theatre owner representatives in the Commonwealth. Further than this, these directors have asked that the measure be broadened to include communities with population up to twenty thousand because of the benefits to be derived. The measure provides for the inspection of theatres as well as meeting places and all places of public assembly. This matter is now in the hands of the Legislative Committee and Joseph Varbalow, general counsel and legal advisor of the M. P. T. O., N. J., who addressed the Camden meeting on Thursday. Mr. Vabalow spoke in favor of both measures.

President Seider urged theatre owners to communicate with their representatives for the purpose of being recorded in favor of the bill and also to circulate petitions for signatures of their patrons. He also reported it was through the efforts of the New Jersey organization that the Tenement House Department was prevailed upon to include in the measure "all places of public assembly."

The matter of Vitagraph, Inc., resigning from membership in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., was discussed at length, and a committee consisting of Messrs. Seider, Adams and Rosenthal was designated to confer with M. J. O'Toole, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Inc., in an effort to obtain full information regarding the cause of Vitagraph's withdrawal from the organization of which Will H. Hays is the head.

Kansans Ratify Music Tax Rate

The final formalities of ratifying the agreement between Kansas exhibitors and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers were completed last week. Music tax interests were represented by Newell & Wallace, lawyers of Topeka, Kan., while Kansas exhibitors were represented by officials of the exhibitors' body, including President R. R. Biechele and Business Manager C. E. Cook.

The agreement includes a definite schedule of royalties, running from $15 to $80, depending upon the theatre, and a 20 per cent. reduction on royalties for exhibitors who are members of the organization. A similar agreement between music tax interests and Missouri exhibitors is expected to be reached soon.

Many New Companies Formed in N. Y. During Week

An unusually large number of corporations formed and entered the motion picture industry in New York state during the past week, and while in many instances the amount of capitalization was low, the records in the secretary of state's office show that there is no hesitancy in investing capital. Fifteen companies were formed during the week, the majority being located in the metropolis, although Buffalo claimed three of the newly formed motion picture theatre companies. The following gives the names of the companies and directors, as well as the amount of capitalization where specified:

Riegelwein Amusement Co., Inc., $10,000—S. and A. Riegelwein, M. Weinberger, New York City; S. and T. Productions, $10,000—J. Oppenheimer, E. Silton, T. Terris, New York; Kays Productions, Inc., $20,000—A. Oshever, Brooklyn; W. A. Guttler, T. F. Patchell, New York City; Rochel Enterprises, Inc., $500—D. M. Rosenbaum, Mary Siegel, L. I. Inkeles, New York; Stratton Amusement Corporation, $10,000—W. L. Schneider, M. Goldman, S. Petrides, New York City.

Also the Walbrook Theatrical Enterprises, $20,000—L. D. Neisel, M. G. Cooper, E. R. Solowitz, New York City; Michaels High Street Corporation, Michaels Enterprises and Michaels Genesee Street Corporation, each capitalized at $5,000, and having as directors E. M. and Dewey Michaels and F. D. White, all of Buffalo; Delbert Productions, $10,000, and Ginsburg Distributing Corporation, $25,000, with Harry Lewis, Henry Herzbrun and William Kessler, New York; Manj, Inc., with C. E. Kelley, Lake Mahopac; N. D. Beckler, J. Pincus, New York; Dwight Deere Wiman, Inc.—O. Gustafson, M. A. Pollard, F. M. Phillips, New York; Landing Amusement Corporation—M. Peyser, L. Strong, Fay Rubin, New York; Fair Enterprises—A. Schimel, H. W. Berg, R. Lipnick, New York.

"The Beloved Bozo"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is a comedy that deviates from the usual Mack Sennett slapstick angle and yet scores hugely. It convulsed the reviewers, evoking peal after peal of honest laughter. It is a dramatic burlesque on the "crook" drama so well known to Broadway these days, showing how a pair of beautiful feminine optics convince the crook of the error of his ways. The humor is gently ironical rather than open-faced, but it is not too subtle for the average audience. One of the best touches is Ralph Graves' determination to cling to his derby through all adventures, whether falling downstairs or rescuing the heroine in a hotel fire. All of the players do wonderful work. They are Alice Day, Marvin Lobach, Vernon Dent, Eugenia Gilbert and Art Rowlands. Eddie Cline directed under the supervision of J. A. Waldron. An intelligent audience will roar at this; the average slapstick devotee will thoroughly enjoy it even though he may miss some of the ironic touches. Incidentally, this has the finest titles we have seen in some time. Felix Adler and A. H. Giebler were responsible for them.—S. S.

Cleveland Under Survey by Clergy; Other Sunday Agitation Conditions

Ohio Minister Defends Films and Seeks Fair Play—Exhibitor Wins Fight in Detroit Suburb—Hot Squabbles Elsewhere

WHILE the smaller towns of Ohio are in fear of an application of the blue laws, causing movie theatres to close on Sundays, a saner viewpoint has been expressed by the Cleveland Federation of Churches.

The ministers are making a survey of the Sunday trades situation, taking in not only the theatres, but all kinds of businesses that are operating on Sunday. So far they have found that there are the following number of enterprises going on Sundays:

Movies, 120; Legitimate, vaudeville, burlesque theatres, 7; pool rooms 400; dance halls 30; bowling alleys 41; real estate firms 1,067; golf clubs 10; garages 420; soft drink-beer parlors 1,371; delicatessens and ice-cream parlors, 5,000; restaurants 2,000; ice cream manufacturers 20; amateur baseball clubs 450. All of the above violate the Sunday closing laws.

"We have no desire," said Rev. E. R. Wright, secretary of the ministers association, "to clamp down the lid simply because these laws exist. We are not wholly certain of them. Some say that everything would be all right if the theatres were closed. Yes, but what theatres? Some say that if the legitimate theatres were closed, it would be all right, but that would not be fair because a court makes no distinction.

"If we attempt to close the movies and let the pool rooms, real estate firms, ball clubs alone, then we aren't treating the movies fairly. I feel that the movie men are just as anxious as the churches to keep the Sabbath and maintain a high ideal in the nation. I don't think there is any malicious move on their part to break the Sabbath.

"I think the general moral tone of movies is better—and is improving. I hear much about children and the movies, and some of that strikes me funny. I have a son—he's of age now—and he was, you might say, movie raised. By that I mean he saw many pictures in the old days when their moral tone was not half what it is now. Sometimes I think that in our quest for more lifting things we are a little apt to stress the evil side too strongly that those who go to pictures look only for that side.

"My son saw those old pictures and they did not harm him one whit. He's a fine clean young man, and I'm proud of him. He did not see the 'bad side' of a picture but generally found something else in them which occupied his attentions. Children see what is brought strongly to their attention. I'm very much for the movies. I like them, and I think they are getting better."

Rev. Wright is often seen attending the good movies in downtown theatres, and is what is generally known as a "fan."

The Sunday Theatre Closing Movement, which has been assuming serious proportions throughout the state of Michigan during the past year, received an outstanding set-back this week when the citizens of Redford, a prosperous suburb of Detroit, voted by a majority of three to one to keep their motion picture theatre open on Sunday.

The contest, which was mainly between the Rev. H. W. Kuhlman of the Redford Methodist Church and Henry J. Steffens, councilman, town butcher and theatre owner, attracted state wide attention and although the poll was held on a cold, rainy day, it drew out the largest vote in Redford's history. Steffens, who recently built the Redford Theatre, at a cost of $150,000 faced a tremendous loss had the blue law move carried. He fought the ministers move by threatening to invoke all the old blue laws into Redford Sundays if the theatre was closed.

Westfield, N. Y. now has its Sunday motion picture battle. The town is to vote on the issue the middle of March. Westfield is the home of the famous Welch grape juice plant and it is reported that Mr. Welch, the head of the company, is in favor of closing theatres on Sunday. Just now the Zicofe corporation of Buffalo is operating the Grand Theatre in Westfield. It is expected that when the issue is put squarely up to the public at the polls the Sunday show will be favored just as has happened in every western New York town of late when it has been left for the voters to decide.

The committee on cities and towns in the state legislature at Lincoln, Neb., last week voted unanimously against the Sunday closing bill introduced by Pitney of Webster County by request, which measure would have applied to all movie houses and theatres. The bill was killed on motion of Wood of Douglas county, without discussion.

Ravenna, Ohio, furnishes the next chapter in the Ohio blue law tragedy. Harry Rosenthal and Vassey Alexander, both exhibitors of the city mentioned, were arrested recently charged with operating their theatres on Sunday. Both pleaded not guilty, were bound over to the grand jury, and furnished bond for their appearance before that body.

$50,000 CANADIAN FIRE LOSS

The Grand Theatre, Luts street, Moncton, N. B., a widely known moving picture house of the Maritime Provinces of the Dominion, was destroyed by fire which broke out from unknown cause shortly after 1:30 o'clock, Friday morning, February 20. The loss was estimated at $50,000.

Expansion Plans of United Artists

Joseph M. Schenck is credited with making the announcement in Los Angeles that he and Sid Grauman are planning the erection of a chain of theatres throughout the country; a probable alliance of United Artists and the UFA picture interests in Germany; a $3,000,000 production program for his own stars during the ensuing year; also that William S. Hart will release his pictures through United Artists but that they will be financed by Hart and subject to Schenck's approval. Regarding the theatre chain Schenck is quoted as follows:

"Sid Grauman and I will furnish part of the capital and the rest will be handled by Blair & Co. of Wall Street. We plan to erect ten or fifteen theatres, three at an early date. The first will be in New York on a site yet to be definitely determined. We are negotiating, however, for a Broadway site even further down than the Strand Theatre."

Missouri Owners Fight Standing Room Bill

The big battle for Missouri exhibitors, this session of the legislature, will be against a standing-room bill, introduced the other day. The bill, should it become a law, would prohibit any theatreowner from selling more tickets than he had seats for in his theatre.

As all first-run downtown houses are unusually crowded just before the ending of the first performance, hundreds of persons waiting for seats, which are soon vacated by persons who have seen the first performance, Kansas City exhibitors are literally up in arms against the measure. It is the consensus of opinion that the bill has little more than a fighting chance of getting by both houses.

STUDIO HEAD TO GO ABROAD

In the effort to bring about the use of tax free music in the cue sheets sent out by the producers and distributors with their pictures, the national office of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is receiving nation-wide cooperation from all National Officers, officials of state and regional organizations and theatre owners generally, President M. J. O'Toole announces.

American Writers Get $11,000,000 in 5 Years from Only 5 Producers

Above Figures Cited by Industry Representatives at Washington Hearing Into Authors' Charges of Inadequate Compensation

WITNESSES at a hearing in Washington, D. C. this week before the House Patents Committee asserted that over $11,000,000 has been paid in the last five years to writers of stories for reproduction on the screen by five of the seventy-five motion picture producing companies. This testimony was given in refutation of charges that film men have been inadequately compensating American writers for their works. The dispatch from the National Capital further reveals:

This testimony was presented in connection with a discussion of the Perkins bill, advocated by the League of Authors, Composers and Publishers, which would revamp the copyright laws of the United States, ostensibly in the interests of the authors and composers.

The effect of this bill on the motion picture industry was outlined by Gabriel L. Hess, Louis E. Swartz and Arthur W. Weil, representing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and H. C. N. Richey of Detroit, representing the Exhibitors of Michigan, Minnesota, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Texas and North Carolina.

Enactment of legislation of this character, it was said, might lead to an inability on the part of publishers to sell the newspapers they print without first entering into a hard and fast contract with all contributors of matter that might be copyrighted, to relieve them from possible violation of the law.

The Perkins bill would permit the publishers to print their newspapers with the usual freedom, but there is nothing that authorizes them to sell the papers free of copyright liability.

Mr. Deil declared that the sponsors of the bill among the authors and composers really owe their enthusiasm in its behalf to a vast amount of misinformation disseminated in its favor.

"The newspapers would be placed in an extraordinary position under the operation of this bill," said Mr. Weil. "There is copyright in advertising and the newspapers have no opportunity to investigate whether that advertising is an infringement on prior copyrights. If incautious enough to print advertising matter containing cuts, without first investigating, they might find themselves subject to penalties of from $250 to $500 for each offense."

Stork Visits Home of the Sewells

The afternoon of February 19 proved one of the most eventful afternoons in the life of Charles S. Sewell, editor of the reviews department of Moving Picture World. He reached his home in Passaic, N. J., to hear his wife exclaim, "Here comes Daddy," and then —he got the first glimpse of his son, a husky, blue-eyed morsel of exactly six and one-half pounds.

The new addition to the Sewell family made himself first heard on the day which also marked the second wedding anniversary of his parents. Mrs. Sewell and the baby are exceptionally well and Charlie is mighty busy receiving wishes for the best of luck.

KANSAS CITY FILM ELECTION

Milwaukee Booming 10 New Houses Costing $2,500,000

MILWAUKEE'S theatre building boom added three new projects during the past week. The latest ventures announced are for a total of $825,000 and bring the number of houses planned since Jan. 1, 1925, up to ten.

The total expenditure, if the plans for the ten theatres are consummated, will be approximately $2,500,000, which surpasses by far any other two months in the history of the city.

Heading the list of the latest projects is a $500,000 theatre, office, store and community recreation building for Upper Third street. The exact location has not yet been revealed, but it will be somewhere between Locust and Lloyd streets in one of the busiest uptown sections of the city.

Plans prepared by A. W. Hoffman, architectural engineer, call for a theatre with a seating capacity of at least 1,350 seats and possibly as many as 1,800. The building is to be financed and erected by the Upper Third Street Realty Corporation, composed of leading business men of the neighborhood. Development of the project is in the hands of the Reuther Realty and Building Service, Inc.

The interior of the theatre will be in the Spanish style, while the meeting hall will be in the massive English Gothic. The house will be equipped for vaudeville as well as motion pictures. Plans call for the installation of an expensive organ. It is hoped to begin building this spring.

The second project of the week is a $200,000 house announced for Thirty-fifth street and Fond du Lac avenue. The Keystone Investment Co., which recently erected the Hollywood theatre, is behind this venture and, although plans are still in the preliminary state, an option has been obtained on a site and an architect is working on the project. Construction work is to begin in the spring.

The last of the new houses is a $125,000 structure for the extreme south end of the city. The location is Delaware and Rusk avenues.

The Badger Building service is sponsoring this structure. According to Peacock and Frank, architects, the plans call for a two-story building, 70 by 125 feet, containing four stores and five apartments in addition to a theatre of 750 seats. Work on this building is to begin within six weeks.

While plans for these three ventures were being made public, veteran showmen were sitting back wondering how Milwaukee would support so many new amusement centers. Some of the old timers have taken the attitude that much of the so-called building boom is merely talk and that there will be many a slip before so many projects are consummated. Nevertheless, the architects and those back of the new buildings say they mean business and that this will be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the doubters very shortly.

State Rights Sales

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, this week announced the following sales made by his Company, in the domestic market: Third Series Broadway Comedies, Third Series Mirthquake Comedies. These pictures went to Freedom Film Company of Rochester. They will be distributed by Freedom in Upper New York. To the First Graphic Exchanges of Buffalo went seven two-reel Blazed Trail Productions.

An Enterprise-Rayart deal gives to the Enterprise the distribution rights on Rayart pictures as follows: For North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee and Alabama, on six Reed Howe releases, six Billy Sullivans and six Jack Perrins; for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, on six George Larkins and six Jack Perrins; for Western Missouri and Kansas, on six George Larkins and six Billy Sullivans; for Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, six George Larkins, six Jack Perrins, six Reed Howes and six Billy Sullivans; for Iowa and Nebraska, six Reed Howes, six Billy Sullivans, six Jack Perrins and six George Larkin releases. Rayart also reports the sale of six Reed Howes pictures to Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Texas; for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, the sale of twelve Butterfly comedies for Canada to the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., the sale of "Battling Brewster" and the George Larkin series for Great Britain to Richmont Pictures, Inc.; and Cullen Landis special, "Easy Money," and the Butterfly comedies, for the New England States to Independent Films.

Lively Tilt Seems Imminent Between Badger Corp. and Leading Exchanges

All Avoid Quotation But Source of Conflict Reveals Itself to Be Wisconsin Unit's Demand for Block Booking Amendment

By JACK M. STENBUCK

A LIVELY fight with the leading exchanges, such as Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn and First National, appears to be in prospect for the Badger Theatres Corporation, newly formed booking combine in the Wisconsin territory,, over the corporations's proposal to buy only after the screening of releases for its screening committee.

Although no definite statement is forthcoming from any of the exchanges, it is reported in reliable quarters that none of the leading distributors will consent to depart in any way from the established custom of selling blocks of pictures in advance.

At Badger headquarters it was said that some deals have already been closed, but it is believed that these were simply to clean up the tail ends of blocks of pictures already released and the real battle probably will not develop until the leading exchanges start selling their new blocks for the Fall season.

It is known that for some time exhibitors who are not among the fifty holding membership in the Badger have been speculating on the question of whether Jack Grauman, of Celebrated Players, is interested in the new organization and, if so, to what extent. Until this point is cleared up, it is understood that the principal distributors at least will look with suspicion upon the new combine.

Under the Badger plan, its screening committee of five members will view pictures as they come in and rate them according to their box office values. These ratings are to be placed in circular form and distributed to members to guide them in ordering films through Max Wiesner, general manager.

Such a plan, it is pointed out, would work to the disadvantage of the important exchanges which in the past have sold their blocks in advance. Any system of selective buying, such as it is contended the screening and rating will encourage, will naturally reduce the big three representation and increase the representation of independent exchanges in the same proportion, it is argued.

Those sponsoring the Badger deny without qualification that Grauman is in any way connected with it, but despite these denials there is talk, which may or may not be true, that the head of the Celebrated Players office in Milwaukee is really the power behind the scenes.

Those circulating the reports meet the denials with the following questions:

Why, if Grauman is in no way interested in the organization, did he repeatedly attend executive sessions of the board of directors, a privilege denied even to individual members?

What significance is there, if any, to the selection of Max Wiesner, Grauman's right hand man, as general manager of the Badger?

What importance should be attached to the fact that J. H. Silliman, president of the new organization, is associated with Grauman in conducting the Juneau Theatre?

To these questions, leaders in the new organization give the following replies:

Grauman has been in both ends of the business for years. He knows the viewpoint of both the exhibitor and exchange man. He is popular among exhibitors. His experience naturally fits him to give invaluable advice to an organization of this kind. What is more, although not a member of the Badger in his own name, he is nevertheless an exhibitor in addition to being an exchange man. Why then, should his valuable advice be spurned?

Regarding Wiesner, is it not a wise move to place at the head of a buying combine someone who knows the exchange end of the business, they ask.

It is true, the Badger leaders admit, that Wiesner was Grauman's right hand man, but in view of the fact that the job is naturally one for a man with exchange experience, why shouldn't Grauman's man be eligible to the same extent as a member of some other exchange.

Wiesner's worth, they say, cannot be questioned. With his ability, it would be cutting off a nose to spite the face to ignore a chance to obtain his services.

It is likewise true, the Badgers assert, that Grauman is Silliman's partner in the Juneau, but just because that is a fact it does not necessarily follow that Grauman exerts any influence over the affairs of the buying combine. It merely is another explanation, they say, of Grauman's attendance at some of the meetings.

The headquarters of the Badger began to to Mr. Wiesner, the organization is making satisfactory progress. Of course, he function officially on Feb. 16 and, according pointed out, booking of pictures will be slow at the start because many houses in the corporation at present are loaded down with product previously contracted for.

Wiesner, like others identified with him in the enterprise, expresses surprise at talk of trouble with any of the exchanges, taking the position that the Badger does not intend to revolutionize buying systems now in vogue, but despite these assertions it can be said

Rules on Sneeze

The Louisville city council, at the request of moving picture exhibitors, recently enacted an ordinance carrying a fine of $20 to $100 for spreading sneezing or itching powder, or throwing "stink bombs" in theatres, dance halls or public buildings, and placing a license fee of $200 on any concern retailing any such bombs or powders. A fine of $10 to $100 is provided for any person selling such lines without a license. The exhibitors in suburban theatres have had a good deal of annoyance from playful youngsters using powders and bombs.

News Weeklies Squabble Over Nome Rescue

There is a news weekly war on over the presentation of scenes showing the rescue of Nome, Alaska, from the diphtheria epidemic and the arrival of the dog teams bringing the much-needed anti-toxin.

In the February 21st issues of the trade papers there appeared an advertisement of Fox News which told of being first with views of the rescue of the stricken city. This has been followed by a letter from Pathe denying that the Fox scenes were really views taken at the actual moment of the rescue. In connection with the denial no statement has been forthcoming from Fox, but it is understood that this company's attitude is that the weekly itself makes it clear that the views merely show the authentic drivers and dogs, and the impression is not conveyed that they are actual scenes of the rescue. The view is that the advertisement in question was unfortunately worded.

Meanwhile Kinograms, in its current issue has slipped in on the argument and apparently beaten the field on views of the actual rescue. Issue No. 5059 contains views of Sepalla and his dogs as they arrived in Nome. Another feature of this Kinograms issue is the covering of Babe Ruth's training at Hot Springs, first of the baseball atmosphere of the season.

Warners and 1st National Big Stock Flotations

Warner Brothers this week were so successful in the flotation of 170,000 shares of stock that the books had to be closed because of over-subscription, the brokers report. The total net assets of the Warners' corporation is given at $3,787,349, of which close to two millions consists of working assets.

First National is also made known to have arranged for the issuance of eight per cent. participating stock to the amount of $2,500,000. The proceeds of this issue will be devoted mainly to additional working capital, it is reported.

German Competition Impending Factor in England, Says Goldwyn

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, as gust of honor at a banquet of the entire London press, made the startling declaration that German competition loomed as the impending big factor in the life of Britain's film industry.

"I have just returned from the important film centers of the continent and made a personal survey of conditions in all parts of Europe," said Mr. Goldwyn, "and candor compels me to speak fearlessly to you men who animate and inspire the achievements of your nation.

"It is to be regretted that at this crucial time, when the world is being rejuvenated, and international business relations are taking on a more optimistic hue, that England's motion picture production should be at a complete standstill.

"The genius of Great Britain must at this time be fired with the commercial as well as artistic interests of the situation that confronts them. To have the British film industry completely engulfed by this competition would indeed be a regrettable calamity.

"A sincere desire for a firmer bond of friendship between the two English speaking nations compels me to speak frankly and truthfully. While Great Britain is rebuilding its motion picture structure, while it is assembling its forces and finances to take advantage of the international situation of increased commerce and amity, American made pictures, because of their craftsmanship and sympathetic leanings should prove a real salvation for Great Britain in this time of stress.

"From the standpoint of the public and from the viewpoint of the profession, this linking of interests should prove fruitful to your producers, give you ample time to reconstruct your industry and supply your people with entertainment of a high order."

without reservation that opposition will be encountered.

As things line up at present, there seems to be little doubt that the big three will take a united stand in opposition to the screening committee. Even if something occurs to alter the situation as far as two of them are concerned, which appears highly doubtful, it is safe to say that the third is preparing to fight to the last ditch, alone, if necessary. It is said on reliable authority that this distributor will not screen a single picture.

As is to be expected, the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade, the exchange man's organization, is taking absolutely no interest in the matter, it being naturally something for each exchange to cope with individually.

With the Badger proceeding slowly, the expected controversy is being delayed until with a formal request for a screening. When such time as the big exchanges are presented that is done, according to those in touch with the situation, the fireworks will begin to fly and there is no predicting what may result. Exhibitors and exchange men alike, who are looking upon the matter from a disinterested standpoint, are forecasting a fight to the finish with at least one of the three exchanges and i fthat comes to pass, it is pointed out that the other two can hardly afford to sit on the sidelines.

In the meantime, as an official of one of the distributing companies expressed it some time ago, the exchanges are not officially aware that a Badger exists and are continuing to book exhibitors as individuals wherever possible.

A dispatch to the Film Daily says that another organization is forming but gives no details.

Patrons Endangered!

Monoxide gas from the gas engine which supplies the electric current for the Star Theatre at Crofton, Neb., filled the theatre recently when the exhaust of the engine became clogged.

Before the difficulty could be discovered, many of the patrons were overcome and some had to be carried from the hall.

Bill Before Wisconsin Salons Would Also Censor Film Ads

STATEWIDE censorship of motion pictures, posters and other film advertising, is provided for in a bill just introduced in the assembly of the Wisconsin legislature.

It appeared for a time that theatre men would escape attempts at reform legislation at this session, but just before expiration of the time set for the introduction of bills, Assemblyman Paul D. Raihle, of Cadott, announced the censorship measure.

Because the bill was introduced by title only, all of its details are not available. Raihle declared, however, that it will be patterned after legislation now effective in some states and that severe penalties will be provided for. The number of persons comprising the censorship board under his bill has not been definitely decided upon, he said.

Aside from the censorship bill, the only measure introduced at this session which affects the theatre man is a bill sponsored by Henry Staab, who in addition to being executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, is a member of the legislature. Staab's measure would remove the $25 license fee required of all theatres which permit performances by animals.

GLORIA SWANSON RECOVERING

Cable messages received from Paris, France, just as this issue of Moving Picture World is going to press, reveal that Gloria Swanson is so much improved that she will probably be able to leave her room in a hospital in the French capital within the next ten days. Miss Swanson, it will be recalled, was suddenly stricken with an illness which necessitated an immediate operation just before the liner upon which she had booked passage to the United States sailed last week.

NEW DISTRIBUTING UNIT FORMED IN KANSAS CITY

A new distributing company was organized in Kansas City last week, the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc. The organization will be headed by E. C. Rhoden, former branch manager of First National. The formation of the new company is the outcome of the A. H. Blank Film Enterprise, in which Rhoden purchased the interest of Blank. The organization's officers are: E. C. Rhoden, president; L. M. Miller, owner and manager of the Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kas., vice-president, and Stanley Chambers, managing director of the Miller and Palace Theatres, Wichita, treasurer. Thomas O. Byrle, First National city salesman in Kansas City, has succeeded Mr. Rhoden as branch manager. Officials of both the First National and A. H. Blank offices gave a dinner at the Hotel Murhlebach in honor of Mr. Rhoden.

N. Y. Bill Would Admit Kids Unaccompanied Between 12-16

A BILL was introduced in the New York State Legislature on February 25 by Assemblyman Charles A. Freiberg, of Buffalo, allowing unaccompanied children between the ages of 12 and 16 years to be admitted to motion picture theatres between the hours of two and six o'clock on Saturday afternoon, on legal holidays (Sunday excepted). Under certain provisions the bill provides that the governing body of any city in New York State may grant a license to a motion picture theatre to admit such unaccompanied children when there is exhibited educational, travel, industrial pictures or comedies.

The bill further provides for a ten-dollar license fee and that the theatre must supply a matron to be in charge of the children who must be segregated in a section of the house that is on the street level and well lighted.

The bill is an entering wedge and according to Assemblyman Freiberg has the support of the theatre owners of Buffalo and vicinity.

It would be up to the New York State Censorship Commission to determine if pictures such as "America" would come under the classification of "educational" and thereby allow theatres to admit the children unaccompanied during the hours specified and under conditions defined.

Al Bothner Booking Amateurs For Smalley's N. Y. Theatres

Bill Smalley, as genial as the day is long and as sharp as they make them, at the head of fourteen or fifteen picture theatres in New York State, doesn't believe in letting the grass grow under his feet when it comes to gaining ideas that will work out to advantage over his entire circuit. Mr. Smalley is one of the up-and-coming type. For instance, he has just booked "The Thief of Bagdad" for his chain, and instead of stopping there he has called a meeting of all his house managers for Cooperstown, where each will not only be expected to furnish an idea or two in the way of exploitation. But Mr. Smalley doesn't intend to stop there. He is organizing an orchestra and will send it along with the picture, three days in Oneonta, three days in Sidney, and so on, right over his entire circuit, playing at regular prices in every instance.

Mr. Smalley owns four or five houses in the Mohawk Valley, where he is working out another little scheme to catch the nimble dollars. A short time ago he secured Al Bothner, an old-time showman, who has both owned and managed picture theatres in Troy and elsewhere, as the manager of a house which he took over in Mohawk. Banking on Mr. Bothner's experience in booking amateur nights, he now has him looking over the valley for talent which is used each Tuesday night at the Smalley Theatre in St. Johnsville, every Thursday night in Fort Plain and every Friday night in Mohawk. In his theatre in Hamilton Mr. Smalley has installed as manager William O'Connell, who used to be with R. V. Erk in Ilion and who knows every phase of the business. Mr. Smalley was along Film Row in Albany during the week.

Walter Hays, big chief of the New York State M. P. T. O. and owner of three theatres in Troy and one in Albany, dropped into town one day during the past week on his way back from a business conference in New York City. Mr. Hays said that he was unable to announce just when he would reopen the American, the latest acquisition, in Troy, and was also rather indefinite as to whether or not the house would be a 10 or 15 cent one.

While "Pop" Linton will look after the management of the theatre which he is erecting in Utica, and which will be opened within a few days, the veteran showman is planning to leave the exploitation angle to his son, who has already shown considerable ability along that line. Workmen are hammering away day and night on the new house, with the hope that it will be in shape to open early in March.

There isn't an exhibitor in this section more fond of hearing his audience applaud a picture than John Cooney of the Union Square Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass. So when Mr. Cooney heard the applause given "Pampered Youth" he couldn't resist the temptation of writing a letter which was received along Film Row during the past week.

W. W. Farley, head of Farash Theatres, Inc., and likewise president of a chain of houses in Yonkers, may have his worries over pictures these days but not so his daughter. She left last week for Palm Beach to remain for a month or so.

Lew Fisher, thinking himself safe from film salesmen, dropped off the train in Chatham the other day, where he has a theatre, and was nabbed on the spot, buying a serial for his entire circuit. According to Mr. Fisher, business is on the pick-up along the northeastern border of the state and there is every indication that the mines in Port Henry will shortly reopen, a fact that will mean hundreds of dollars to him.

Sam Hochstim of the Star in Hudson has been putting up some mighty clever lighting effects, with the result that the theatre stands out as never before. The theatre is ordinarily a 25-cent one, but for fictures such as "North of Thirty-six," recently played, and others of like calibre, Mr. Hochstim boosts the price to 35 cents and gets it.

After seeing the crowds shoving and pushing every night for a week at the Leland Theatre in Albany, with "Abraham Lincoln" as the attraction, Oscar Perrin decided to run the picture for a second week at the Clinton Square Theatre. Apparently there are hundreds who couldn't see it at the Leland, for now they are threatening to batter down the doors of the Clinton Square.

Louis Buettner of Cohoes is acting as secretary of the Albany Zone Committee until such time as a successor can be named to Benjamin Apple of Troy, who resigned. Mr. Buettner was in town two or three times

His Greatest Thrill (What Was Yours?)

The Kleptomaniac Returned the Money

Editor, Exhibitor News and Views:

I've had them all, from the fire in the booth to a sell-out on Good Friday, but the one that stands out most vividly in my memory sounds so like a scenario that I hesitate to unfold it to the supercilious fraternity of brother exhibitors.

At any rate, a man came hustling into my office one night with the complaint that he had lost a pocket bill fold with $194 in the theatre. He was certain he had lost it since entering the theatre, and knew exactly where he had been seated. I, of course, made a thorough search, but it was an unsuccessful one and he departed a sad individual.

The next morning a very dignified lady entered my office, asked if she could see me privately and then came the shock. She handed me the bill fold with the $194 intact, and explained that she had been a kleptomaniac for a number of years and that any time we showed a crook picture she felt an uncontrollable impulse to attend and invariably picked someone's pocket during the performance. In every instance prior to this one she had been able to return the stolen articles or money by cards or other means of identification in the stolen pocketbook. This particular one had nothing but the cash inclosed, so she was forced to come to me to find the owner.

She showed no particular concern in the matter other than to express regret that she had possibly given the loser a bad night worrying about his loss. I might add that she asked my assurance that I would not divulge her story to the police, and promised me that she would not be offended if, in the event of a further loss at the theatre, I called upon her for an explanation as to her knowledge of same.

The thrill came in my sending for the chap who lost the money and telling him the finder had returned it. He undoubtedly has said many a prayer for the "honest" lady who would not even give her name so that he could thank her in person.

Cordially yours,
BOB WAGNER,
Resident Manager, Gateway Theatre Corporation, Little Falls, N. Y.

Frederick N. Francis of Southington has entered an appeal to the judgment of $750 against him, given in Supreme Court in Hartford, in favor of Derr O. Coleman, also of Southington. In a suit for $2,000 Coleman alleged that Francis broke into the Coleman Theatre in Southington on January 14, 1924, took possession of it and kept Coleman out of possession.

last week, spending a good part of the time at the committee headquarters and explaining things by saying that he was trying to "catch up" matters.

When Dennis Regan of Greenwich left town one day last week he wore a broad smile of satisfaction. Mr. Regan had been up before the arbitration board and had won his case, so why shouldn't he smile?

On account of Monday being a holiday, the Albany Film Board, which ordinarily meets on Monday, went over to the day following. The arbitration board meets every other Monday, and there will be a proposition placed before the next meeting of the Albany Zone Committee asking for an expression from exhibitors as to the length they will serve on the board. It is hoped that they will consent to serve for four meetings instead of two, as at present.

Jack Goodwin has been named manager of Smalley's Catskill house. Mr. Goodwin is not new to the business by any means, having been at the head of a musical comedy company as well as having had considerable experience with pictures. The house seats about 1,000 and is now sporting a new marquee, certain electrical equipment and has taken on an up-to-the-minute appearance.

Film Row said "how-do-you-do" last week to Mrs. Francis McGraw, owner of the Gem in Little Falls, and then also a "pleased-to-meet-you" to the daughter who was brought along.

Exhibitors throughout this section of the state will regret to learn that Morris Goldstein, better known as "Goldie," a salesman for F. B. O. out of here, collapsed at the exchange last week and was taken to New York City where he will take a complete rest. Mr. Goldstein was operated on some little time ago and for a time appeared to be on the road to a complete recovery.

George M. Loomis of Frankfort is planning to erect a new theatre in that village, according to a report that has sifted through to Film Row. Mr. Loomis already had one house in Frankfort and can be depended upon to do a good business week in and week out.

If A. W. Goodman of the Orpheum in Utica doesn't hit Film Row a bit oftener he stands a good chance of being forced to introduce himself all along the line. Mr. Goodman was in town last week, the first time in two or three years, and with all the changes that have occurred along Film Row he was almost a stranger. He booked up a number of pictures and left for home without saying anything about when he intended to come back.

Talk about things breaking right! The other night in Albany every hotel was packed and Phil Markel, with several houses in Boston and one in Adams, Mass., was unable to get a room. Just then J. H. MacIntyre, local manager for Famous Players, stepped forward and invited Mr. Markel to spend the night at his home. The next morning Mr. Markel remarked that he had booked up the second block of Famous Players.

Jake Golden, manager of Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany, is racking his brains these days thinking up new stunts that will attract patronage to the house where double features, changing every other day, prevail. This week Mr. Golden is using a masked woman singer for three days, newspapers carrying the announcement that she is prominent socially and does not care to be recognized. Mr. Golden has touched up the lobby with flowers, wreaths and plenty of banners and frames.

Junior Movies, which have been most successful in both Albany and Troy this winter, attracting thousands of boys and girls on Saturday mornings to the Mark Strand and the Troy theatres, will come to a close the first week in April. At the Mark Strand the broadcasting of the orchestra selections two nights a week will continue for an indefinite period.

Golly, what a winter it has been for Charlie Sample, an exhibitor in Schaghticoke. He admits it. The little village has been almost snowbound for a week at a time, and when a blizzard comes on the only two days you are open, it's enough to make you think of the advantages of owning a theatre in Florida or California.

As chipper as could be, Robert Wagner of the Gateway in Little Falls, serving on the arbitration board, was in town during the week. "How's business?" someone asked Bob. "Houseful every night, and what more can one wish?" replied Mr. Wagner. And that's that.

Fred Shelley, a well known exhibitor in Amsterdam, arrived in town on a truck the other day. He explained matters by saying that while he had the price of carfare he thought the ride would do him some good, although outwardly at least Mr. Shelley appears to be as healthy as they make them.

When C. H. Moyer, owner of the Liberty Theatre in Herkimer, went home the other night he was so doggone tired that he staggered. Mr. Moyer was obliged to turn away from 300 to 500 persons unable to gain admission to a mixed program of vaudeville and pictures. Mr. Moyer is now using vaudeville for the first three days in the week, charging 35 and 50 cents, and then using straight pictures at 20 and 30 cents for the remainder of the week. In the way of vaudeville he gives four acts, a feature picture and a news reel, and has no competition. He attempted to take tickets and handle the crowd the other night and when he was through he remarked that he was as weak as the proverbial dish rag.

Work has started on the new theatre to be erected by Young and Whitney in Ilion. The theatre will be a part of a block housing five or six stores with a bowling alley in the basement.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Architects are finishing the plans for the new $300,000 picture theatre to be built in Kenmore, N. Y., and work will begin early in March. The rumor of a new theatre became a reality when the Kenmore Theatre Company bought property with a frontage of 241 feet on Delaware avenue from Henry M. Naylon and Ernest W. McIntyre. Henry Ebling is president of the company and Clare Rickert is secretary. According to the officers, the new theatre will be a community venture and will seat 2,000. There will be sixteen stores on the street frontage of the building.

The Lafayette Square, Buffalo, celebrated its third anniversary the past week. The house has been a success since it was opened, much of the credit for which must be given to Fred M. Shafer, manager, and Bill Van Dyne, the world's champion assistant manager.

Big Year for Fitzpatrick and McElroy

"FITZ and Mack" have purchased a new theatre. Being known as two of the real progressive theatre men of the country, their movements are always watched with interest by the film world. These partners have built an enviable reputation, and one which results show is well deserved, of knowing when and where to buy, and always making a success of any theatres which they operate. They can be relied upon to pick a territory which is growing and in which the Fitzpatrick & McElroy Company can expand with the growth of the town.

While the purchase last week of the New Family Theatre at Adrian, Mich., marks the entry of Fitzpatrick & McElroy into this particular part of the state, more than half their larger holdings are in the State of Michigan, with two or three theatres each in the towns of Alpena, Benton Harbor, St. Joseph, Cadillac, Ludington, Manistee, Traverse City, Three Rivers and Big Rapids. In addition, they have almost an equal number of picture houses in Illinois and Wisconsin.

The purchase of the New Family Theatre at Adrian, which includes the property and everything subject to the ground lease, is effective at once. Work of remodeling will be started at once to make the house modern in every way and bring it up to the standard of the F. & M. theatres.

Mr. McElroy, when asked if he had placed any limit to the size of the circuit, responded: "There is no limit. As long as the people show us that they approve of our policy, and show us by the capacity business we are doing everywhere that they are convinced we are giving them one of the squarest deals worked out in the picture business, we will continue to add to our interests."

The announcement of the buying of the New Family Theatre is the forerunner of numerous additions which will be made during the coming year. All financial arrangements have been made for a number of enterprises which will even surpass anything which the firm has done in the past. No definite confirmation could be procured, but the rumor is that this company, which is already the possessor of one of the largest circuits, will practically double its holdings during 1925.

Walter Crowley and Donald McElroy, bookers for the circuit, are now in Detroit lining up film productions for the new house.

Wisconsin Anniversary Due; Weisfeldt Plans Big Bills

March is going to be a big month at Saxe's Wisconsin Theatre in Milwaukee. The $2,000,000 show palace will be a year old on March 28 and to mark the occasion Eddie Weisfeldt, director of production, is making preparations to celebrate the entire month by presenting highly elaborate programs.

For the first week in March he has obtained "The Thief of Bagdad." This will be followed by George Beban in person in connection with the presentation of the film, "The Greatest Love of All." The third week will feature an elaborate style show, while the closing week will be Anniversary Week.

Plans for Anniversary Week are still indefinite, but Weisfeldt expects to include in his program a film showing the various departments of the theatre at work. George Pendergast, Saxe press agent, is preparing for an intensive advertising campaign in connection with the anniversary.

Stan Brown on March 27 celebrates his first anniversary as manager of Saxe's Strand in Milwaukee.

An Arctic Nu Air ventilating system is being installed in the Idlehour Theatre, Milwaukee, it has been announced by Max Krofta, owner.

Sam Pylet, managing director of the Hollywood Theatre in Milwaukee, is using the radio to advertise his house and his orchestra. Each week his musicians go on the air from Station WSOE. Pylet announces that he has just signed with Paramount for the second output of Famous Forty.

Small-town exhibitors in Wisconsin, still groggy as a result of the blows dealt them through the radio, are complaining of a new form of competition. It's the cross-word puzzle craze. Just as the radio made itself felt in the smaller communities more than in the larger cities, so also is the cross-word puzzle working its greatest havoc with theatre attendance in the small towns, according to reports brought to Milwaukee by film salesmen.

Walter Schoen has resigned as manager of the Liberty Theatre, outskirt Milwaukee house. Temporarily, Henry Wehr, owner of the theatre, will assume the managerial duties.

Kansas

What looked like a "lemon" for Archie Josephson, Kansas City exhibitor, has turned out to be a good investment. Several years ago Mr. Josephson gave an $85,000 bonus for a 99-year lease of the Victory Theatre, old-time downtown house which is being razed to make way for a business building. Then arose a contest over federal income taxes on the lease held by Mr. Josephson. A court decision went against Mr. Josephson. The other day the United States Supreme Court reversed the lower court decision and freed the leasehold of the federal tax. Now Mr. Josephson has subleased the site for $16,000 annually and will receive a $25,000 bonus in connection.

The South Troost Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, owned and managed by Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Gleason, had a treat in store for its patrons Sunday. A new $10,000 organ was installed.

Having "battled the game" for many years, M. B. Shanberg of the Midland Circuit of Theatres in Kansas is enjoying a well-earned vacation in California. He will return next month.

Radio proved highly profitable to Jack Stebbins, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Monday and Tuesday nights. Over Station WHB, talks on the picture, "The Lighthouse by the Sea," were given by the Liberty and proved a good boom for business.

The following changes in management, openings and closings of theatres in the Kansas City territory have been announced: Construction on the $35,000 Penn Theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., has been postponed indefinitely, according to E. H. Peskay, who is building the theatre; the Lyric Theatre, Holden, Mo., has been purchased by J. W. Davis, formerly of Platt City, Mo., while Jack Moore, formerly manager of the Electric Theatre of St. Joseph, Mo., has taken over the Olive Theatre in that city; William Reinke has taken complete charge of the Hostettler interests in St. Joseph, including the Orpheum, Colonial and Crystal theatres, headquarters of the concern having been moved from Omaha to St. Joseph; Mrs. Helen Wurtenberger, owner of the Empress Theatre, St. Joseph, has purchased a lot adjoining her theatre for a contemplated enlargement.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market last week were: F. W. Meade, Meade Theatre, Kingman, Kans.; E. P. Dudgeon, Orrick, Mo.; H. Harwick, Lyceum, Clovis, N. M.; C. E. Cincinnati

A new theatre combination has been organized by J. K. Papulias and A. G. Constant, to be known as the Tri-State Amusement Company, with headquarters at Steubenville, Ohio. The Olympic and Strand theatres, Steubenville; the American and Strand, East Liverpool; two houses at Toronto, Ohio, and all theatres at New Cumberland, Wierton and Wellsburg, W. Va., are included, with others to join later.

Besides being Washington's Birthday, Sunday, February 22, also was a memorable day in Youngstown, Ohio, because it marked the tenth anniversary of the opening of the Hippodrome Theatre. This event was heralded in a big story in the Youngstown Vindicator, with photos of C. W. Miller, general manager of the Hippodrome and Arcade, and Assistant Managers B. J. Henton and H. M. Miller. The Hippodrome is purely a local institution, having been financed directly by the builders and promoted largely by Youngstown capital. Straight vaudeville was the policy from 1915 to 1922, after which four months of stock was offered. The present policy of pictures and vaudeville is, however, the most profitable one yet employed. The history of the theatre, as told by the newspaper, constituted a special section of several pages, with many advertisements, and attracted much attention.

The newsboys and street salesmen handling the Dayton Daily News, Dayton, Ohio, were recently treated to a Saturday morning matinee at Loew's Theatre to witness a special showing of "The Rag Man."

A. H. Abrams, who owns and operates the Odeon and Mozart theatres, Canton, Ohio, has gone to Florida with his family for a month's sojourn.

The new $40,000 Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Ky., has been formally opened. It is being managed by Haselden Bros.

J. P. Harley is out of the managership of the Lyric Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, being succeeded by Giles Robb.

The Southwest

An eight-story building with a theatre and 100 offices will be built by Henry and Jesse Oppenheimer, Albert Kronkosky, Morris Stern and others in San Antonio, Texas, in the near future. It is expected that the proposed structure will cost in excess of $750,000, inclusive of the site.

The Queen Theatre, owned by Mrs. Ira Shields at Tyler, Texas, which was destroyed by fire recently, is to be rebuilt soon.

M. C. Huston is opening a new theatre at Clinton, Okla.

Completing a resolution formulated at its convention last April, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas have presented a gold pass, good at all membership theatres, to Governor Terrell. The pass is good for Governor and Mrs. Terrell during the remainder of their lives.

Work is progressing on the new building for the American Theatre which is being built by W. H. Stark at Orange, Texas.

The Alhambra Theatre at Tulsa, Okla., has been purchased by Frank S. Silsby, who gave a housewarming party without admission fee.

Thanks Black Cat

Manager McLaughlin of the Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill., has a black cat to thank for saving his house from a disastrous fire. One day, on a tour of the basement of the house, he discovered a big rat pursued by the house cat and found a large hole in the foundation. With the aid of a bricklayer the hole was fixed up.

A few days later a fire started next door, not over three feet from the patched-up hole, and the theatre was saved from catching fire because there was no way for the fire to jump the space between the buildings.

Louisville

The Mutual Amusement Company, Louisville, capital $10,000, has been incorporated by Abe Finberg, Evelyn Finberg and A. F. Oldham. The debt limit is $10,000.

Forest Braden, chief of police, Louisville, in a recent bulletin has ordered all patrolmen to enforce the ordinance which prohibits crowding of aisles of theatres. The law calls for a fine of $5 to $20 against each operator who violates it, and each person standing in an aisle is regarded as being a separate violation.

Fred J. Dolle, of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company and Broadway Amusement Company, as well as allied theatres, was elected a director of the Louisville Convention and Publicity League at the annual meeting a few days ago. The league figures that it brought 60,000 persons here last year, who stayed an average of three days and spent an average of $10 a day, or $1,800,000 in all. Hotels and theatres get the bulk of the business of the convention visitors. There were 168 conventions held here in 1924.

A style show operating in conjunction with the picture bills at the Alamor Theatre, and staged by local merchants with live models, proved a good business stunt and drew large crowds to the theatre during the week of February 16. It is an idea that can be used to advantage by many exhibitors in towns where a regular style show is not scheduled.

Maurice Baum of the Nittany Theatre, State College, is planning to build a fine new theatre in his town and expects to take all of this year to complete the house, which he expects to open at Christmas and at which time he will close his present theatre. The theatre will be situated on a lot 70x150 feet, will seat 1,144 and be arranged so that at least 200 more seats can be added at a later date. This announcement comes close on the heels of a story which appeared in this column in the World two weeks ago, recording the plans of Stanley S. Neal and H. T. McFarland, who will erect a picture theatre in Mt. Lebanon to cost $150,000, completion of which is expected next summer.

MILLIONAIRE COWBOY. Star Lefty Flynn. An excellent western actor put into a weak picture. Flynn has a good personality and can be made into a good drawing card if F. B. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BOY OF MINE. (7 reels). Star, Ben Alexander. A one hundred percent picture and a good print. I filled the house on this one and they went away delighted, telling me how they liked it. Tone, good Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Lee Dillingham, Kozy Theatre, Nortonville, Kentucky.

HER NIGHT OF ROMANCE. (7,211 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. This went over good and seemed to please them as had several good compliments on this one, but I would rate it as a very fair program offering. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND. (6,728 feet). Star, Owen Moore. An excellent comedy-drama that would have been better had the director left out the hall tip-toeing scene which is so common in many two-reel comedies. The army, navy and other organizations rushing to the rescue was overdrawn—too many men. A small squad of police would have lent more reality to the climax. However, it is well worth playing. Good tone, strong appeal. Yes, for Sunday. As special, no. Draw from town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

IDLE TONGUES. (5,447 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. For me a big piece of cheese; I'd lay off it; it's common, absolutely, for me, one that was rotten. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Sincerity is the keynote of the dependable reports that "Our Gang" sends in.

That is why they are so valuable. If they were colored by personal bias against any producer, if they were just slap-dash stuff written in a hurry, these tips would cease to be of value.

But every exhibitor who volunteers to keep the tips going strong does it in a spirit of helpfulness, and—well, you who use the tips know that they are of mighty high quality.

I wish some of the boys who have laid off lately would come in again, at least once in a while.

You see, the fellows follow a certain theatre man when they find that his idea agrees with their own, and then when he doesn't come in, they have to get it all fixed up for another fellow's style—then he, too, lays down for a time, and the department, strive as I may to make it fully useful, drops in value to that particular exhibitor who has been following the delinquent's advice.

Come ahead, bunch—keep your sincere and valuable service at top notch.—VAN.

Friend Bertling Gives His Views

Dear Van and Gang:—

"I saw Mr. Widenor's interesting letter in this week's World and thought I would butt in a little.

"I give my tips as I see pictures and by what they do for me. I am trying to help my brother exhibitor.

"I would like for all my brother exhibitors to get together and cut out this block system of booking. It is pretty soft for the Exchange. But if there are five or six pictures that you want and they have twenty they want to sell, why have you got to buy them all to get what you want? Is there anything fair about that? I would like to have some kind of an answer to this." G. M. BERTLING, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

Prescott inquired about the turning to account of mouth-to-mouth advertising and L. O. Davis came in with a splendid chat on the subject. You must have read it in last week's issue.

I'd like to have more of you boys shoot in the ideas on this subject. It won't take long.

WRITE IN WITH YOUR NEXT TIPS!

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy DeVore A comedy classic of ticklish situations and rib-tickling absurdities, that is bound to please the worst grouch in the house. High class comedy specials is what we need most of all, the sex stuff is getting so tiresome that it hardly attracts passing notice. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent for all classes. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

NIGHT HAWK. (5,115 ft.) Star, Harry Carey. Carey is getting better and it is about time as he fell down for a while and now he is coming back. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (165 seats), Piqua, Ohio

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 ft.). Star, Priscilla Dean. This easily ranks as a special and is one of the best features under the producer's banner. Everybody well pleased. The bull fight scenes are simply great. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30 J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. Personally, okay, but patrons did not seem to care much for it. Carey fails to get business for us. Tone, good. Special, no. Audience appeal, 70 per cent. Middle and working class city of 25,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C Curdts, Bijou Theatre (350 seats), Greenville, South Dakota.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. A good picture. Same as all of the Hunt Stromberg series have been. But can you imagine with conditions as they are they want more money for the new ones. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission, 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Star cast. Again the Producers came through with their promises of bigger and better pictures. Drew capacity. R. J Downham, Westmont Theatre, Westmont, New Jersey.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 ft.). Star cast. A wonderful comedy classic that was an absolute knock-out but for some reason failed to draw. A small crowd agreed that it was simply great. Lost around forty-four dollars on a two day run but this is the kind of a jolt I always get when running specials, no matter what firm makes them. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent for all classes. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 ft.). Star cast. Pleased all who saw it, excepting for some criticisms about picture being too long. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. Residential class town of 1,200. Admission, 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

IRON TRAIL. Star cast. Did not see this one personally but the reports I heard on it were far from being good. Some said it was the poorest picture we have had in a long time. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Poor audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, 10-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

ROBIN HOOD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Old, but good. Still pleases 90 per cent. Children go crazy over it. An elaborate production. Don't pay too much for it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, 90 per cent. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission, 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission, 10-25; 10-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

THREE MUSKETEERS. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This one is extra good, after the first two reels the action is lively and kept the house in an uproar all the time. A picture like this is always good even if it is old. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission, 10-25, 10-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

Universal

BROADWAY OR BUST. (5,272 ft). Star, Hoot Gibson. Although this is not very much of a Western story, still it has a lot of good comedy which ought to put it over. About as good a Gibson as I have ever shown. Hoot's adventures in New York are amusing. Tone, O. K. Fair appeal. Yes, for Sunday. No, as special. Draw mixed class. Town, 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RUBY BLAINE

In support of Lila Lee in the Chadwick film "The Midnight Girl" now in production

CROOKED ALLEY. (4,800 ft.). Star, Laura LaPlante. LaPlante pictures are usually good, but this one lacked action and life. By all means do not play it if possible. Poor tone. No, for Sunday or special. Draw farmers, small town, 800. Admission 10-25. E. F. Gick, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Moundridge, Kansas.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 ft.) Star, Jack Hoxie. O bit better than most of this star's stories, yet I wonder not praise it very much as I do not consider Hoxie as much of a star. If they would only give him decent stories he might surprise you. Tone, O. K. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

FOOL'S HIGHWAY. (6,800 ft.). Star, Mary Philbin. A poor picture. Did not draw and will not appeal to a high class audience. May go over in a mining town O. K. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. A. F. Affelt, Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, Michigan.

LAW FORBIDS. (6,262 ft.). Star, Baby Peggy. A good program picture with a pleasing story. About 75 per cent. Tone, O. K. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. A. F. Affelt, Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, Michigan.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 ft.). Star, Reginald Denny. A whizz of a picture with just everything to please 'em. Go after it. It is a snap up. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, good. City of 10,000. Admission 10-30. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,500 ft.). Star, Hoot Gibson. One of Hoot's better ones with plenty of action and speed. Should please anywhere. Tone, O. K. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SLANDERERS. Just an ordinary, good program picture; not as good as some of the other Universal pictures. Good tone. Appeal, 80 per cent. Yes, for Sunday; no, as special. Draw farmers, town 800. Admission, 10-25. E. F. Gick, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Moundridge, Kansas.

"Salome of the Tenements"

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Offering a seemingly impossible main situation, "Salome of the Tenements" is none the less a cross section of real life on the East Side, for Anzia Yezierska wrote from a full knowledge of the people and Sidney Olcott has made a wonderfully good production, preserving the rich local color while not once permitting it to degenerate into burlesque or even too broad a comedy. He has taken types, rather than actors, and he has made them live naturally before the screen.

The fidelity of his pictures of Ghetto life probably will not be appreciated to the full by those who do not intimately know the people he deals with, but the picture is interesting, at times gripping, and works up to a fine climax, where it promptly stops with the interest still at the highest point.

Jetta Goudal, as the girl of the tenements who pushes herself to the fore with her personality and battles with her only weapon, her personality, does much to support the efforts of her director. She ranges from the gutter-girl to the wife of the millionaire reformer, sounding always a true note. The interest centers upon her character and she holds the interest, but the necessary stressing of her character pulls it a trifle out of focus. On the other hand Irma Lerner, as the assistant to Jacob Lipkin, the editor, (as finely played by Lazar Freed), might have been brought up from the fringe of Seward Park so true to type does she play her part.

Elihu Tenenholtz, as the usurious banker, gives another restrained and thoroughly natural characterization, and Jose Ruben, as the sweat-shop garment maker, who goes to Paris to return as a fashionable designer, is a character about whom another and perhaps even better play might be written.

The hardest work falls to Godfrey Tearle, who has to orient himself in this mass of strange types. That he holds the character strong and sincere where he might so easily spoil the entire story is a tribute to his skill.

The crowds which raved over "Humoresque" will find in this a much finer depiction of the real East Side. Olcott has simply lifted the section over to the screen. It's real to the last minute detail.

Directed by Sidney Olcott.
Length, 7,017 feet.

Story

Sonya Mendel fights her way through life with her looks, backed by a wit sharpened on the curbstones of the east side gutters. Her success brings her the nickname of Salome, for heads fall, like that of John of old, at her attack. She lands as reporter for Jacob Lipkin, editor of a jargon newspaper, and he like all the rest, falls in love with her. She interviews John Manning, who is doing welfare work, as to the disposition he is to make of the funds he has set aside, and Manning becomes interested in her. Invited to dinner she persuades Jakey Solomon, once a sweat-shop stitcher but now a fashionable outfitter, to give her a suitable dress. Inviting Manning to call on her, the sharp tongue of Gittel Sycin, Lipkin's assistant, reminds her of the squalor of her dingy apartment. She signs a note for $1,500 to be paid on her marriage to Manning, and with this she transforms her room. Later Manning marries her, and when, in the course of his work, he seeks to procure the indictment of the usurer, Ben seeks to coerce Sonya. He gives her a chance to steal the note from his safe, orders her arrest and then offers to trade Manning even, but Sonya stands ready to go to jail that her husband may keep faith with her people, and Manning shrewdly shows the banker that the whip hand is his own.

"One Year to Live"

Excellent Cast in First National Feature of Jazz and Human Interest in French Capital

Reviewed by Tom Waller

All of the essentials that go to make good entertainment are included in "One Year to Live." This First National release is well titled, the story being based upon such a diagnosis rendered by a physician with the hope that it will emphasize his love for a woman patient and thereby cause its reciprocation. The cast is one of excellent selection for such a plot. Aileen Pringle, Antonio Moreno, and Dorothy Mackaill are featured.

The scenes are confined to a few rooms in a Latin quarter of Paris and to the stage and boudiers of a sensational burlesque house in the French capital. The dances and parties which take place in this theatre are not risque but are pepped up with sufficient jazz by scantically clad and swaying forms to keep things moving, during this part of the picture, at an exciting and exhilarating pace.

The lead struck us as being rather drawn out. It seemed that the sick room atmosphere could have been fully portrayed in less footage. Dorothy Mackaill plays the part of the invalid sister of Aileen Pringle, maid to the star dancer, with whom the attending physician, enacted by Sam De Grasse, is infatuated.

Aileen seems to be in the best of health until suddenly when she overtaxes her strength the doctor renders his verdict, which may appeal to the logical as being rather improbable.

For its greater part, the feature speeds along at an entertaining rate. Moreno as the American captain who first woes the burlesque star and then falls sincerely in love with her maid, is particularly good.

Picturegoers who like modern novels should be well pleased with "One Year to Live."

Cast

Elise Duchanier	Aileen Pringle
Martha	Dorothy Macknill
Dr. Lucien LaPierre	Sam De Grasse
Lolotte	Rosemary Theby
Captain Tom Kendrick	Antonio Moreno
Maurice Brunel	Joseph Kilgour

Adapted by J. G. Hawke from the story by John Hunter.
Directed by Irving Cummings.
Length, 6,064 feet.

Story

Dr. LaPierre tells Elise, maid to a star in a Parisian burlesque show, that she has but a year to live in order to strengthen his plea to marry her and take care of her invalid sister, Marthe. Elise, however, decides to take the opposite course. She goes to Brunel, owner of the show, and offers to give herself to him after he has made her a great dancing star. Eventually Elise supplants Lolotte, her mistress, both on the stage and in Brunel's affections. The physician intercepts letters from Captain Kendrick whom Elise also secured from Lolotte. When the Captain returns from America to marry Elise he hears stories damaging to her character. The doctor repents and informs him of the facts and he arrives at Brunel's home just in time to rescue Elise from the toils of that roue.

"Itching for Revenge"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Eddie Gordon in "Itching for Revenge" pulls a clever stunt with a flock of flivvers. He purchases a radio control set, hitches it onto his radiator, and then parks the machine while he does some shopping. He then turns a radio indicator to summon his car. It comes, but with a number of its brothers for which copies of the same device have been purchased by their respective owners in the meantime. Eddie pulls the "stop" signal and finally locates his car by sampling the hootch secreted in each. He then calls on his girl to be faced by a burly rival. From then on there is considerable slapstick action in which the customary vases are thrown and shooting is prevalent. Eddie masks as a gorilla and so frightens his "friend" as to cause him to dash for safety. There are quite a number of mirthful situations in this Century Comedy.—T. W.

"Neptune's Nieces"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

Famous swimmers of a New York women's club are shown training for the ensuing season in a beautiful water cave in Bermuda by Grantland Rice in his latest offering, "Neptune's Nieces." Their fancy dives, methods of propelling through the water and how they keep fit are the highlights of this one-reeler. The picture is entertaining and contains some wonderful sea shots. Such names as Aileen Riggin, Helen Meany, Gertrude Ederle and others occupying good space in the sport news of the day.—T. W.

"Little People of the Sea"

(Educational—Instructive—One Reel)

The tiny animal life which clings to plants, crawls on the bottom of the sea and floats on the briny waves is the subject of the latest of the Secrets of Life series being made by Louis H. Tolhurst for Principal Pictures Corporation for release through Educational. A good part of this one reel is devoted to portrayals of coastlines and underwater scenes of no great depth. The microscopic views of species of undersea protoplasm are naturally interesting and instructive. They deal, however, with things unknown except in a very general way by the populace at large.—T. W.

"The Helping Hand"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Jimmie Aubrey does a lot of flops in "The Helping Hand." He flops off a train in a milk town and then proceeds to flop off wagons, over fences and into mud puddles. The last is too much for the girl whom he immediately succeeds in fascinating upon arriving and she walks off the lot with a local beaux. Audiences liking Aubrey will find that his latest vehicle measures up well with the standard of his others.—T. W.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Welcome Granger"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the first installment of the new comedy series, "The Pacemakers," which follows the popular "Go-Getters." Alberta Vaughn again is featured, and who will dispute her right to be. H. C. Witwer continues as the author. Beatrice Van did the scenario and the direction was by Wesley Ruggles. The same faces are in the cast—Alberta, George O'Hara, Albert Cooke, Kit Guard and Stanley Taylor. Judging by the first installment, the new series will center around small-town college life. O'Hara is seen finding a boarding house preparatory to entering college. The presence of Alberta, the landlady's granddaughter, in a poorly furnished one dictates his choice. He meets her a second time when she is serving soda in her grandfather's store, and finds an enemy in Stanley Taylor, who repeatedly insults him. They go to the Court, put on the gloves and have a terrific set-to which O'Hara finally wins. Then Alberta and he walk home together. There is good humor around character portrayal, and the characters are vivid and well done. For instance, Kit Guard is Sam Jasbo, a general utility man with a passion for bugs and butterflies and hats. He takes the credit for O'Hara's victory in the fight because he brought his good luck hat with him.—S. S.

"Kicked About"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Many of the familiar slapstick antics are resorted to by Eddie Gordon in "Kicked About." The second reel, however, indulges. in some particularly rough stuff. Eddie's gang has deprived a fruit dealer of a living and the Judge gives him thirty years in jail, offering him the alternative of becoming a cop and capturing the town's chief desperado. After more bumping around, during the course of which he is kicked out of buildings and hurled through a couple of fences, Eddie "necks" the big boy. He effects the arrest by having him jump through a window into a huge cylindrical bird cage. This he rolls to the police station where he is proclaimed a hero and immediately assigned to the bomb squad. Audiences liking rough and tumble comedies should be pleased with "Kicked About."—T. W.

"Lots of Knots"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

The feature of this issue of Lyman Howe's Hodge Podge, a number of scenes showing various kinds of knots, knot-holes in a board-fence which enable small boys to see baseball games, a variety of sailors knots tied by an expert, a marriage knot in Borneo, nautical knots, knots or epaulets worn by officers and little birds, sandpipers, also known as knots. Another section shows the manufacture of steel rails. As usual, cartoon work and photography are intermingled and most of the cartoons are in a humorous vein. A good number of this series.—C. S. S.

"In Dutch"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Paul Terry has his animals demonstrate their version of making cheese in "In Dutch." He also shows how a shoe-shining establishment goes out of business in the land overseas because of the difficulty to polish wooden shoes. The cartoon is right up to Terry's established style.—T. W.

"Bashful Jim"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

An awkward youth, whose attempts at expressing his love for a dainty maiden are as ungainly as himself, is the role Mack Sennett gives Ralph Graves in "Bashful Jim." This comedy as a whole should prove satisfactory to audiences in general. There are some fans, however, who may decide that there is too much of an exaggerated sameness to Graves' interpretation of ungainliness throughout the two reels. A bag of sticky candy furnishes Graves with material to slip, fall, slide and get all "messed up." A local movie house screens a sensational love film by a well known writer. In it the star has been waiting several weeks to release his amorous inclinations and finally the several minutes arrive, when he loses no time. This bold courtier inspires and recreates Jim, causing him to discard his self-consciousness.—T. W.

"Dog Days"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Dog Days" is par value for an "Our Gang" comedy. Mickey, Farina and the rest of the kids are as good and as funny as ever but their story does not possess all of the ingenuity and novel little twists of some of the past scripts. The poorest and most hackneyed type of plot outline would pass 100 per cent with these clever youngsters in the frame, we feel certain the thousands of "Our Gang" enthusiasts will concede. Mickey's dog carries off the honors in this two-reeler. This canine is as unique as the kids and does some stunts well nigh unbeatable. He steals a baby's milk and then cleverly arranges so a neighbor's cat will be blamed. His treachery discovered by his master, he is disowned and suddenly reclaimed with honors when he stops a runaway pony cart and saves a tiny society Miss. She invites the dog, his master and all of their associates to a highbrow party. Needless to say what takes place when the little roughnecks mix in with the little silk stockings except that it is great entertainment.—T. W.

"Puzzled by Crosswords"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Crossword puzzles provide the theme for this two-reel comedy in which Eddie Gordon is starred. "Puzzled by Crosswords" is an apt title for this Century. Gordon is a puzzle bug to such an extreme that the walls of his study are decorated by filled in squares. This comedy will surely be a treat to ardent aspirants of enlarged vocabularies. It adheres so closely to the theme that Gordon never leaves his house but that each pocket is filled with pencils and material to solve. He is hooked by a crane and hoisted to the top of a steel structure. His antics high above a city are hair-raising and he descends just in time to enjoy a ride to police headquarters. There he infuses his crossword mania into the cops and leaves them all with pencil and paper or chalk, scrambling about to solve the wordy problems.—T. W.

"Two Cats and a Bird"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

Recent Earl Hurd "Pen and Ink Vaudeville" cartoons have, in our opinion, been an improvement over the earlier issues due to the concentration of interest and effort on only one subject. This time, "Props" called upon to feed two cats and a bird, finds them to be lions and an ostrich. When the trainer cautions him not to show fear he tries, but ends by running through the streets with the animals right after him, and remarks afterwards that he did not show fear but did show them speed. It is an amusing and fast-moving subject that should please the average audience.—C. S. S.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Jealousy of Unimaginative Managers Holds Back Stunts from Live Wires

SEVERAL weeks ago we dropped a line to one of the early contributors to this department asking why it was that he had contributed nothing to any of the trade papers for a year or more. We expressed regret that he had slowed down.

His response was not altogether a surprise, but he put plainly a condition that exists in various sections of the country; a condition as surprising as it is discreditable.

He explained that he was working just as hard as ever and evolving new stunts, but that he was not passing his ideas along because he found that to do so was to invite the attacks of other managers on the same circuit.

Can't Follow Pace

He manages a theatre which is part of a chain of houses, about half of which are of equal importance to his own. Through intensive work he has made his house one of the most profitable if not the best paying theatre in the string.

This naturally invites the attack of the other managers, who are unable to keep up with the pace he sets, and he has found that the report in the trade papers of his new stunts was the signal for the concerted attack of the less enterprising.

There was no open campaign, but merely the underhand whispering that he was swell headed and a seeker after notoriety, the suggestion that he was trying to find a position elsewhere and the hint that all his work was directed more toward raising his own salary than toward the betterment of the receipts of this house.

They Fall for It

And the remarkable part is that the business men who have several million dollars invested in their enterprise actually believe these underhand attacks. The manager in question has found that it hurt him to broadcast his ideas, and so he keeps them to himself and the business in general is the loser.

Instead of following his lead and using the same stunt in their own houses to help their business, these less enterprising managers see only the menace of his greater accomplishment, and they get out their little velvet covered hammers and knock and knock, until in self protection the one live wire has had to refrain from generously passing along his ideas.

And the men who should be most appreciative of his efforts listen to the knockers and virtually gag the one man they have on their staff who is worth more than a janitor's salary.

Lots of Them

If this condition were confined to one man or one circuit, it would not be worth the space in which to discuss it, but it is a very general condition. We know of only one circuit where managers are not only permitted but encouraged to pass along their stunts.

The Paramount Theatres Department, under Harold B. Franklin, has developed the system originated by Lem Stewart for Southern Enterprises, until there is not only a complete interchange of good ideas through an organized department, but Paramount passes along to the trade papers the best of these ideas, whether they concern Paramount releases or the releases of other firms. This is in line with the original idea of Claud Saunders, of the Exploitation Department, that helping the managers to exploit would make more money for Paramount in the long run, through the prosperity of these managers.

Gets Results

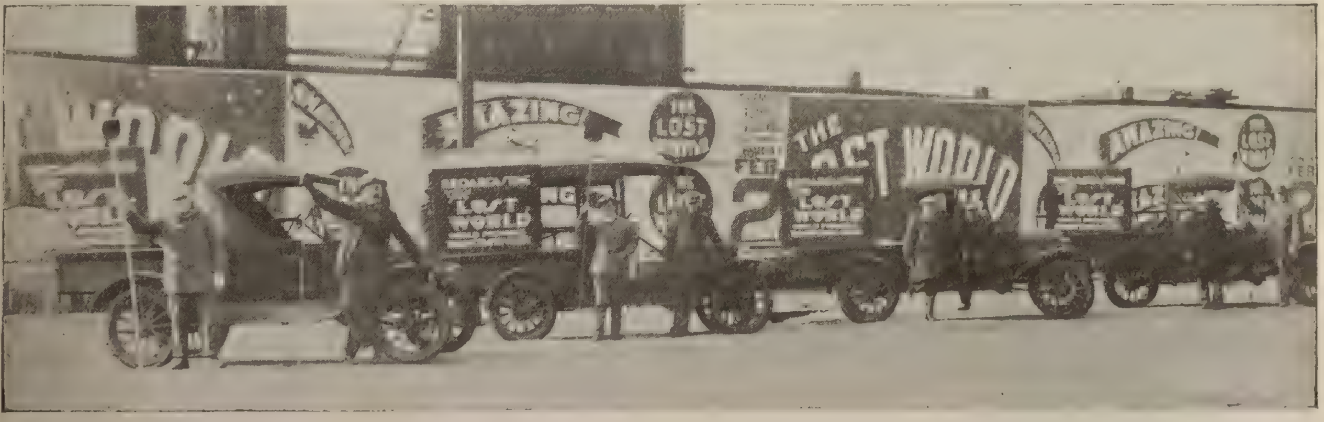
The result is that the houses in Mr. Franklin's department get better results and make more money than any other chain in the country. It has paid and is paying him to keep the men on their toes.

And yet other circuit heads listen to the whisperings and the backbitings, and while none of them has issued a stop order, practically none of the live wires on any other chain dares to pass along ideas for fear of the backbiting of those who have not even the intelligence to apply the ideas of others.

It is a pretty poor condition of affairs and we hope that this story will come before the eyes of these short-visioned heads. Perhaps it may lead them to a realization of the fact that publicity for the exploits of their employes will not only encourage those men but eventually will force the dead ones to wake up and get a hustle on.

Another Year

It seems only a little while ago that we wrote up the Anniversary of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, but Fred S. Meyer has only one a year, so it must have been twelve months ago. Each year establishes the Palace more firmly as a municipal institution, and in the anniversary magazine—which again reached the hundred page mark—the Mayor and other civic lights join with the rest of the citizens in congratulating Mr. Meyer and themselves. It's a little late to add our word, but if Fred will tip us in advance next year, we'll shoot him a story that will tell the world what the trade papers think of the Palace, for the fame of this house has passed beyond the city limits to both oceans.



A First National Release

JUST A LITTLE SIDELIGHT ON THE BOSTON CAMPAIGN FOR THE LOST WORLD

A part of the billposting fleet and one of the stands, a part of a campaign that is selling tickets in quantities at Tremont Temple. The story is one that will repay advertising effort. It must be circused to get the best results. The more you do the more you will get. The more you put in the more you take out and the better the impression you will make on patrons.

Puts Over Thief With Ad Contest

Now that he has a full-fledged house organ to work for him, Francis M. Kadow, of the Mikadow Theatre, Manitowoc, Wis., is making it hustle to pay for its upkeep.

His latest stunt is to offer $10 for the best suggestion on advertising The Thief of Bagdad.

Probably not many will actually enter the contest, but hundreds will read over the story in the paper and sell themselves on the idea that this picture is worth advanced fee.

"I never was more serious in my life; this is not just an attempt to gather a lot of publicity for 'The Thief of Bagdad,' but a serious business proposition that I want to lay before the readers of the 'Reel-News.' I want to get their idea of what impresses them, or how they would exploit an unusual picture like 'The Thief of Bagdad.' You as the purchaser of amusement are sold either by one angle of the publicity or another, and there is that little something that we might have been using for years that turns the trick and gets people into our theatre and we have never been able to lay our finger on it. An outsider in many cases can see or find that little point, while a manager will grope about in the dark. The Mikadow has been the leader in this community in advertising its picture attractions; we have introduced novelties, and by comparing the advertisements you write with what we have written or what your neighbor writes we expect to arrive at some definite conclusion."

Some Juggling

In a recent issue we inadvertently moved the Tower Theatre from St. Paul across the river to Minneapolis. That's some house moving, but now we take an encore by moving it back to St. Paul again. Joseph Friedman's very handsome playhouse is in St. Paul and most distinctly not in Minneapolis, and we regret exceedingly that we moved it over there even temporarily.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

SURROUNDING "Flaming Love" (Frivolous Sal), the feature photoplay attraction, a show was built with a saxophone sextette as one of the principal numbers. However, owing to the fact that these musicians could not appear the show had to be changed at the last minute, a Revue Populaire being substituted instead. Besides this presentation there were three other stage incidents in addition to the Mark Strand Topical Review. The whole show ran 2 hours and 2 minutes, of which time "Flaming Love" took up 1 hour and 22 minutes. Nine minutes was given to the Topical Review, leaving 31 minutes for the musical numbers.

The overture was Tobani's arrangement called "Echoes from the Metropolitan Opera." Excerpts from "La Prophet," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Tannhauser," "Nibilungen," "Pagliacci" and "William Tell" were introduced. The lights for this overture were as follows: light pink Mestrum floods of 160 amperes on the musicians from the dome; foots and borders of the large stage in blue; 2 pink arch spots and 2 green arch spots were thrown on the pleats of the antique gold draw-curtains which were closed across the production stage. Light green open box lamps in the transparent windows at either side of the large stage. Eight minutes for this overture.

An elaborate number was built around a ballad, "June Brought the Roses" (Openshaw). The incident opened "in one" with a Spanish shawl drop, in front of which tenor and soprano sang first verse and chorus of the song. The shawl drop was raised and disclosed members of the ballet grouped about the stage. The set was an old French garden with a five-foot wall and grille gate in the center. The back-drop a neutral blue lighted by open box lamps of deep blue. On the second chorus of the song a swing was lowered from the flies in which was the premiere danseuse as Cupid. A toe number was interpolated for her and the number then closed with another chorus of the song by the Ensemble. The front lighting included 2 moonlight blue Mestrum floods on the orchestra from the booth and the transparent windows, light green. The large stage was in blue. Twelve minutes for this number.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review of 9 minutes, an operatic soprano on the apron of the large stage appeared and sang Tosti's "Good-bye." The light was as follows: 2 magenta Mestrum floods on the orchestra from the booth; blue foots and borders on the large stage; magenta flood from the dome lighting the blue metalline curtains across the small stage; an amber spot from the dome lighting the soloist from head to waist and a deep blue spot from the waist to the floor. Four minutes for this solo. The Revue Populaire, running 12 minutes, was made up of a group of songs and dances. The setting for this number was mostly mirror mosaic, the back-drop being made up of a central panel, 15 feet wide, of mirror mosaic, on each side of which were deep blue plush cycloramas. A terrace with balustrade ran across the stage 3 feet in front of the back-drop and placed upon the terrace were mirror mosaic vases and pedestals. Suspended from the flies were 2 mirror mosaic globes, 5 feet in diameter, which revolved during the incident, while varicolored spots were thrown upon them from the sides. The first number was "Somewhere Someone Is Waiting," sung by soprano. After this came "Dreamer of Dreams" by tenor, with interpolated dance steps for members of the ballet. Third was "Rockabye Baby Days" by mezzo soprano and tenor, and then came "Show Me the Way" by baritone and dancers. The incident closed with "All Alone," first as a duet and then by the Ensemble.

Startled Students

The peak of the stunt worked by Guy Hazelton, of the Rialto Theatre, Missoula, Mont., came in the U. of M. gymnasium.

Hazelton had a girl on the streets distributing cards for Miss Bluebeard. The impersonation was good enough to fool and when "she" invaded the locker rooms of the university gymnasium there was a real sensation until the stunt was explained. It caught the student trade for much more than usual business from that direction.

ANOTHER GOOD EXAMPLE FROM THE WEIR THEATRE, ABERDEEN, WASH., ON FLIRTING WITH LOVE

On one side O. T. Taylor has cut out the 24-sheet, while on the other he builds up a display with cutouts from the smaller sizes. We gather that he uses the same general idea each big attraction, but seeks to give it an individual touch. Generally the big picture of the week gets the frames regardless of the length of run or the number of pictures booked.

Pulled Nifties for Excuse Me

They went to extra innings on the exploitation for Excuse Me at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles. The press agent felt heartened by the opportunities he was given, and he went past the distance pole. H. D. McBride, for Metro-Goldwyn and Ray Coffin, of the West Coast downtown houses, pulled some pretty team work and what one could not think of the other got.

One of the most novel stunts was a special 24-sheet reading: "The Annual Comedy Riot." Below this was the list: The Kid in 1921, Grandma's Boy for 1922, The Hottentot in 1923 and The Navigator last year, the latter being the only Metro-Goldwyn product. Below this was "1925 Excuse me." The top and bottom lines were in glaring white, and the rest in colors, which gave the big message as "The annual comedy riot, 1925."

A Courtesy Week was sponsored by the Mayor, Chamber of Commerce, Police Department, Telephone Company, Automobile Club of Southern California, Los Angeles Railway Company and the Federation of Women's Clubs. They overlooked the S. P. C. A. and the W. C. T. U., but they had plenty without them.

Tickets were sent all street railway employees who were commended to the company by letter, but the announcement was not made until after the period was over, to guard against a flood of bogus letters.

A human fly clung to a flagpole bearing an Excuse Me banner for thirteen consecutive hours, and this was sent out by a wire agency and an illustrated news service, while a giant negro, attired as a Pullman porter, carried a lettered suit case through the streets.

The lobby was converted into a railroad concourse and you entered through one observation platform and came out of another, when a porter brushed you off. It was a fine, large and profitable week.

It's a Bird

Edgar Hart used a human bird to advertise Johnny Hines in The Early Bird at the Opera House, Augusta, Maine. His operator tipped him off to a bird that had been used on a parade float, and he borrowed it.

Tying a rope about the neck, he led the "bird" to City Hall to call on the Chief of Police and ask for a permit to parade the animal on the streets. It made for packed business at very small cost, for very little work—and less expense—was required to fit the float outfit for street work.

Stenciled

Clayton Tunstill stenciled the sidewalks of Chickasha, Okla., with the numerals 35 and after they were sufficiently talked about he added "North of" to make sure of the connection. He did not have to add that it was at the Rialto, because the other advertising was taking care of that.

He played to such big business that he has asked for a return date.

Let Navigator Tie Up Streets

Deliberately wrecking an automobile in the interest of a safety first demonstration was the Sun Theatre's big stunt for The Navigator in Omaha. The street car company provided a special car for the stunt and the Sun supplied the automobile.

This was driven around town for several days in advance bannered with the statement that "This car will be wrecked by the Reckless Navigator" at a designated location Saturday afternoon.

The entire traffic force was concentrated at the location to hold back the crowds, and at the time set the car collided with the automobile to show what happened when you were not careful.

Blocked All Traffic

It blocked traffic for an hour, but this had all been arranged with the police.

Buddy Hooton, who pulled the stunt, also put out three men in Klan robes, mounted, and hooking to the Keaton's Kolossal Komedy stunt, now three or four pictures old. After they had paraded the streets for a day Hooton pulled them in and explained to the newspapers that it was because of unfavorable comment, which got him onto the front page because it sounded reasonable. Hooton, who is the Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, also made the front page with a kid party, and he worked the laughing record idea and radioed the audience laughter into the lobby.

THE LOBBY OF LOEW'S STATE THEATRE, LOS ANGELES, DRESSED FOR EXCUSE ME

Ray Coffin, West Coast Theatres publicity man, working with H. B. Wright, of the theatre, and H. D. McBride, M.-G. exploiteer, dressed the two lobbies to give a railroad effect, getting back to the very first lobby exploitation ever planned, if you can remember back to the old Howe Travel Tours, which were fitted up as rear ends. It was all part of a fine campaign.

Raffles Campaign Gained Goodwill

In reporting the success of a Raffles campaign on K, the Unknown, at the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, J. M. Edgar Hart stresses the fact that the capture was made by a well known high school student. It stamped the stunt as being genuine and Mr. Hart figures that the good-will engendered means much more to the house than the additional business brought in by the idea. The increase in business was a two-night affair. The good-will helps the house indefinitely.

It is much better to offer a small prize and actually give it than to swell the reward to so large a sum that it is necessary to have the money "won" by someone who will turn it back.

Mr. Hart offered only a $5 goldpiece and a month's season ticket. For this he not only gained free space in the paper, but almost every window in the business district carried a card.

The Raffles was apparently a specialist who is working the stunt over the Grey Circuit.

Stock Card for Teacher Appeal

Evidently Louis Pilosi, of Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pa., believes in the teacher appeal on the proper sort of stories, for he sends in an invitation which apparently is a stock item. The printed text reads:

PILOSI'S THEATRE

Hereby extends to you a cordial invitation to attend the showing of the stupendous Moving Picture production entitled

At Pilosi's Theatre on

This card will admit you.
Kindly advise pupils to see this production.
LOUIS PILOSI, Manager.

In the present instance the blanks are filled in with the title America and the playing dates. We think that the "kindly advise line" might be modified a little, but the general idea is a capital one. Most teachers are glad to recommend to their classes any picture they believe will help to interest the pupils in any phase of their work, and the historical value of America certainly qualifies the card in the present instance.

It had all of the value of a contest, with the additional merit of driving home the fact that the supers were stars.

Makes Roto Section His Program Stock

Apparently W. H. Odom, of the Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Ga., is the first manager to make the roto section his regular program stock. He does this through an unusual handling of the section.

These come with the lower half of the back page left blank for the house imprint. Mr. Odom prints this space with his "front" page to the right of the "back" page, but both on the lower half of the real back page.

Then instead of folding the sheets to show the roto front page he folds so that his own front page appears, with the other half showing as the back page. It really looks as though he had these printed up for his own purpose.

Of course this works only where he can get a roto with one of his attractions, but as he uses Paramount, he is pretty sure of a supply, and he makes them save the cost of his program stock while getting credit for an additional investment.

Picking His Hour

If you thought you could figure how long a clock could run, you had a chance to win tickets to His Hour when it came to the the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. J. L. Shields hooked a store to the window display of a clock and gave twenty tickets to those who estimated most accurately how long the clock could run. All you had to do was to fill in a blank and drop it into a box.

This gave the window two kicks. People stopped to look and they came back when the list of winners was posted in the window, though they did not have to come back to find out as notification was mailed the winners.

Mr. Shields had the attraction around New Year's, so he figured that his hour was around eleven o'clock New Year's Eve and announced a midnight matinee.

ONE OF THE GAS COMPANY DISPLAYS ON HOT WATER

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., hooked the Lloyd comedy to the gas company and they helped him to break all the records the house had in stock. The gas company contributed another window. See the story.

Gas and Hot Water Broke All Records

Generally the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., gets less business the first half of the week than it does the last three days, but Frank J. Miller broke all his last-half records with the first-half run of Hot Water at Augusta, Ga.

In addition to some special stunts, such as contributing the prizes on a newspaper Limerick stunt and the distribution of 1,000 balloons, he tied in to the gas company.

The company announced a Hot Water week, with special rates on gas water heaters, which could be had for as little as $2 down. One of the displays is shown on this page, but there was another and still more interesting stunt.

This was a hand lavatory above which were suspended, by fine wires, two ordinary faucets. There was no piping, and yet hot water poured from them continuously. This really was piped into the faucets through glass tubes, running up from the basin into the mouths of the faucets, the water pouring down the sides of the tube, so that a small head of water suggested double the supply. The tubes were completely invisible. It's an old stunt, but it never fails to get a crowd, and it was a powerful aid to the comedy.

The company also posted 200 sheets of its own paper, which linked Lloyd to the Rudd heaters, and supplemented Mr. Miller's own paper, and it did considerable newspaper work, as well. It also loaned a tank for a lobby display, and this was set up alongside of a cutout of the comedian in a bath tub, the latter loaned by a plumbing concern in return for a credit card.

Merchant Support Paid Opening Ads

Announcing the opening of the Capitol Theatre, West Duluth, Minn., George Olson modestly announced "Two important events Saturday! The total eclipse of the sun and the Grand Opening of the Capitol Theatre."

Of course you cannot have an eclipse to open your house with, but you can copy another good idea. He took a three column down the page and laid off most of the cost of the space to nine co-advertisers. Three of these were the firms supplying the sheet metal work, the decorations and electric installation. The others were nearby merchants, three of them "one door east of the Capitol" and the others nearby.

Million dollar houses can get the various supply concerns to come in on a special section. Mr. Olson worked the same scheme scaled to fit his situation, and he gets just as much, in proportion.

He has promised to send in his regular ads when he gets started and we imagine they are going to be interesting. Certainly he makes a capital start.

Helped Inferno

H. C. Farley attributes much of the added business on The Inferno at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., to an effective lobby display.

He draped the side walls in black and in the center he placed a lithographic cutout with the edges flame shaped, with a home made devil on either side. A red spot was thrown on the cutout and all of the lobby lights were in red.

The layout seemed to hold unusual attention and exerted a visible pull in that many who stopped merely to look decided to go in, and went up to the ticket office.

Rejuvenated

Al Birch, who left the Paramount Theatre, Denver, to become a Paramounteer, has dug out an old stunt that has been working all through the Denver sector in spite of its antiquity. It's so old that it is new again.

This is nothing more than the old dissected portrait idea, but as Birch works it, the paper prints only one section a day and you have to get the paper for six days to complete the picture.

Working it this way gets better co-operation from the papers than the complete in one issue angle, and generally makes the front page in the smaller places and even the cities. It has done wonderful work for Valentino in A Sainted Devil.

In Spanish

Because of the large Spanish population in Los Angeles, a special one sheet in that language was gotten out for Bandolero at the California Theatre, playing up the bull fight. It was a fine stunt only Ray Coffin is the victim of the printer who advertised a "Lorrida" instead of "Corrida." The latter means bullfight, the former doesn't mean anything.

A GOOD TWO PLANE DISPLAY FROM DALLAS ON THE TORNADO

This was worked at the Capitol Theatre and made a very striking appeal, though the value of the lighting is not apparent in the reproduction, and the clever lighting was what enhanced the value of the poster cutout which was the foundation.

Locomotive Front Was a Good Seller

There is not much to this display of the Washington Theatre, Bay City, Mich., on The Signal Tower, but it did a lot of selling, because the house planned to get the most out of what it could afford.

The locomotive front is cut out of a piece of compo board. It is all flat, but the perspective is well done. An automobile spot was set in for a headlight and this was slanted down and pointed slightly to one side, so that it illuminated a spot on the lobby floor just off the lines of travel. In this spot a new sales message was painted in water color each day, such as "Coming, The Signal Tower," "Watch for The Signal Tower" and similar lines. This ran for ten days in advance and during the showing, and since it was new in Bay City, it commanded a lot of attention.

Three railroad lanterns and a semaphore were also used to create a railroad atmosphere. In front of the house two switches were set up near the curb line, these and the lanterns being loaned by the Michigan Central. The railroad further collaborated by supplying the house with the names of all local employees and to these a letter was addressed which was delivered by the official railroad service at no cost to the house.

J. O. Brooks, the Universal exploiteer in Detroit, collaborated with the house in the display.

Used Good Stunts On Griffith Play

Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, supplemented a heavy regular campaign on Isn't Life Wonderful with four special stunts.

One was a light blue card, about 6½ by 9 inches, printed in a deeper blue. This started off with "If we could use a larger card and owned the whole post office system, to tell you about Griffith's Isn't Life Wonderful, we would find ourselves at a loss for words to express the unusualness of this wonderful photo-drama." It went on to tell about the stars and the play. Well below this section was printed in a light italic, "Isn't Life Wonderful will be shown week of January 12." Pulling the play date off by itself in this fashion gained unusual emphasis where a run-in of the date would have been passed over. The left hand side of the card carried a stock cut and two press comments. Two thousand of these were mailed to a special list.

A smaller card, about 2 by 3½ inches, was printed in visiting card style, with the title where the name would be. In the lower right hand corner was the house and date and over at the left "D. W. Griffith's latest success." These were handed to departing patrons.

A laundry herald was arranged for and a bank overprinted its pay envelopes (which were given to the bank's business clients) with the title, house and date.

The prologue was a tableau reproduction of The Angelus, the two models coming to life for a song.

Back Again

The old Gloria Swanson calling card idea was revived by the West Coast's California Theatre, Los Angeles, only this time the card purported to be that of Mae Busch and the message asked the recipient to see her at the California in Frivolous Sal.

Another change was the distribution. Instead of being put into houses, the janitors of office buildings were paid to put one on each desk while the offices were being cleaned, the clerks and bosses getting them in the morning.

Instead of cartoon or lithograph passengers, the perambulator for Horator's Temple Theatre, Toledo, showed scenes from The Fast Worker, and made for greater interest in the play. A. J. Sharrick, Universalist, thought it out.

Posted White Way For Sainted Devil

Repetition was the basis of Roy S. Smart's campaign on A Sainted Devil when it came to the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

He had several hundred cards printed in black on yellow giving star and title with "Noble—Now." These were punched at the upper end so that two of them could be tied together over the lamp posts marking Anniston's White Way, which runs for several blocks.

The long lines of cards on both sides of the street drove home the title, and a special man was detailed to replace any cards which might be torn down. It was so effective that some of the merchants complained to the Mayor that the posts were being used for an advertising stunt, but the Mayor knew that most of the merchants were with Smart and no official action was taken.

About 200 of the cards were tacked in other localities to supplement this display, but the White Way did most of the selling.

This is good for a one-time stunt, but make certain that a majority of the merchants are with you. It won't pay to get the merchants against the house, and Mr. Smart was careful to get the consent of the majority before he decided upon the stunt.

Advertising Andy

As a result of the test campaign in Kansas City on the Gump comedies, the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company has tied in with Universal on special advertising for the Gump crackers put out by the concern. This includes street car and subway advertising, already in operation, special posters and missionary work on the part of all salesmen to induce retailers to co-operate with theatres handling this series.

On the theatre side Universal has issued a special sheet on the co-operative stunts. Got yours?

The Old Pump

Jazzy Chatter is a Strong Seller

This sort of an advertisement would be poison to a high grade drama, but the New Theatre, Baltimore, sells Buster Keaton in The Navigator in the right way, for the jazz talk will in itself suggest a good comedy, and we believe that The Navigator has raised regiments of new friends for Keaton. Elaborate cut will not do much for this play. We think that this cartoon style figure is all that is required, though the large diving suit cut has sold tickets by the pound. Generally, however, this cut is plenty large enough if it is backed by the right sort of talk. There is nothing particularly humorous in any of these lines. You don't laugh at them. It is merely that the form of exuberant expression gives you the idea that the picture the theatre is talking about must be funny or the style of talk would not be used. It's a nice example of matching the style of the offering, and we like this better than some of the larger spaces with several times as much argument. If this won't sell, more talk will not help.

Words Won

Playing The Covered Wagon for a return, J. H. McLaughlin, of the Franklin Theatre, Tampa, Fla., felt that it would take a special stunt to put over the second run. He offered 25 passes to the show for the largest lists of words made up from the letters in the title, and got hundreds of replies.

Business was much better in both attendance and receipts than he had hoped for.

Gets Good Result With a Fancy Cut

As usual, the Princess Theatre, Toledo, forms its advertisement on The Garden of Weeds from the Paramount plan book cut for that space. This cut carries considerably more detail than the average Paramount drawing, possibly it will mud up on a fast run or with poor ink, but with average good work it is one of the best things to come from Mr. Bootsford's department for a long time. It is not only nice art work, but the artist has caught the suggestion of the title; which is more to the point, for a fairly poor drawing that means something is better than the best "nice" drawing. When you can get this grade of workmanship in a cut that really carries a suggestion to the reader, it would be gilding the lily to seek to add to the effect, and the Princess wisely adds the comedy and prices and lets it go at that. If we had the space to spare, we would give this a two column reproduction, but we think it will stand up even in a single column space.

Pictorial Layout Found Useful Here

Very often pictorial layouts are a waste of space, but the Garden Theatre, Balitmore, found pictures useful on the play which led to the production of Shore Acres. The money Hearne made on the lesser circuits with Hearts of Oak led to the presentation of the play with which his name is linked. The two scenes help each other, for the polar picture sells the patron who likes adventure while the love scene will get in the romantically inclined. The space is only a three fives, but by holding the drawing to light lines, the heavy title is given a display not to be gained from double the width in straight type setting without white margin. This is just a case of putting in a white margin but using it for a lightly sketched picture. If you can get good results, drawing can be used to advantage, but with a poor grade of work the plain white is to be preferred. The Garden drawing is good enough to justify its use. It's a very pretty display, and yet its good looks are merely incidental to good selling, which is by far the more important. It does not show in the cut, but that ornamental border is composed of oak leaves.

without putting in so much scenery that the main figures are rendered unimportant. A pair of tree trunks at the top, a banana and a seascape at the bottom and you have the whole idea with a minimum of drawing. All of the interest goes to the figure of the exotic girl and you can guess that the story is going to be interesting, if you like that type of story, as most persons seem to. The use of an overheavy top like detracts a little from the display value of the title, and without anything to fight, that line would have been just as prominent in a smaller face. This is largely a detail, yet the details help. The general effect of this display is very good. It is from the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore.

Builds up a Space by Combining Cuts

This is a rather interesting example of a fabricated cut when cut material of the exact size desired is not convenient. It comes from the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore. This really is a two column costume cut placed against the top of a three column title cut. Baltimore theatres seem to feel that they cannot make money with an attraction unless the Sunday space is twice as deep as it is wide. We don't know who brought this idea in, but you seldom see a square space and practically never a space wider than its depth, save in the third run houses. The Thief of Bagdad cuts are mostly supplied to be worked up square, so there was no cut to meet this demand. The simple expedient of putting a two on top of the three was used to gain the extension. The effect would have been about twice as good had the square side of the left hand side of the character cut been filed down to let the head dress mark the edge of the cut. This would have taken only a moment, and then the cut would not have presented the square edge which was designed to fit it to a two column space. A better effect would have been gained had the three column cut been raised to the top of the space, above the signature, which is where it properly belongs. Then a signature could have been used in a smaller size near the bottom, with the character dropping all the way down the space to the bottom rule. The right side has to rest against the rule, as does the bottom, but a few strokes of a file would have softened the left hand edge into a presentable cut instead of what is now merely a makeshift. Of course Fairbanks in this really fine fairy play does not depend upon the appearance of a cut to make sales. The name or the play will sell without reference to the cut. It is merely that care in these little things will redound to the credit of the house. People will look at this patchwork and feel that there is something wrong. It will not look right, even though they may not realize why, and the sentiment will be more against the house than the play. Some theatres make you feel that they must be real regular places of entertainment because they do things so well. This is more than a bit sloppy.

A TWO AND A THREE

Fairbanks Farewell Particularly Good

The Loew houses in Washington, D. C., handle white space in their advertisements with unusual skill, but even they do not often get as nice an effect as this third week announcement for The Thief of Bagdad, even though the cut is too fine a screen to give good results. The cut is almost a total loss, save for the outline, and yet it helps the display and gives prominence to the announcement of the conclusion of the run. The space is only 90 lines by 3, not a large display, and yet it gets as much attention as would the average half page, thanks to the nice arrangement. This advertisement always runs with the sister house, set in the same style and the two combine to give to each double display for the price paid, since the two sections are regarded as a whole and the combination drops twelve or thirteen inches. That eight point announcement, isolated in this space, is just as prominent as would be a fourteen or even an eighteen point announcement set from side to side. It is rather short, and yet it is so well and appreciatively written that no greater effect could be gained by adding a couple of hundred words. It is not so much that this announcement is laudatory as that it carries the ring of convincing enthusiasm. That counts for more in a holdover advertisement than a whole pile of adjectives. About the only improvement to be made would be to move the top line, announcing the third week, to about eighteen points above the star and title combination. It rides a little too close for best display. We like the general layout better than that for the second week, though here the cuts come out very much better, both the line and the halftone. There is more vigor to this layout, and the star gets a better line than in the third week announcement. Both are good examples of the work of these theatres, but by and large we think that the larger proportion of white space makes for a better emphasis than the cut material in the second week display. It would be difficult to find fault with either.

THE SECOND WEEK DISPLAY

Automobile Show is a Style Show Rival

Style shows can be run four times a year, but the automobile show is best about the time the new models come out. Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, had one lately that offered a new idea. He displayed the cars on a revolving turntable, to show the bus from every angle. It also facilitated getting the cars on and off the stage, since they could be turned without trouble. The table was turned by a cable and capstan and the movement, necessarily slow, was just right for the display of the cars.

To make it lively, the cars were occupied by girls in sport suits supplied by a local dealer. Live local automobile agencies and the clothing man bore all the expense, which included the hiring of a six piece jazz orchestra, and moreover they used their mailing lists to send out announcements to owners and prospects, while the clothing man gave two windows to the display of other clothes germane to the idea.

All McGee had to do was to bank the extra money and say "thanks."

"My Wife and I"

Sam Warner Asserts New Irene Rich Feature Is "Marvelous"

Sam L. Warner, who has been in Los Angeles for several weeks while his brothers came East, attended a pre-view of "My Wife and I," the Harriet Beecher Stowe novel just completed by the Warners. He was so enthusiastic at the way the picture was received by the audience and theatre management that he sent the following telegram to the New York office:

"Just pre-viewed 'My Wife and I,' and my personal opinion is that this marvelous picture has all the things an audience will like that it is possible to get into one production. The picture is fast moving with a heart interest story and if the public don't like this one, then I don't know a picture when I see it. It has class, bigness, a marvelous cast and wonderful direction. This is an audience picture if there ever was one."

Two "Pacemakers" Finished

Highest commendation has been given the first two episodes of F. B. O.'s new two-reel series of featurettes, "The Pacemakers," from the stories of H. C. Witwer and co-starring George O'Hara and Albert Vaughn. Wesley Ruggles is directing the series from the scenarios by Beatrice Van.

Sport events form an outstanding feature of every episode. A ring fight takes place in the first episode and a football game in the second. A cross-country race will feature the third episode.

Banner Sales

Banner Productions, Inc., announces the sale of twenty-six Bert Green Cross-Word-Puzzle reels to Ideal Film, of London. The brokers who acted in the transaction were Milton Cohen and Sidney Garrett, of Interglobe. The Cross-Word-Puzzle reels are a novelty of the season.

Canadian Theatre Owners Endorse Vitagraph Films

UNSOLICITED endorsements from three influential Canadian exhibitors, testifying to the superiority of Vitagraph product and satisfaction with Vitagraph service have been received by A. S. Clatworthy, the Company's Branch Manager in Winnipeg.

H. A. Bercovich, Managing Director of the New Rex Theatre, Regina, Saskatchewan, wrote:

"I have just finished the most successful run ever known in the New Rex Theatre, standing out crowds of people every night and turning away hundreds during the showing of 'Captain Blood,' which, in my opinion, is not only one of the greatest pictures ever produced but one of the most magnetic box office attractions. 'Captain Blood' hit Regina like a bombshell. We put it over with a big exploitation campaign and acted on several of your very appropriate suggestions. Our matinees were more than double our ordinary business, and at night, as stated above, we were compelled to turn hundreds away. We were very sorry indeed it was impossible for us to hold the picture for a longer run.

"You have something to be proud of in 'Captain Blood' and every exhibitor who plays it can step on his advertising, realizing that he has one of the greatest attractions ever known."

From Calgary, Alta., Ray Tubman, managing director of the Palace Theatre, wired: "'The Clean Heart,' opened today against very strong opposition, including 'The Sea Hawk' and 'Hot Water,' and, notwithstanding, crossed within No. 13 of our best previous record night. Turned them away. With pictures such as this you cannot fail, and we congratulate you. Best of all, crowd who saw 'The Clean Heart' most enthusiastic. Could not resist advising you as we knew you would be interested."

No company ever received a more enthusiastic letter than this one from R. J. Richardson, of the Treherne, Man. Theatre, who also is publisher of the Treherne Times:

"It wouldn't be quite fair to let another month slip by without expressing my appreciation of Vitagraph productions and Vitagraph service. Truly we do best with Vitagraph pictures and I am here to say that Vitagraph service is without a peer. During last year we gave Vitagraph about 25 per cent. of our business, and among the fifteen or twenty productions there was not a flop or disappointment. In every instance we had our advertising well in advance and in liberal quantities.

"It is a real pleasure to know that when 'this week's picture' is coming from Vitagraph it is coming, right on time and sure to please our patrons. I have read your 'Bread and Butter' bulletin with considerable interest. That was the first intimation I had that Vitagraph was not a party to the unreasonable and unfair business of selling advertising outright. This new scheme of the exchanges will work a real hardship to the small-time exhibitor, who is foolish enough to tolerate it.

"I have figured that our usual appropriation for advertising and our express charges (eighty miles from Winnipeg) would amount each week to more than our film rental, and in addition, the inconvenience and worthlessness of unmounted paper. You may depend on it, one other exchange only will share our business with Vitagraph when our present contracts have expired. The exchange I mention is an independent concern like Vitagraph, and it starts with a 'U.'

"Vitagraph press sheets have the dope—take it from a newspaper man. Your trailer service too, is a great help to us. On the whole, after two years of buying film service for a small town circuit, I have found that we can't do better than Vitagraph, and I thank you."

Vitagraph's Auto Models Vie with the Old Timers

THE New York Auto Show, which attracted thousands to admire the latest models, would have been even more interesting if it had been possible to show the automobiles used by Vitagraph in Hollywood a few weeks ago. A comparison of those cars with the modern machines would have been eloquent testimony to the remarkable progress made in the auto industry in a few years.

The machines assembled by Vitagraph were of the vintage of the early 1900s and were used in the picturization of "Pampered Youth," David Smith's production of Booth Tarkington's "The Magnificent Ambersons." The times of which Mr. Tarkington wrote and which are represented in the film were those "rare old, fair old golden days" before Mr. Volstead thought of running for Congress and when Mr. Bryan was still a boy orator.

They were the days when, had cross word puzzles been the rage, and had the word "auto" come into use, the definition would have been "a word in four letters, meaning 'horseless carriage.' " As a matter of fact, "horseless carriage" was the only accepted designation.

One of the important characters in "Pampered Youth" is a mechanical genius who struggles hard to perfect a motor car that will run, and finally succeeds. To be faithful to the Tarkington story and the times it described, it was essential to bring together cars which actually were in use twenty-five or thirty years ago. Mr. Smith was put to his wit's end to obtain these.

After scouring the country, and corresponding with manufacturers, dealers and collectors in every part of the United States, he succeeded in collecting five primitive specimens, which bear about as much resemblance to the 1925 models as would the first type of steam engine to the most recently manufactured locomotive.

A catalogue of Vitagraph's horseless carriage show would contain descriptions, among other ancient exhibits, of two single cylinder Cadillac touring cars, one of 1904, the other of 1906 make, both passenger models. Yet older, perhaps the oldest car now in existence, was a 1902 Stevens-Duryea touring car, having gear transmission. It was a four passenger car, one couple facing the front and one the rear, but the hood could be so adjusted as to accommodate a third pair who would have been directly over the fender had the machine boasted such an accessory.

Another prize specimen was a 1906 model six cylinder Ford roadster, equipped with the motor which Barney Oldfield used in his famous "999" racer. It had planetary transmission and two speeds, but was innocent of top, windshield or any of the customary "extras" of today.

Possibly the most interesting find of all was a Healy electric enclosed cab, with front wheel drive and with steer brakes on one of the rear wheels, the driver and footman sitting in front in the open. There are only two of these cars now in America, the other one, it is understood, continuing in personal use by John D. Rockefeller.

Latest models in motor-driven fire apparatus were among the exhibits at the New York Auto Show. Such a section was, of necessity, missing from the Vitagraph show, for the reason that in the times it represented there were no motor fire engines. A thrilling scene in "Pampered Youth" is that in which a large apartment house burns, firemen and volunteer helpers making sensational rescues of occupants. Audiences will be treated to views of engines and trucks drawn by two and three horses, a spectacle outdoing the old Roman chariot races.

Mexico Plans Big Film

According to an announcement made in the "Mexican American" a publication of Mexico City, it is the plan of several leading citizens of Mexico to promote the production of a feature picture based on the romantic story of Montezuma, the Mexican Conqueror. The Mexican government, headed by President Calles and Foreign Minister Saenz, is interested and have approved plans submitted by Mark J. Trazivuk, the originator of the project.

United States Commercial Attache Alexander V. Dye, stationed in the City of Mexico, has written to the Department of Commerce at Washington, recommending that the department place the idea before American film producers and otherwise assist in its execution.

Warden Asks Showing

Head of New Jersey State Prison Wants "Capital Punishment" Screening

At the request of the warden of the New Jersey State Prison, in Trenton, B. P. Schulberg's production, "Capital Punishment," will be screened before the fifteen hundred inmates of that institution next week.

This showing, the first of its kind ever given in the New Jersey prison, is eliciting much interest in Trenton. It is the third special screening given "Capital Punishment." The picture has recently been shown at Sing Sing Prison and in the Assembly of the New York State Legislature, where a capital punishment abolition bill is up for consideration.

George Hackathorne, star of "Capital Punishment," will address the audience at the New Jersey Prison, as he did at Sing Sing.

"The Little French Girl"

Mario Majeroni Signed, Completing Cast For Paramount Picture

With the addition of Mario Majeroni for the part of "M. de Maubert," the cast for "The Little French Girl," recently started at the Long Island studio, is complete.

Majeroni, whose most recent appearance in a Paramount picture was with Bebe Daniels in "Argentine Love," will be one of a number of well-known players to be seen in support of Alice Joyce, Neil Hamilton, Mary Brian and Esther Ralston, who have the featured roles.

Others in the supporting cast are Maurice Cannon, Paul Doucet, Anthony Jowitt, Jane Jennings, Eleanor Mehnert, Julia Hurley and Mildred Ryan.

Critics Praise Special

New York City Writers Enthusiastic Over "Capital Punishment"

B. P. Schulberg's special production, "Capital Punishment," opened to large crowds at its Broadway premier in the Cameo Theatre last week. Business has been building steadily each day with the result that the management is holding the film indefinitely.

James P. Hogan directed "Capital Punishment" and the featured players include Clara Bow, George Hackathorne, Margaret Livingston, Elliott Dexter, Alex Francis, Mary Carr and Joseph Kilgour.

The metropolitan film critics unanimously endorsed the picture in terms of enthusiasm.

Print of "The Boomerang"

J. G. Bachmann, vice-president and distribution manager for B. P. Schulberg Productions, has received the first print of the new Schulberg special, "The Boomerang." This picture, to be released early in March, is first in importance on the Schulberg program for this year. It was filmed from David Belasco's play by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes and features Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith. Gasnier directed "The Boomerang."

Brenon Begins New Picture

Herbert Brenon began production on "A Little French Girl" yesterday at the Paramount Long Island studio. The latest addition to the cast is Julia Hurley, who will play the role of the gossipy old actress, Madame Dumont. Mary Brian, Alice Joyce, Esther Ralston, Neil Hamilton and Maurice Connon have the chief roles.

First National Removes Film

To Take "The Sea Hawk" Out of Service at the End of May

E. A. Eschmann, distribution manager for First National, has decided that "The Sea Hawk" shall be taken out of service at the end of the coming May.

Every exhibitor who has not shown this film and wishes to do so before the end of May will be given an opportunity to play it.

Mr. Eschmann and other First National executives believe that "The Sea Hawk" will do a better business between the present time and the end of May than it will during the summer and for that reason it was decided to take it out of service during the summer. It will be released for fresh runs starting in September.

"'The Sea Hawk' is too big a money maker for the exhibitor to play it during the excessively hot months of the year," said Mr. Eschmann. "It is better business for him and better business for First National to take it out of the market from June 1 to September 1 and take advantage of the bigger receipts which it will draw during the seasonable playing months. I have talked this matter over not only with our own executives and franchise holders but with many outside exhibitors and they have acknowledged the soundness of this policy which has been agreed upon."

Weber and Fields, in Studio, Renew Antics That Made Them Famous

Lew Fields, now appearing with Joe Weber in the picturization of "Friendly Enemies," has adopted (temporarily) Virginia Brown Faire, his leading lady, and when a visitor appears at the studio he points to Miss Faire and introduces her as "my daughter June."

Not to be outdone, Joe Weber trots out Jack Mulhall, and adds: "And this is my son William."

Several visitors have taken these introductions seriously and one elderly lady even told Miss Faire that she "resembled her father very much."

French "Ace" on Tour

Captain Nungesser Will Make Personal Appearances With "Sky Raider"

With the final cutting and titling of Captain Nungesser's first picture, "The Sky Raider," Associated Exhibitors announce that they will send the famous French Ace on a personal-appearance tour over the country.

The tour will be conducted as a road show in every possible way. Nungesser will carry his staff of mechanics and two planes. In addition to his appearance at the theatre, the aviator will do sky advertising and staunt flying. According to the program, the flyer will do his air thrills in the mornings and make his appearances at the theatres in the afternoons and evenings. In addition to his staff of mechanics, he will carry a manager and an exploitation man who will travel in advance of the attraction.

March 12th has been fixed as the starting date of the tour which will begin at Charlotte, N. C. The tour will extend up to September, when the Ace will return to make another production.

George B. Seitz at Miami

Patheserial, "Sunken Silver," Has Allene Ray in Lead

Four weeks of intensive "shooting" by the George B. Seitz Company, engaged in the filming of the forthcoming Patheserial titled "Sunken Silver," finds this newest of Pathe chapter productions well beyond the halfway mark at Miami, Fla.

The story is an adaptation by Frank Leon Smith from the novel, "Black Caesar's Clan," by Albert Payson Terhune, and is being produced under the personal supervision of the prominent serial director, George B. Seitz. It is scheduled for release May 10th and will be in ten chapters of two reels to a chapter.

"Bad Company" Premiere

Associated Exhibitors Picture Opens At N. Y. Piccadilly March 7th

Associated Exhibitors announce this week that "Bad Company," first St. Regis picture on the Associated program, will have prerelease showing at the Piccadilly Theatre, beginning March 7th, for an indefinite run.

The production carries Conway Tearle and Madge Kennedy in the featured roles, supported by Charles Emmett Mack, Bigelow Cooper, Lucille Lee Stewart and others.

"Bad Company," as a story, was adapted from the John C. Brownell novelette that ran in a recent issue of the "Everybody's Magazine" under the title of 'The Ultimate Good."

Inspiration Buys "Shore Leave"

Inspiration Pictures, Inc., announces the purchase of the screen rights from David Belasco of Hubert Osborne's "Shore Leave," for Richard Barthelmess. "Shore Leave" had a long Broadway run with Frances Starr in the stellar role and James Rennie as the sailor hero. "Shore Leave" will be adapted to fit the requirements of a male star and will become, in fact, the story of a gob.

Five Two-Reel Productions in Educational's March List

FIVE two-reel productions, featuring comedy stars of exceptional box-office value, will form the mainstay of Educational Film Exchanges' program of releases for March. The two-reel subjects will be surrounded by a program of twelve single-reel releases, consisting of comedy, drama and novelty subjects.

The two-reel subjects will include one release each of the Bobby Vernon, Hamilton and Walter Hiers comedy series and a Mermaid and Christie comedy. Walter Hiers, Bobby Vernon, Lloyd Hamilton, Jimmie Adams and Lige Conley will be seen in starring parts in the two-reel subjects.

Lloyd Hamilton will be seen in "Half a Hero," a Hamilton comedy, the second week of the month. Hamilton will appear, minus his familiar make-up, in one of the big sequences of the picture and will be seen as a traffic cop. He will be supported by Dorothy Seastrom, his beautiful, blonde, leading lady. The picture was directed by Fred Hibbard and is one of the last to be made by this well-known comedy director before his death a few weeks ago.

"Two Cats and a Bird," one of Earl Hurd Pen and Ink Vaudeville series, a comedy in cartoon, will complete the week. "Props," the character created by Hurd for this series, will be the central character in this comedy-subject.

"Great Guns," the two-reel Bobby Vernon comedy, will be the first two-reel comedy on the month's schedule. Vernon will be seen in one of his fastest and funniest comedies to date, and a novel twist is added to the picture in the plot which lands Vernon on one of the targets of the Pacific Fleet, with the big, fighting ships at target practice.

The single-reel pictures for the week will include "Welcome Danger," a Cameo Comedy, with Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance, the popular Cameo team, supported by Eddie Nelson, the well-known vaudeville performer who has entered pictures. So much promise was shown by Nelson in the making of this Cameo Comedy that he will be later starred in Mermaid Comedies.

"Our Six-Legged Friends," one of the series of microscopic pictures produced for Principal Pictures by Louis H. Tolhurst, will also appear on the first week's schedule. Familiar insects are studied under the ultra-powerful microscope and many interesting and entertaining features of the tiny creatures will be shown.

The third week will see "Hello, Hollywood," a Mermaid Comedy with Lige Conley featured, forming the backbone of the program. This comedy will present one of the biggest comedy casts ever gathered together on the stages of the Fine Arts Studios, for Lloyd Hamilton, Lee Moran, Cliff Bowes, Virginia Vance, Otto Fries, Jack Lloyd and many other leading and featured comedians will be seen in the various sequences of the comedy. "High Hopes," one of the single-reel Cameo Comedies with Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance, will also be released this week.

The week of March 15 also marks the release of the first of a new series of three single-reel subjects lately acquired for distribution by Educational. This is a series of "Fables In Color" which will present three fantasies done in excellent color-photography. "The Voice of the Nightingale" will be the first release of the series.

Jimmie Adams will be seen in "Love Goofy," another of the fast-action Christie Comedies, as the two-reel subject for the week of February 22. Adams will be supported by Kathleen Myers, Billie Bletcher, Molly Malone, Eddie Baker and Lincoln Plumer.

Two Warner Pictures

Added to List of Completed Product for New Season

With two more pictures completed this week and the last three nearing completion, Warner Bros. will start production on their new season's program within the next ten days.

The productions to which "finis" was written in the last two days are "Eve's Lover" and "Tracked in the Snow Country."

"Eve's Lover" is from the novel by Mrs. W. K. Clifford, adapted for the screen by Darryl Francis Zanuck, and was directed by Roy Del Ruth. Bert Lytell and Irene Rich are featured. Supporting them are Clara Bow, Willard Louis, John Steppling, Arthur Hoyt and Lew Harvey.

"Tracked in the Snow Country" has as its star Rin-Tin-Tin. The story and scenario is by Edward Meagher, formerly a Boston dramatic critic, and the direction is by Herman Raymaker. In the cast are June Marlowe, David Butler, Mitchell Lewis, Charles Sellon and Princess Lea.

This picture is said to have unusual atmosphere in that every foot of it was filmed in the snow country, and will be exploited as an ideal summer attraction.

The Ernst Lubitsch productions, "Kiss Me Again," "How Baxter Butted In," directed by William Beaudine, and "The Woman Hater," adapted from the "Eleventh Virgin," directed by James Flood, will be completed within the next few days.

Weight to Start Another

F. Harmon Weight, director of "On the Stroke of Three" and "Drusilla with a Million" for Associated Arts Corporation, will shortly resume work under the banner of that recently formed organization. Weight is being congratulated for the splendid manner in which he directed "Drusilla with a Million," the Elizabeth Cooper novel which will be one of the outstanding features on F. B. O.'s new season program. Mary Carr, Kenneth Harlan and Priscilla Bonner have the leading roles.

"Tides of Passion"

New Title for J. Stuart Blackton-Mae Marsh-Vitagraph Production

"Tides of Passion" is the title finally bestowed by Vitagraph on the production now being made in California by J. Stuart Blackton, in which Mae Marsh is starred.

Despite the popularity with the reading public of Basil King's best-seller, "In the Garden of Charity," from which the picture is adapted, the new name is regarded as better fitted for photoplay purposes.

It is probable that most persons who have not read the book would regard "Charity" as the common noun meaning "benevolence," whereas in this case it is the name of the heroine.

Miss Marsh plays the part of Charity, and declares it is more to her liking than any other role she ever had.

Scott Engages Gibson

Lester F. Scott, Jr., producer of the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt series of high-class Westerns, distributed by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corp., has engaged Tom Gibson to handle the megaphone on the second Buddy Roosevelt series, season 1925-26, preparations for which have already been under way for some time.

This announcement was made at the offices of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation early this week, following the receipt of a wire from the coast. Richard Thorpe, who directed a majority of the widely popular Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., attractions of the current series, is now engaged in completing the final features, starring Buffalo Bill, Jr., two of which are still to be delivered to Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation.

"A Royal Flush"

The title finally selected for the latest Spat Family comedy, completed last week, is "A Royal Flush." The story of the picture is based on a mythical kingdom and features the famous Spat trio—Frank Butler, Laura Roessing and Sidney D'Albrook. The production was made under the direction of Jay A. Howe.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS' essay into light comedy in the motion picture "New Toys" from the play by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Herbert Milton Gropper is showing at the Strand Theatre this week and has served to give that popular dramatic actor a new reputation—that of a comedian of ease and authority.

The New York reviewers found it one of his most entertaining pictures and predicts that if he wished, he could become as popular a comedian as he is a dramatic actor.

Louella O. Parsons in the New York American said:—"I take back what I said about Richard Barthelmess one time, namely, that he had no sense of humor. After seeing him as Will Webb, the husband, I know that he has both a fine sense of humor and an understanding of how comedy should be played. . . . If you have never laughed in your life you will laugh at Clifton Webb doing the dance with Spring flowers in his hair. Heretofore John Robertson has made some of the best dramas on the screen, and here today he gives us the most amusing comedy. I enjoyed 'New Toys' and I believe it holds an appeal for many persons for the reason that it not only contains real comedy, but a love story that is of interest, to many people who are tired of lurid melodramas and sensation dramas."

Irene Thirer in the Daily News: "One of those airy, laugh-enticing comedy dramas which chases away the blues and made its audience oblivious to the raindrops beating furiously outside the Mark Strand Theatre yesterday. Barthelmess fans will flock to see this picture. Dick is a good actor and lives up to this part."

New York Evening Post: "Richard Barthelmess in 'New Toys' proves a comedy of the first water. No less capable in comedy is his wife, Mary Hay, who as Queen Elizabeth sets the audience off at a merry pace. A smoother, more balanced action could not be obtained."

Frank Vreeland in the New York Telegram: "The first time Barthelmess has played comedy in half a dozen years and yet he knows his way about very deftly."

Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune: "'New Toys' is far more entertaining on the screen than it was on the stage. Richard Barthelmess proves that he is a delightful comedian and Mary Hay and Clifton Webb share the honors with him. 'New Toys' seems to us the perfect cinema comedy. All of this sounds like the sort of thing the zealous press agent is wont to write, but when you see 'New Toys' you'll realize that the half has not been told. 'New Toys' is delightful."

Regina Cannon of the New York Evening Graphic: "'New Toys' is a bully good picture. The audience was in an uproar of laughter throughout the picture. I enjoyed seeing Dick in something that gives his talents full opportunity and he makes the most of the chance in 'New Toys.' You won't make any mistake in seeing 'New Toys' and if you like good, clean comedy, you will agree with us that Dick is simply great in this his greatest picture."

Six New First Nationals; Four Ready for Cutters

SIX new productions for First National release are either already in work or about ready to start at West Coast studios.

Corinne Griffith started on Hartley Manner's play, "The National Anthem," last week under the direction of Al Santelle. In the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Harrison Ford, E. J. Ratcliffe, Charles Lane and Edgar Norton. The role of the French dancer remains to be filled.

Frank Lloyd expects to get started this week on his film version of Rex Beach's novel, "Wings of Chance." He has selected the locations for exterior shots and has added to his already fine cast Tully Marshall, Fred Sullivan, Fred Koehler and Cap Anderson. Negotiations are about completed with a popular feminine screen star for the role of Rouletta.

Edwin Carewe is ready for photography to start, if it has not already begun, on "Heirs Apparent," from Sir Philip Gibbs' novel. Lloyd Hughes and Mary Akin have been signed for important roles and other well known players will soon be announced as members of his excellent cast.

M. C. Levee has started production on "Just A Woman," with Al Cummings directing.

Schulberg Buys Four New Stories For His Program

FOUR more stories, which will be filmed during 1925-26, were purchased this week by B. P. Schulberg Productions to complete its program of eighteen features for the coming season. They are:

"With This Ring," a recent Saturday Evening Post serial by Fanny Heaslip Lea, just published in book form. This is a novel of modern marriage and will be one of the most important on the Schulberg list.

"Studies In Wives," a best-selling novel, by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes.

"Ruthless Women," a story of Americans in Paris, written directly for the screen.

These stories round out the material to be secured by B. P. Schulberg for the coming twelve months.

Other literary properties to be produced during the new season are "Shenandoah," the American stage-play; "Parisian Love," by F. Oakley Howard; "Horses and Women;" "Dancing Days," by J. J. Bell; "Exclusive Rights," by Evelyn Campbell; "Lew Tyler's Wives," by Wallace Irwin; "The Aristocrat," by Larry Evans; "The Worst Woman," by Larry Evans; "The Romance Of a Million Dollars," by Elizabeth Dejeans; "Shopworn," by Patricia Wetherill; "Eden's Fruit;" "The Other Woman's Story," by Peggy Gaddis; "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," by Marie B. Wentworth James, and "Open That Door," by Ewart Adamson.

Abramson Gives Studio Party

Ivan Abramson, author and director of "Lying Wives," heralded the return of Clara Kimball Young to the screen with a studio party given to trade-paper and newspaper men at the Tec-Art Studio, where the film production is being made.

New York newspaper critics and dramatic editors, along with members of the film trade papers, met, besides Miss Young, other artists appearing in Abramson's new photoplay. These included Madge Kennedy, Edna Murphy, Richard Bennett, Niles Welch and Barney Sherry. Buddy Harris, a three-year-old film prodigy, and "Bee" Jackson, the famous Broadway dancer, entertained the guests. Lita Lopez, Porto Rican beauty, who is also a member of the "Lying Wives" cast, was present.

Neil Hamilton's Role

Neil Hamilton will play a featured role in Herbert Brenon's production of "The Little French Girl" for Paramount.

"Her Father's Daughter" to Be F. B. O. Feature Picture

FOLLOWING the overwhelming success and great financial returns on "A Girl of the Limberlost," both in this country and abroad, Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., has purchased the screen rights to another Gene Stratton-Porter novel, "Her Father's Daughter," and shooting will commence shortly, according to an official announcement by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president and general manager of the company, who consummated the deal with the Estate of Gene Stratton-Porter, Inc.

"Her Father's Daughter" ranks with "A Girl of the Limberlost" and "Freckles," as one of Mrs. Porter's most widely read novels. The sales of the book total 582,451 to date. It was written in 1921, three years before Mrs. Porter's death. The popularity of this author's work is attested to in the total sales of her books, which aggregate over 9,000,000 copies.

"Her Father's Daughter" is a romance of California and is published in book form by Doubleday, Page & Company. James Leo Meehan, son-in-law of the late author and director of "A Girl of the Limberlost," which F. B. O. released some months ago, is at work on the continuity. Mr. Meehan also will direct "Her Father's Daughter." He is searching for a wholesome, attractive girl, who is typical of America's clean young womanhood, to play the lead. As soon as this girl is found, shooting will commence immediately on the F. B. O. lot.

J. I. Schnitzer, in commenting on the purchase of this most popular novel, said:

"F. B. O. is in the market for clean, wholesome stories and novels. The salacious, the vulgar and the suggestive will never find a place on the F. B. O. program. Despite the contentions of some of our producers that dirt makes money, we have but to look back at the plays and motion pictures which won instantaneous success with the public and made money for the producers and distributors. 'Over the Hill,' 'Humoresque' and our own 'A Girl of the Limberlost' made screen history, because they were clean, wholesome stories, teeming with heart interest and human appeal."

William De Mille Cuts Titles

Action Pictures Prominent on Latest F. B. O. Schedule

ACTION stories in outdoor locations, with a plentiful sprinkling of comedy, will have an outstanding part in F. B. O.'s schedule for the coming season. Recent contracts provide for a series of eight pictures, starring Fred Thompson, on the second one of which, "That Devil Quemado!," the big western star is already engaged. In all of these Thomson's white charger "Silver King" will have an important part.

Eight productions starring Bob Custer, called the Texas Ranger series, also will feature the program. These will be made by Jesse Goldburg, who is now at work on "Lightning Speed."

Lefty Flynn will be starred in a series of eight semi-outdoor attractions along the lines of those in which the late Wallie Reid achieved fame. These will be produced by Harry Garson, who has just completed a series of four westerns for F. B. O. starring the former Yale gridiron star.

Yakima Canutt, world champion rider, also has been added to the F. B. O. galaxy of western features. Ben Wilson will make a series of eight productions starring Yakima Canutt. He has just finished the first, "Scar Hanan."

Action will be a vital element in the new series of eight Dick Talmadge productions to be made for F. B. O. and in the H. C. Witwer prize two-reel series, "The Pacemakers," in which George O'Hara and Alberta Vaughn are being co-starred.

Evelyn Brent in Radio Story

A radio melodrama, as yet untitled, will be the next starring vehicle for Evelyn Brent for Film Booking Offices, according to B. P. Fineman, general manager of the F. B. O. studios. Special scenic effects are being devised by Art Director Frank Ormston and one of the biggest exploitation campaigns ever put out by F. B. O. will be developed under the general supervision of Nat. G. Rothstein.

B. P. Fineman at Palm Springs

B. P. Fineman is spending a week's vacation at Palm Springs, Cal., resting from the arduous labors incident to general supervision of F. B. O.'s production activities at the F. B. O. studios in Hollywood. He was accompanied by Mrs. Fineman, known to the screen as Evelyn Brent. On her return to the studios next week, Miss Brent will begin work on a new melodrama, "The Face on the Air," a radio story by J. Grub Alexander.

"Dante's Inferno" Smashes Records at Shea's, Buffalo

WITH three records smashed following an exploitation campaign in which a wide variety of stunts were put across, "Dante's Inferno" has been the most talked of picture that has played Buffalo in a long time.

The following new records were hung up by the Fox special which played Shea's Hippodrome during the week of February 8th.

A new record for gross receipts Sunday, February 8th.

A new record for week of Lincoln's Birthday.

The gross receipts on Lincoln's Birthday exceeded by $400.00 the receipts taken in at the house on Lincoln's Birthday, 1923, which up to that time held the house record.

About a month preceding the engagement at Shea's Hippodrome, a list of 10,000 names of Buffalo residents was sent by special representatives to Europe and from various countries on the Continent post cards were mailed to Buffalo that called attention to the forthcoming presentation of Dante's Inferno at Shea's Hippodrome, and the messages on the cards were written in Polish, German, French and Italian.

The week preceding the engagement 10,000 heralds printed in Germany 10,000 in Italian and 10,000 in Polish were distributed in Buffalo. Advertisements were carried in the Polish, German and Italian newspapers in addition to the regular advertising done by Shea.

On Sunday, February 8th, the Buffalo newspapers carried special stories in practically every department from the "telegraph to the sporting page along with unusually large spreads in the rotogravure sections. Seldom have Buffalo newspapers given greater cooperation toward the exploitation of any picture.

One outstanding exploitation stunt, was the hanging in the Council Chamber of the Buffalo City Hall, a large oil painting of an undraped woman and across the top of the painting was the question—"Is Buffalo Going to Hell?" This picture was planted just a few minutes before the council meeting and great consternation prevailed when the members of the board assembled for their regular meeting. After considerable discussion, Mayor Schwab directed a sergeant-at-arms to remove the picture from the Council Chamber, but he was unable to do so however before the members of the Board discovered that the painting was one of several used in the exploitation of Dante's Inferno.

This story was such a sensation that the United Press carried it over its wires.

Another outstanding achievement and one which probably created more talk and brought greater results than any single thing done was the broadcasting of a story of Dante's Inferno, through the Federal Telegraph & Telephone Station WGR, atop the Stattler Hotel. On Wednesday evening, February 11th, this story was broadcasted by Gerald K. Rudulph, who linked his talk around Lincoln's Birthday and "Father and Son Week" which was observed in Buffalo at the time. Mr. Rudulph gave a fifteen minute talk which carried the suggestion that it was most appropriate that Dante's Inferno should be playing in Buffalo during "Father and Son Week." He cited the incident in the picture having to do with the dispute between the father and son and drew attention to the lesson taught by the Fox version of the Inferno.

Stories were carried in the newspapers in advance of the broadcasting and the record breaking day that followed leads the Fox people to believe that Mr. Rudulph succeeded in reaching practically everybody in Buffalo who has a radio. Due to the fact that station WGR gave Mr. Rudulph the benefit of all power possible it is estimated that his talk was heard by upwards of 200,000 people. He was given every consideration by Mark A. Rigg. Manager of the Federal Radio station WGR, and O. E. Becker, Chief Announcer of the station. A flashlight photograph was taken of the broadcasting stunt which shows Mr. Rudulph speaking into the microphone on the stage of Shea's Hippodrome and which also shows a scene of Dante's Inferno being projected on the screen.

Something New

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announce the release of a new series of novelty subjects, known as "Fables In Color." The first release will make its appearance on the program during the week of March 15.

The first release will be "The Voice of the Nightingale," a semi-dramatic subject in color. The process used is the latest development of the Pathe Censortium Cinema, of France.

The two other subjects of the series will be "Only a Country Lass" and "In the Spider's Web," both novelty subjects in color and clever animation of miniature subjects. The plots of both concern the adventures of a country girl in a large city and are fantastic to a degree.

A feature of the last two subjects will be subtitles in rhyme from the pen of the well-known publicist, Morrie Ryskind. These two subjects will be released at regular intervals following the release of "The Voice of the Nightingale."

"The Shock Punch"

Richard Dix, who played the leading role in "Men and Women," is getting ready for his next starring vehicle, "The Shock Punch," which Paul Sloane will direct for Paramount.

Diversity of Entertainment on Pathe Program, March 8

PATHE program for the week of March 8th offers wide diversity. Heading the comedy releases are a two-reeler, featuring Ralph Graves, under the title of "Bashful Jim," and an "Our Gang" comedy, "Dog Days."

In "Dog Days" much of the story can be gleaned from the title. Not unlike any other group of neighborhood rascals, "Our Gang" proceeds to collect every stray mongrel in sight and teach it tricks. The picture winds up with a riotous party at the home of Mary, a jaded society lady of ten. On the whole, Mickey, Farina, Jackie, Mary, Joe and Gene offer in this picture some of their best humor.

The Ralph Graves picture, made by Mack Sennett under the direction of Eddie Cline, is one of the first Sennett comedies for which Bryan Foy has done the "gagging." Bryan is the son of the famous stage comedian, Eddie Foy, and has made quite a name for himself in the field of screen-comedy. The production is presented under the title of "Bashful Jim," with Alice Day, William McCall and Marvin Lobach in the leading, supporting roles.

The Patheserial offering for the week is the second chapter of "Idaho," the thrilling drama of the early gold-rush days. In this chapter, under the title of "Hands Up," Beth Cameron (Vivian Rich) dons the garb of a boy and starts out to avenge the death of her father, who was shot and killed by a band of brigands. She is aided by Doctor Gibb, whose professional practice has brought him in frequent contact with the disastrous results of the outlaws' depredations. Beth Cameron is also assisted by Boston Graham (Mahlon Hamilton), the Pony Express Rider, in her crusade against the outlaws.

On this program Grantland Rice releases one of his "Sportlight" series under the title of "Neptune's Nieces." This production features Aileen Riggin, Helen Meany and Gertrude Ederle. It was produced in the Bermudas under the supervision of John Hawkinson. The film illustrates all the different strokes used in the art of swimming as demonstrated by the girl experts, who are in training for coming championship meets.

In Pathe Review No. 10 the principal feature is the second installment of the "Origin of Man," a picture-log of the Roy Chapman Andrews Expedition into Mongolia. This installment has to do with the "Desert Dwellers" whom the expedition happened upon in their search for fossils. This expedition was made in co-operation with the American Museum of Natural History. Other subjects in the Review are an interesting picture-story on "Making Friends With Birds" and views of the city of Seattle in Pathecolor in the "Visiting Our Own America" series.

Paul Terry's animated cartoon-animals live up to the title of "In Dutch" in more ways than one in the current Aesop's Film Fable for the week.

Pathe News Nos. 22 and 23, with "Topics of the Day" No. 10, complete the Pathe program of releases for the week.

Splendid Reviews

Metropolitan Reviewers Praise Metro-Goldwyn's "The Great Divide"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's special production of "The Great Divide," directed by Reginald Barker, opened to overwhelming acclaim at the Capitol Theatre in New York, where the critics hailed it as the finest picture released by Metro-Goldwyn this season.

Benjamin Glazer adapted the famous William Vaughn Moody stage success to the screen, while Waldemar Young wrote the continuity.

Conway Tearle and Alice Terry have the leading roles, and are supported by a cast that includes Wallace Beery, Allan Forrest, ZaSu Pitts, Huntly Gordon, George Cooper, Ford Sterling and William Orlamond.

"Sunken Silver"

The company of Patheserial players, under the direction of George B. Seitz in Florida, started to work last week on the studio interiors of "Sunken Silver." The company has been at Miami for some time making Albert Payson Terhune's story, "Black Caesar's Clan," which will be released as a ten-chapter serial under the title of "Sunken Silver." Allene Ray and Walter Miller are the featured members of the cast.

Rod La Rocque, De Mille Star, Is Proud of Famous Players

ROD LA ROCQUE is in town preparing for "The Coast of Folly," in which he will play leading man opposite the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudraye (Gloria Swanson).

Immediately following this production, he departs for the West Coast, where he will be starred under the banner of Cecil B. De Mille.

Mr. La Rocque returned from Europe last week and knew nothing of his stardom until a cable from Mr. De Mille informed him of the fact. After "The Ten Commandments" he could have been starred, but asked the privilege of waiting a year or so while he studied further under Mr. De Mille's direction as featured player. Since then he has appeared in "Feet of Clay," "Forbidden Paradise," "The Code of the Sea" and "The Golden Bed," in all of which he fulfilled the promise of his outstanding performance in 'The Ten Commandments."

In respect to leaving the Famous Players-Lasky, Mr. La Rocque said: "If there is any artist who has ever worked for Famous, and has an unkind word to say of them, I have yet to find him. For myself, I am proud to fly the Paramount banner in any old part of the world. Its prestige brought me hosts of friends abroad. Among the functions I attended abroad was a dinner given by the Famous Guards at St. James Palace, London. There I met the Prince of Wales and Prince Henry. On another occasion I was a guest at a fox hunt, in Sussex, and I was made to feel at all times that I was to make myself thoroughly at home. And all of this came to me through the prestige of Paramount and Mr. Cecil B. De Mille."

In mentioning Mr. De Mille, Mr. La Rocque wants the whole world to know that his success as an actor is due to him entirely.

"If it had not been for this great executive," said Rod, "I would still be 'an actor looking for a job.' Ten years ago I was an extra on the old Essanay lot, and in my group of fellow-extras was Gloria Swanson, Helen Ferguson, Agnes Ayres and Virginia Valli. It has been a long drive since then, and only a year and a half ago did I first begin to see 'the light o' day' peeping through the shadows, thanks to Mr. De Mille."

"When an opportunity came to star after 'The Ten Commandments,' I decided to wait until Mr. De Mille had given me more of his direction, and also to get an idea of what the public wanted. Thousands of letters have come to me in the last year and a half.

"The main points which I have gleaned from this mass of correspondence is that, first, cleanliness is wanted. Then romance, youth, action and brevity. All this makes for one hundred per cent. entertainment. And I know that this is exactly what I will get in the form of starring vehicles under Mr. De Mille's banner. He has an uncanny sense of box-office values, and is a director of outstanding ability."

Warner Bros. Studio Heads Take Up Their New Duties

TWO studio officials who recently signed contracts with Warner Bros. have now taken hold of their new duties at the Warners' Hollywood studio. They are Bennie Ziedman, who is associate executive to Jack L. Warner, production manager, and Harry Edwards, who has assumed the position of studio manager.

Mr. Ziedman has had one of the most spectacular rises in motion pictures. In a period of ten years he has gone from publicity manager to production supervisor and is still a very young man. He started as publicity man for the old Lubin company of Philadelphia in 1915, leaving there to become director of publicity for D. W. Griffith, and the Triangle Fine Arts Corp., at that time the king pin of all producing companies.

But a short time later, there was a young man named Douglas Fairbanks, who was just coming into prominence, and Mr. Ziedman became his director of publicity. From that position he was appointed production manager for Mary Pickford and then he became an independent producer, making ten pictures in all.

With those completed, he joined Universal as assistant general manager and supervisor of production, the position he held when his affiliation with Warner Bros. took effect. With this enviable record, Mr. Ziedman brings a wide knowledge of the business with him that will be reflected upon the pictures he supervises in the future.

Harry Edwards has filled every office that a studio affords during a period of eleven years. He started as property man at the old Biograph Studio in 1913 and went from there to the New York studio of Universal; then to the Christie Film Co., where he was Production Manager for eight years—the position he held prior to his going to Warner Bros.

In the course of that time, Mr. Edwards went up on the ladder from property man to electrician, cutter, stage manager, assistant director, director, studio manager, and then to his present position of studio manager.

With all these phases of the business behind him, there is nothing around a studio that is foreign to him. He knows when and what should be done at the proper time.

Tax Free Music Service to Showmen, by Vitagraph

IN keeping with a policy which demands the extension of every possible aid to motion picture exhibitors, Vitagraph, in a statement issued this week by John B. Rock, announces the perfection of plans for a tax-free music cue service to theatres.

The first production with which these facilities will be extended to exhibitors desiring it is "School For Wives," the official release of which is set for March 9th.

Vitagraph decided upon this radical innovation after receiving requests from many exhibitors in all parts of the country who were anxious to be relieved of the burden imposed upon them by the Authors' and Composers' Association. Members of this organization own copyrights on much standard music which, in consequence, carries a fixed charge for use in cue sheets. Even though a theatre uses only one sheet of copyrighted music in the course of a year, it is required to pay a yearly fee of ten cents for each of its seats.

With virtually every picture house in the United States offering an elaborate music program as a regular feature of its entertainment, the burden became increasingly heavy. As a step in a campaign for the lifting of the objectionable charge, many exhibitors joined last September in organizing the Tax Free Music Bureau Association, with Harry Sigmond, of New York, as general manager.

By thus organizing, theatreowners and managers succeeded not only in directing attention to the trying situation affecting them, but in obtaining a measure of relief. Mr. Rock believes that much more may be accomplished, however, through direct action by producers and distributors, and that co-operation along the lines just adopted by Vitagraph is due the exhibitor.

The Vitagraph statement reminds exhibitors that in making up the tax free music cue sheet the music obtained will be free only until the date of publication. The purchase thereafter of any music, the copyright of which is held by a member of the Authors' and Composers' Association, will subject them to the same yearly charge they have been required to pay in the past.

The tax free cue sheet to be issued by Vitagraph is in addition to the music cue service already extended. This is to be continued, as heretofore.

"Vitagraph has determined to extend the new facilities to exhibitors because we consider it a duty and a pleasure to serve them in every way possible," said Mr. Rock. "There cannot be too close co-operation among the various factors composing the picture industry. What helps one helps all, and if the lot of the exhibitor is lightened the producer and distributor is certain to benefit in the long run."

"Our Gang" Has New Member in Their Newest Production

THE liveliest piece of news on the Hal Roach lot this week is the breaking down of the exclusive circle in "Our Gang" and the admitting of little Johnny Downs, age nine, as a member of the "gang."

To date Hal Roach's rascals have been the hardest set of juvenile society in cinemaland to break into, only a few of the many candidates passing all tests. Johnny must have measured up to all the requirements, as he is taking one of the parts in an "Our Gang" picture completed last week. The newest juvenile production directed by "Bob" McGowan is typically "Western." In it Mickey Daniels, Mary Kornman, Joe Cobb, Jackie Condon and Farina wear sombreros and chaps in true Western style.

"Bad Bill Brodie" is the latest comedy to be completed by Charley Chase. In the character of a tough Chicago gunman, Chase is supported by a cast headed by Martha Sleeper, Noah Young, Eddie Borden, Evelyn Burns and Horace Kirkland. The picture was directed by Leo McCarey.

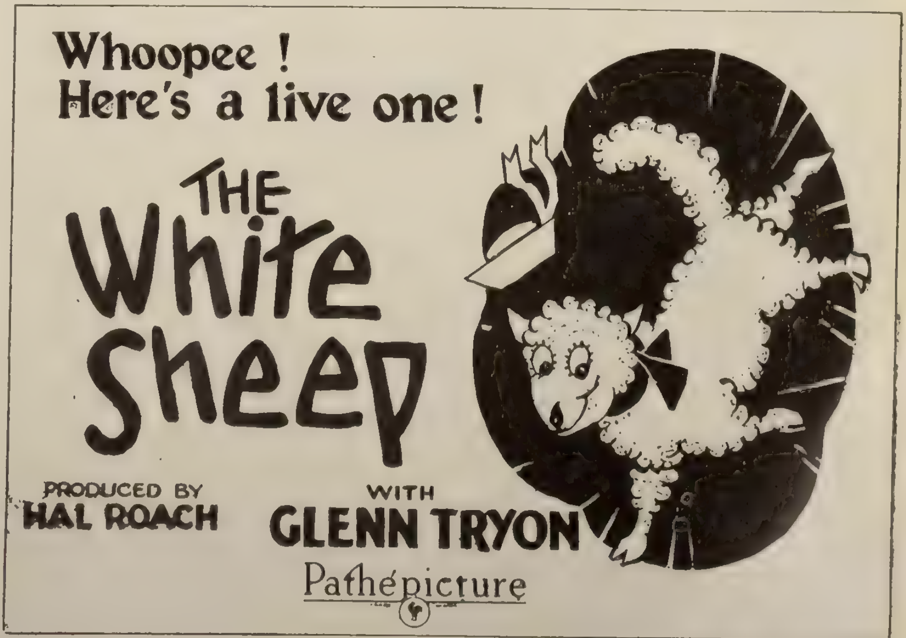
Glenn Tryon has also completed a picture which is the second Tryon production to be directed by James W. Horne. Fay Wray, the beautiful new leading lady for Tryon, is used in this picture for the first time, together with Marjorie Whities, who plays the vamp role. The story of the picture is that of a young, married couple who move into an uncompleted home and are forced to turn their hands to all sorts of trades.

Another Richard Talmadge

"Yellow Faces" is the colorful title of the first Richard Talmadge production under his new starring contract with F. B. O. The bounding star has just completed a series of six melodramas under the able supervision of Abe Carlos. The new series will be handled personally by the star and his organization. They also will be made on a bigger scale than those of the past. "Yellow Faces" introduces a number of flash scenic effects. The usual Talmadge thrills and comedy will be present in abundance as well.

Schulberg's Detroit Franchise

The release of Schulberg Productions in the Detroit territory will be handled by W. D. Ward, according to an announcement just made by J. C. Bachmann, vice-president and general manager of distribution, who has just closed a deal with Mr. Ward whereby the latter becomes head of the newly organized Preferred Pictures of Detroit.



Frances Marion, Producer, in Munroe-DeMille Group

FRANCES MARION, novelist and premier scenarist of the motion picture industry, writer of over twenty of the biggest of recent successes, has entered the ranks of Independent producers in the formation of her own producing company backed by strong western financial interests and contracts have already been signed for releases through Producers Distributing Corporation. Miss Marion will personally write the scripts and supervise the productions which will be known as Frances Marion Pictures.

Miss Marion has more successful pictures to her credit than any other scenario writer active in the business today. Her ten Mary Pickford pictures, among them "Poor Little Rich Girl," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," "Stella Maris" and "Pollyanna," placed her in the Motion Picture Hall of Fame.

More recently Miss Marion has to her credit the scenarios for such pictures as "Abraham Lincoln," the Norma Talmadge productions, "The Eternal Flame," "Within the Law," "Secrets" and "The Lady," Constance Talmadge's "East is West" and Richard Barthelmess' "Sonny," all big box-office attractions.

During her association with Wm. R. Hearst, Miss Marion wrote the scenarios for "Humoresque," "Just Around the Corner," and five other noteworthy Cosmopolitan productions.

Still more recently she has written the scripts for the Samuel Goldwyn productions, "Potash and Perlmutter," "Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood," "Cytherea" and "Tarnish."

A Director-Scenarist

In addition to writing more than thirty original stories and screen adaptations Miss Marion is a full fledged director, having directed as well as written the Mary Pickford production, "The Love Light," and the Cosmopolitan picture, "Just Around the Corner."

She was one of the first writers to successfully work in close cooperation with the star and director in the actual making of pictures, and when she and Marshall Neilan were associated with Miss Pickford, the trio of co-workers were famous. Miss Pickford, herself, always generously credited Miss Marion, with a just share of the credit for her biggest successes.

The formation of this new producing unit, bringing an exceptionally well qualified creator into the producing field, is the result of negotiations started by John C. Flinn, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, on the occasion of his last visit to Los Angeles.

Miss Marion will make two productions at the Hollywood studio for release in the Fall and the selection of the story, director and cast for the first picture will be made when Mr. Flinn returns to Los Angeles next month.

FRANCES MARION

Premier scenarist among the feminine workers, she will produce pictures for release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Who is now playing the part of Chickie in First National's production of that name.

DeMille "Find" to Play in Warner Bros. Picture

NO sooner had Harry and Jack Warner stepped into the studio after their arrival from New York than things began to happen in the way of securing new players for the first of the Warner Bros.' pictures now about ready to go into production on next year's program.

By special arrangement with Cecil DeMille, the Warners have obtained the services of Vera Reynolds to play the feminine lead in "The Limited Mail," the famous old melodrama by Elmer Vance being made into a modern screen play by Zarryl Francis Zanuck. Miss Reynolds is a DeMille find, a girl of unusual beauty and talent who has appeared in several of his recent productions.

She will play opposite Monte Blue, who has been cast for the lead. This is the first Warner picture for some time in which Mr. Blue and Marie Prevost have not played together. Both Mr. Blue and Miss Prevost will hereafter head their own units.

The Warners also announce they have signed John Harron to a long-term contract and he will become one of the stock company's leading juveniles. Mr. Harron is a brother of the late Bobby Harron, and his contract was signed after the Warners had viewed his excellent work in "My Wife and I" and "The Woman Hater," just completed.

For "Rose of the World," the Kathleen Norris novel, which will be the first of the new season's program to go into production, the Warners have signed Alan Forest to play Jack Talbot, Pauline Garon for the role ot Edith Rogers, Alex Francis for Grandpa Tollifer and Lydia Knott for Mrs. Kirby. Helene Chadwick and Hunty Gordon have been assigned to the leads. The adaptation was prepared by Dorothy Farnum and the scenario by Julien Josephson. Harry Beaumont will direct.

First National Testing Out New Players for Bigger Roles

THE cry for new faces in the movies has been heard by First National and will be answered. Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, has sent word out to Earl Hudson to find new talent. And Hudson has passed the order along to his associates, Herman Bruenner, who signs the principals for the Hudson units, and Ray Connell who handles the minor players.

Hudson has been a material factor in bringing out quite a few of the younger leading players. Under his supervision Colleen Moore, Ben Lyon and Jack Patrick have soared to eminence. He was the first, too, to bring into the public eye Vera Reynolds, whom Cecil DeMille has since starred, and Georgia Hale, Chaplin's new leading woman. The producer picked both these out of the extra ranks for special attention.

For the past few weeks Bruenner has been supervising screen tests for young screen players whose work in obscure parts has attracted notice. He has taken screen records also of many New York stage players.

As a result of Bruenner's efforts, Betty Jewel and Martha Madison were turned over to Director George Archainbaud for supporting parts with Ben Lyon and Viola Dana in "The Necessary Evil." Miss Jewel has appeared in a few D. W. Griffith pictures, while Miss Madison has brought credit upon herself by her introduction to the New York stage in "My Son."

Another stage actress who has benefited by the search for new faces is Lora Sonderson, of last year's Music Box Revue, who is now in the all-star cast headed by Dorothy Mackaill in "Chickie," which John Francis Dillon is directing.

Gladys Erskine, daughter of one of Costa Rica's wealthiest and most influential business men, and famed as a beauty in San Jose, is also appearing in "Chickie." Her beauty and charm impelled the president of Costa Rica last year to select her to reign as "Queen of the Bullfights" at the fiestas in San Jose. She is a poetess of no mean ability, sings well, is a sculptress and has dramatic ability.

Christie Plans Innovation in Filming "Stop Flirting"

IN advices to Producers Distributing Corporation, Al. Christie promises the presentation of a new angle on the so-called social whirl of high society in his forthcoming big feature, "Stop Flirting."

While the locale of the motion picture version will be virtually the same as it was in the musical comedy of the same name as successfully presented in London last season—that of the luxurious seaside home of a young man of wealth, surrounded by a gay and flirtatious crowd of pleasure seekers, the thing which will make the new Christie production "different" will be the presentation of this sort of life from the farce comedy angle, with no melodramtic or problematic worries to trouble the beholder. In other words it is being filmed purely for humorous episodes and laughs. "For laughing entertainment only" is the slogan which the staff headed by Director Scott Sidney is working on.

All the players in the big cast have been selected from the angle of playing farce, enlivened with the ever useful "gag" designed to make two laughs grow where only one existed in the stage versions of the story.

John T. Murray, former vaudeville and Winter Garden star, heads the cast. Opposite him is Wanda Hawley, who has already registered in the Christie features released through Producers Distributing Corporation. Jimmie Adams, known for his work as a star in the two-reel comedies, will make his bow in features in the role of a flirty Baron; Jack Duffy, who scored a personal hit as the old grandpa in "Reckless Romance," will do the funny butler character in "Stop Flirting," and David James will play the aviator. Others prominent in the story will be Hallam Cooley, Ethel Shannon, James Harrison and Vera Steadman.

Scenes are now being made at the beaches and at Catalina, with hydroplanes, aeroplanes, surfboards and all that goes with the locale from a scenic point of view.

With the reputation which the Christie organization has made with its features "Hold Your Breath," "Reckless Romance" and the laugh classic, "Charley's Aunt," the movie fans will be looking forward to another sure-fire laughing feature when "Stop Flirting" is released early in the Spring.

Barbara La Marr Studying Role

Barbara La Marr, while vacationing abroad, is intently studying the character of "Fleur," heroine of the newest Galsworthy novel, "The White Monkey," in which she will make her next screen appearance. Miss La Marr will return to New York in time to attend the premiere of "Heart of a Temptress," in which she is starred. This Sawyer-Lubin production, which was made under the direction of Phil Rosen, is slated for early release by First National.

WHILE the William Fox production of "The Iron Horse" has been shown to President Coolidge, Governor Alfred E. Smith and other state executives, for the first time in history a special meeting of the State Legislature has been called to witness a motion picture. On Tuesday night, February 17, "The Iron Horse" was screened in the rotunda of the state capital at Salt Lake City, Utah, for Governor George C. Dern, the members of the Legislature and the following prominent citizens of that state: Mayor C. Clarence Neslen of Salt Lake City, Secretary of State H. C. Crockett, Attorney General Henry C. Cluff, Speaker of the House of Representatives McKell, Superintendent of Public Instruction A. N. Jenson, Chairman of the State Industrial Commission Board H. O. McShane, Chairman of the Utilities Commission D. O. McKay, President of the State Senate A. B. Irvine, Chairman E. L. Gurgon of the Board of County Commissioners and Judge F. C. Loofbourow.

James Kirkham, 75, who was with the road from the head of Echo canyon to Devil's Gate, said, "The hardships shown in the picture were not exaggerated. We worked for nearly a year just driving the tunnel in Echo canyon, and the trials that came to the workers there were great."

Joseph S. Horne, Richfield, a pioneer of 1847, who worked on the transcontinental road, assisted in the construction from Ogden to Salt Lake built at the suggestion of Brigham Young.

He said, "I saw towns move from place to place as the road progressed just as shown in the picture. It was real and historically true in most cases. Much of the grading from Echo Canyon to Ogden, the most difficult section, was done by the Utah pioneers, who also built the trunk line to Salt Lake. Brigham Young himself after the Promontory celebration broke the first ground for it and drove the last spike at Salt Lake January 10, 1870."

Four Pictures in Work at First National's Eastern Plant

FOUR pictures will be in production simultaneously by First National's Eastern units with the starting of "The Half-Way Girl," and "The Making of O'Malley."

This will mark the high water mark of production for the Earl Hudson units which were brought East from Hollywood last fall.

The last phases of preparation for the commencement of the two new pictures began Monday with the announcement by Hudson that he had engaged Webster Campbell to direct "The Half-Way Girl," and has assigned Dorothy Mackaill to play a co-featuring role with Milton Sills in "The Making of O'Malley."

It is expected that the last of the interiors for "Chickie" will be completed next week at the Cosmopolitan studios, which First National leased a few weeks ago to amplify its Eastern production program. The company then moves to Miami, Florida, for exteriors.

"Chickie," which boasts one of the strongest casts of any picture made in the East for a long time, is being directed by John Francis Dillon.

"The Necessary Evil," being made by George Archainbaud at the 175th Street studio, with Ben Lyon and Viola Dana in the featuring roles has two or three more weeks yet to go.

The script of "The Half-Way Girl," in which Doris Kenyon is to feature, has been completed. Sets are going up for this new picture both at the 175th Street and the Cosmopolitan, while at the same time Herman Bruenner, assistant production manager, is filling the cast of supporting players.

"The Half-Way Girl" script calls for many exteriors of a tropical nature. According to Earl Hudson much of the picture will be taken in Florida. "The Making of O'Malley," which is a screen version of Gerald Beaumont's Red Book Magazine story of the same title, deals with the romance of a New York policeman and will be made entirely in this city, with exteriors probably taken at some of the busiest corners down town. Lambert Hillyer is to direct it. The personnel of the cast to support Milton Sills in this picture will be announced during this week.

The negatives of the first two pictures made by the Hudson units here in the East are now at the laboratories, the editing and titling having been completed this week. First National plans to release both these pictures during March.

FOUR new attractions, all of which will have important positions on the releasing schedule of Film Booking Offices, have been completed at the F. B. O. Hollywood Studios under the general supervision of B. P. Fineman, studio manager.

The Al Santell Gothic production, "Parisian Nights," an Apache melodrama starring Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen, was completed last week. It is based on an original story by Emil Forst, adapted by Fred Kennedy Myton. Others in the cast are Rene Adoree, William J. Kelly and Boris Karloff.

"Drusilla with a Million" was completed by F. Harmon Weight for Associated Arts Corporation for F. B. O. release. It is a sentimental drama based on the novel by Elizabeth Cooper and in which Mary Carr, as the slavey of a charity home for old folk, has a role very similar to her memorable part in "Over the Hill." "Drusilla" promises to be one of F. B. O.'s outstanding releases at the outset of the coming new season.

Evelyn Brent's fourth melodrama, "Forbidden Cargo," a story of the sea by Fred Kennedy Myton, also was finished last week when Director Tom Buckingham shot battleship scenes with the co-operation of the Navy at San Diego.

The first three episodes of F. B. O.'s new two-reel H. C. Witwer series of college life, "The Pacemakers," also have been completed by Director Wesley Ruggles.

Metro Buys Play

The second purchase within two weeks by Metro-Glodwyn-Mayer of a Broadway dramatic success was announced this week. Laurence Eyre's comedy hit of the early season, "Merry Wives of Gotham," is the play bought by the company. Lynn Starling's comedy, "In His Arms," was bought by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer last week.

"Fighting the Flames"

The filming of Columbia Pictures' latest melodramatic special, "Fighting the Flames," has been completed, and is now in the process of editing by Viola Lawrence. Directed by Reeves Eason, the cast includes William Haines, Dorothy Devore, Frankie Darrow, Charlie Murray, David Torrence, Sheldon Lewis and William Welsh.

Willard Mack Engaged

Willard Mack, playwright and actor, has been engaged to do a third Jackie Coogan script. Mack wrote "Little Robinson Crusoe" for Jackie, and the film proved such a successful Metro-Goldwyn release that Jack Coogan, Sr. engaged Mack to write a second story. "The Rag Man," for the boy star.

ROLAND WEST'S "The Monster," released by Metro-Goldwyn, has opened at the Capitol Theatre in New York to an overwhelming chorus of praise from the critics.

Says the New York Journal: "Lurking figures slinking steathily through shaded shrubbery, doors opening unexpectedly, secret panels closing suddenly, a hooded what-is-it turning on the current for the electric chair, fights, steel traps, comedy, suspense—and 'The Monster' at the Capitol takes his bow. It's a thrilling mystery film, with Lon Chaney as the suave Dr. Ziska, who wheels in operating-tables, smokes cigarettes in long holders, frightens his victims and sends ecstatic chills through the audience. Johnny Arthur, as the amateur detective, is a delight. He and Gertrude Olmsted and another chap find themselves prisoners. Johnny takes a few drinks and starts investigating, and the subsequent situations are a riot. There are plenty of laughs. The picture is highly entertaining."

"The Capitol," observes the New York Evening Post, "offers a thrill a minute in 'The Monster,' with Lon Chaney as the demented surgeon and Johnny Arthur as the amateur detective sharing the honors. Lon Chaney proves he can give the customers the creeps. Walter James and Knute Erickson, as Caliban and Daffy Dan, are helps in putting the play across."

"Ordinarily mystery plays don't get over well on the screen," remarks the New York Telegram and Mail. "But at the Capitol this week 'The Monster' causes one's flesh to do the goose step pleasurably."

"'The Monster' is in a class by itself," testifies the New York American, "when it comes to furnishing cold shivers and nervous chills. I received the maximum number of 'creeps' at Lon Chaney's impersonation of the insane doctor. His make-up is not quite so grotesque as usual, but it is bad enough. And we must admit that he is a good actor."

"Lon Chaney gives another of his unique characterizations this week at the Capitol in 'The Monster,' reports the New York Evening World, "but for once he discards his highly exaggerated make-up and appears in a comparatively plausible role. And, for this reason, his work here is as good as any he has ever done. 'The Monster' has in it even more horrors thon were depicted in the stage version."

The Brooklyn Eagle has this to say: "Another play which seems to have been given a happier production on the screen than on the spoken stage is Crane Wilbur's mystery thriller, 'The Monster.' When 'The Monster' is not blood-curdling in the very horror of its theme, the adventures of the mail order detective provide many genuine laughs which manage nicely to relieve the tension of the play's more strenuous moments. Johnny Arthur offers a really splendid performance. Lon Chaney's maniacal machinations as the mad professor are startlingly realistic. 'The Monster' will thrill you beyond words."

Bushman Back from Rome

Francis X. Bushman, playing the "heavy" role of Messala in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's remarkable production of "Ben Hur," directed by Fred Niblo, has returned to New York from Rome.

New Fitzmaurice Film

Will Soon Complete "Shooting" on "His Supreme Moment;" Will Have Sequence in Technicolor

George Fitzmaurice has about completed "His Supreme Moment," the picture he is making with Samuel Goldwyn from May Edginton's serial novel, "World Without End." The final shooting will take place this week. Cutting and editing will begin upon Samuel Goldwyn's return from abroad, which is expected soon.

"His Supreme Moment" will have its novelty, just as "A Thief in Paradise" had, but in the case of the new picture it will be a sequence in technicolor, contrasting with the black and white of the rest of the production, showing ten beautiful girls who reveal the love of all nations. Each will represent a different country.

The theme of "His Supreme Moment" is the year's test given to her lover by a beautiful actress. Blanche Sweet is seen as the actress and Ronald Colman as the lover who is put to a year's test. Others in the cast are Cyril Chadwick, Ned Sparks, Belle Bennett and Jane Winton.

"That Devil Quemado!"

Big Booking for "New Toys"

Richard Barthelmess' Latest Will Show in 150 Theatres Simultaneously on Release Date

The policy of many simultaneous showings in important key city points of certain of the photoplays in its group of Leader pictures, which E. A. Eschmann of First National has inaugurated, will be put into practice with Richard Barthelmess' new Inspiration production, "New Toys," from the stage comedy by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Milton Herbert Gropper.

Mr. Barthelmess' previous picture, "Classmates," showed in 125 important cities during the week of its release, and exhibitors found it one of the most popular of this star's long line of successes.

W. J. Morgan, Mr. Eschmann's assistant in charge of open market bookings, states that bookings so far received on "New Toys" for important key city showings during its release week, March 1, indicates that it will play 150 theatres simultaneously on that date.

Finishes "The Midnight Girl"

Gareth Hughes, Miss Lee's leading man, is busily rehearsing a vaudeville sketch which will bring him before the footlights in almost every section of the country.

First Tom Terris Picture

Associated Exhibitors announces that Tom Terris will start work this month on the first of a series of pictures he has contracted to produce for them.

The first picture will be a screen adaptation of "My Buddy's Wife," a story recently published in "The Smart Set" magazine and written by T. Howard Kelley. The production will be made at the Tec-Art studios with J. W. Schleiff in charge as production manager.

Central Policy Changed for "The Man Without a Country"

THE inadequacy of the two-a-day policy in meeting the popular demand for the new film epic, "The Man Without a Country," at the Central Theatre on Broadway has caused William Fox to yield to the continuous policy.

Even with the changing policy, it has been impossible to cope with the crowds. On the night of Washington's birthday, according to Manager Shadboldt, of the Central Theatre, the jam was so great that the foyer doors were broken down. "In all my experience with shows," declared Mr. Shadboldt, "I have never seen so great a clamor for a motion picture."

The change in policy at the Central meets the request of scores of school teachers, who have complained that the two-a-day policy made it difficult for them to organize school parties. Under the new policy there are five shows daily instead of two.

Hundreds of letters are pouring into the Fox offices complimenting Mr. Fox on his latest achievement. The letters come from people in all walks of life.

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, who requested an opportunity to view the picture privately at the executive mansion in Albany, wrote to Mr. Fox saying "It is a wonderful picture."

Mrs. David Ross, president of the National Indorsers of Photoplays, on behalf of her organization, wrote: "We recommend it ('The Man Without a Country') to the entire American family. It is a credit to the motion picture industry."

Curtis A. Hodges, managing editor of the Indianapolis News, who saw the picture at a preview for prominent people in Indianapolis, said in a letter to Mr. Fox that "This is the type of film that the public should be supplied with," and Mayor Samuel Lewis Shank of the same city, declared it to be a "convincing argument against censorship."

One of the most interesting letters received by Mr. Fox came from Minna C. Smith, the writer, who knew Dr. Hale, the author of "The Man Without a Country." "I imagined dear old Dr. Hale there seeing it with me," wrote Miss Smith referring to the picture, "and at the end I asked him (in memory of the day he appeared on the stage himself at the old Boston Museum at the Authors' Reading) 'How do you like your man now in this?' and the answer was clear 'a finer portrayal could not have been done.'"

Dr. Thomas Edward Potterton, the lecturer, declared in a letter to Mr. Fox that he was "thrilled by the dynamics of the picture." "It contains wonderful appeal," he said, "while the element of the romantic sustains the human interest."

"The Man Without a Country" seems to be one picture with an appeal to people of all classes. This is indicated by the types of people seen at the Central Theatre. It is one of the few pictures on Broadway that is attracting the limousine trade along with crowds from East and West sides. It is no uncommon sight to see people in evening dress seated beside toilers whose garb proclaims them late arrivals from Europe. "But this," declares Mr. Fox, "is not only the true democracy of the theatre, but the greatest compliment ever paid a producer. It is indeed gratifying."

Kinograms Show Views of Nome Hero

Kinograms, Educational's news reel, is claiming "scoops" on two of the most important news events of the times in the current issue of that news weekly, in the first authoritative pictures of Leonard Seppalla, hero of the remarkable dog-sled dash to save stricken Nome, Alaska, from the grip of an epidemic of diphtheria, and in the first pictures of the preliminary training activities of the leaders of the American League and the big stars of baseball.

The pictures of Seppalla and his now famous dog-team are claimed to be the first authentic shots of this intrepid hero and his wonderful dog team to reach the screen. The scenes of the stretches of the country over which man and dogs struggled during the killing blizzard and over almost impassable obstacles will give picture audiences a more vivid understanding of the magnitude of the feat than could hundreds of columns of printed description of the barren country.

The baseball pictures in the same release mark the first showing of the major leaguers getting into action in preparation for the opening of the 1925 campaign. They show the world's champion, Washington Senators under the leadership of young Stanley Harris hiking and limbering up at Hot Springs and Babe Ruth playing golf as one of his training feats to reduce. Other members of the famous Yankee team are also shown.

Big Grosses for "Charley's Aunt"

Entering its third week in the three big long run theatres; Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles, Moss' Colony Theatre in New York and The Orpheum Theatre in Chicago, "Charley's Aunt" is piling up box office receipts that promise to establish a new long run and revenue record for farce comedy.

The box office reports from the Colony in New York show a gross intake for the first week of $25,012.11—the second week's total was $21,462.87—and the first two days of the third week show $4,992.35 for Sunday and $5,880.33 for Monday.

At the Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles "Charley's Aunt" grossed $24,656.61 the first week, $22,136.86 the second week and $4,276.42 for Sunday of the third week.

The Orpheum Theatre in Chicago with its limited seating capacity grossed $10,303.00 the first week, $9,300.00 the second week and last Saturday, the opening of the third week the Al. Christie farce brought in $1,852.00 which is one dollar less than the day's record of the theatre.

New Series for Pathe Review

The Pathe Review announces the production of a series of pictures dealing with marriages as they are performed in various countries. Like others of their series of installment features, Pathe will make an elaborate production of its "Bride" series and distribute it over a period of weeks in the Pathe Review.

The "Bride" series will cover the marriages of all nationalities. In the production of the series minute attention will be given to the dress of the bride in each country. Even the ceremony performed in Darkest Africa will come in for its share..

The "Bride" series is scheduled to follow the release of "The Prettiest Girl I Know" series now running in the Pathe Review.

"Cheaper to Marry"

Metropolitan Critics Praise Metro-Goldwyn Production.

Robert Z. Leonard's "Cheaper to Marry," from the stage success by Samuel Shipman, met with overwhelming applause from the Manhattan critics at its premiere at the Capitol Theatre, last week. This Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, adapted by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, has Conrad Nagel, Marguerite de la Motte and Lewis Stone in the featured roles. Paulette Duval, Claude Gillingwater, Louise Fazenda and Richard Wayne loom large in the supporting cast.

"'Cheaper to Marry' is a picture that will delight you," Regina Cannon wrote in the New York Graphic. "There is, first of all a fine cast. No cinema effort could go very far astray with such an assemblage—and this one doesn't. Besides an excellent little plot, the photography is perfect, the women's gowns ravishing, and last, but not least, the titles are some of the cleverest we have ever read. The Capitol audience shrieked with laughter at the lines credited to Louise Fazenda. The story delightfully combines the dark and bright moments of life."

Pick Title for Pathe Serial

"Sunken Silver" has been selected as the permanent title of the new Patheserial now in production in Florida under the direction of George B. Seitz with Allene Ray in the featured role. The new chapter production is based on "Black Caesar's Clan," the novel written by Albert Payson Terhune, the screen rights to which were secured by Pathe because of its excellent adaptability to screen visualization in serial form.

To Direct "National Anthem"

E. M. Asher, general manager of Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., has engaged Al Santell to direct her next production for First National, "The National Anthem," from Hartley Manners' play in which Laurette Taylor scored one of her biggest Broadway stage hits.

F. B. O. Has Many Westerns

Outdoor Features Form Outstanding Part of Company's Big Program

Outdoor features, of which Film Booking Offices is distributing a wide volume this season, form an outstanding part of the program of F. B. O. Most of these are being made by prominent independent producers while F. B. O. itself, under the general supervision of B. P. Fineman, is producing the highly successful new series of Fred Thomson Westerns, the second of which, "That Devil Quemada," is scheduled to start soon. Del Andrews will direct.

Other producers of Westerns for F. B. O. are Harry Garson, handling the Lefty Flynn series; Jesse Goldburg, producing the Bob Custer Texas Ranger series and Ben Wilson, who is presenting the famous cowboy, Yakimo Canutt, in a series of features.

Flynn is at present on location in the California mountains, filming his fourth production for F. B. O. It is a Western feature called "O. U. West," which pictures the former Yale gridiron hero as the son of a wealthy man who, through a scapegrace, goes West and wins his way against high odds. Bob Custer is at work on "Galloping Vengeance" which William Craft is directing, and Canutt, under the supervision of Ben Wilson, has just completed "Scar Hannan," the title of which will doubtless be changed.

These western stars will be kept busy from now on in order to complete the big program of outdoor productions for F. B. O.

Selznick Held Franchise

Well-known Pittsburg Territory Exchangeman Has Schulberg Pictures

J. G. Bachmann, vice-president and general manager of distribution of B. P. Schulberg Productions, announced yesterday the consummation of an important distribution deal involving the release of ten Schulberg pictures in the Pittsburgh territory.

Through this new contract David J. Selznick, prominent exchangeman, becomes the franchise holder of B. P. Schulberg Productions in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Ready for immediate release in this territory are five of the ten Schulberg pictures for this year. These are the special production, "Capital Punishment" and four Gasnier productions, "The Breath of Scandal," "White Man," "The Triflers" and "The Parasite."

The remainder of the Schulberg program for 1924-25 to be handled by Mr. Selznick consists of the second special, "The Boomerang" from the Belasco stage play, "The Mansion of Aching Hearts," Faint Perfume," "My Lady's Lips" and "When a Woman Reaches Forty."

Big Bookings for "The Lady"

Several new big bookings for its Norma Talmadge special, "The Lady," have been closed by First National Pictures, through A. W. Smith, Jr., and the staff of salesmen assigned to the specials by E. A. Eschmann.

Contracts have been signed with the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, the Colorado in Denver, the Branford in Newark, the Stillman in Cleveland, and with the A. H. Blank circuit theatres in DesMoines, Omaha and other points in Nebraska and Iowa.

Metro on Broadway

Three Big Features Showing in Leading New York City Houses

"The Great Divide," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's long awaited special production with Alice Terry and Conway Tearle, directed by Reginald Barker, will have its premiere showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week of February 8.

At the same time another Metro-Goldwyn special, "Chu-Chin-Chow," will have its New York premiere at the Piccadilly Theatre, starting Saturday, February 7.

This will give Metro-Goldwyn three big features in Broadway first-run houses, including the Lillian Gish-Henry King Inspiration Production of "Romola," which is running at the George M. Cohan Theatre.

"The Great Divide," completed some time ago, is expected by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to prove one of the most successful pictures ever made by this company. The Capitol premiere will be its first showing. This is the screen version by Waldemar Young of William Vaughn Moody's famous stage success, and in addition to Miss Terry and Tearle in leading roles the cast boasts such names as Wallace Beery, Huntley Gordon, ZaSu Pitts, Allan Forrest and Ford Sterling among others.

Prominent Players in "Escape"

Important selections for the cast of Alden Brooks' "Escape," Josef von Sternberg's first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, have just been announced. They include Conrad Nagel, Renee Adoree, Mathew Betz, Paulette Duval, Claire Dubrey, Fred Esmelton, Helena D'Algy, Robert Graves and Ford Sterling. This very nearly completes the cast. "Escape" is a study of genius, of an attempt to repress it for the sake of duty, and of its final conquest.

Chase Steps Up One

Charley Chase has been promoted from one-reel Hal Roach comedies and will hereafter be starred in two-reelers on the Pathe program. The release of the first of the two-reel Charley Chase productions is scheduled for March 15th and will be made available from then on at four-week intervals. The first picture has been titled "Hard Boiled."

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it to the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Roebuck Steps Out

Ever since the Motiograph projector began motiographing, its original inventor, A. C. Roebuck, has been at the head of the Enterprise Optical and Manufacturing Company. I'm not certain, but believe the Motiograph was first placed on the then very limited market (Edison, Power, Selig, Polyscope, Vitascope, Spoor's Kinedrome and Lubin are all I can remember at the moment) about 1905 or 1906.

A. C. Roebuck laid the entire Motiograph projector out on paper before ever a tool was put to metal, and I have been told by him that the paper plans were not altered at all, except in one or two very minor points, when the plans finally grew into metal completeness.

But soon there had to be changes, nevertheless, because the first Motiographs were built very closely, and were placed in the hands of projectionists who were built exceedingly loosely, insofar as ability to handle a closely built mechanism went. In fact there was really no such thing as projectionist in those days, but a very crudely trained machine attendant, or machine "operator." The result was that the finely and closely built mechanism often "froze up" and caused much trouble, NOT because of any fault of the machine itself, but because machine attendants of that day were only equipped with knowledge and skill sufficient to handle a coarsely constructed mechanism.

But as this became evident Mr. Roebuck "loosened things up," and then all was well. Aside from being too high class a mechanism for the men who handled it, the Motiograph was then an excellent projector, as it still is, in its De Luxe form of today.

Steps Out

But just the other day came a letter from Mr. Roebuck saying that he had disposed of his interest in the Enterprise Optical and Manufacturing Company, ceased all connection therewith, and was on his way to Florida for a rest.

Mr. O. F. Spahr, long the General Manager of the company, succeeds Mr. Roebuck as president of the company. Mr. Spahr is equipped by long experience and knowledge to carry forward the work of the company.

We regret to see Mr. Roebuck withdraw, as he is a real, dyed-in-the-wool old timer in the motion picture projector field—was the oldest one remaining active at the time of his withdrawal.

We tender our sincere best wishes for success to the company under its new leadership.

Pitcher Op'rater!

W. J. Raffensberger, Chief Projectionist Hippodrome Theatre, York, Pa., arises to remark:

> Friend Richardson: Find enclosed samples of change-over marks and splices removed from a Paramount picture. Every one of the eight reels contained these OUTRAGES, which goes to show what manner of "movin' pitcher op'raters" some of the birds in Southeast Pennsylvania are.
> I am a reader of the department, and one who is proud to own the wonderful Bluebook.

Only one change-over mark was enclosed, but it was plenty. A paper sticker 4⅛ inches long by one full half inch wide, right smack down through the center of the film. What a sweet looking thing to project to the screen! The man who did that had no respect for the audiences he served, for his profession, the theatre he worked for, or anything else, I suppose.

The splices were all very poorly made, poorly scraped and too much cement was used. Also most of them had poorly matched sprocket holes.

Glad you like the Bluebook, Brother Raffensberger. I have yet to hear from an owner who did not. Many of the men kick because unless they watch their Bluebook, those who don't own one, and perhaps sneer at the one who does, borrow it without permission, and forget to bring it back.

Bluebook School

Question No. 232—Suppose you find cracks extending from the upper corners of sprocket holes (upper as film is in projector), to what would you attribute the cause of the damage?

Question No. 233—Suppose there are cracks from the lower corners of sprocket holes (lower corners as the film is in the projector), to what would you attribute the cause of the damage?

Question No. 234—Name the various faults in a projector which may and probably will result in damage to the films.

Question No. 235—Name the various things which poorly matched sprocket holes may cause to appear on the screen, and the various kinds of damage which may result to film from poorly matched sprocket holes. Watch your step. Several things to think of in this.

Foolishness

Recently a letter came from a projectionist of high standing and ability who had visited Hollywood and Los Angeles. He spent quite a bit of time in Los Angeles. In part his letter read:

> Los Angeles Local Union 150, Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., seems to be composed of some good men AND a considerable number who appear to be suffering from a violent attack of enlargement of the head. These latter take the position that they would not fall so disgustedly low as to be caught studying anything pertaining to the thing which supplies their bread and butter. Read the projection department of the Moving Picture World or the Bluebook? Oh, my, oh, my! They would chop off their right arm first! And Richardson! Why he's nothing more than an old woman. Furthermore, we already know so very, very much that we don't have to read or study.
> I have put things just as I found them to be, Brother Richardson. Just why these good brothers take such a silly stand I don't know. In course of time it will react upon them, and when it does I sincerely hope they will get theirs, and get it good and plenty, too.

Rough Stuff, Eh?

Sounds rough, gentlemen, but it is, word for word, the statement of a projectionist of high standing and ability, who is, and has for many years been, an I. A. man, and a loyal I. A. man too. Did it come from a less thoroughly reliable source I would have wastepaper-basketed it pronto, but there is very little question of this man's ability to "size up" such a thing as this correctly.

I don't for a moment think that anything like a majority of the Los Angeles men hold any such childish views, but it is entirely possible there is a goodly number who do. Also I think some of these men will probably be found in some of the better positions.

Dry Rot

The chief trouble with such men is that they either are, or soon will be like unto a timber which looks sound outside, but when subjected to the test falls to pieces. It has decayed through that insidious process known as dry rot, which eats out the heart, leaving the outside apparently sound.

Assuming the possible fact that these men once were well posted in motion picture projection—that they were even right up abreast with the times, when they stopped reading and studying, they stopped advancing and THE INDUSTRY NEVER HAS AND NEVER WILL, in yours or my time at least, STOP ADVANCING.

Read This Lesson

Such men as the brother describes will do well to take this lesson to heart: Theatres are getting bigger and better. They will continue to follow that process for a long while. This means less projection rooms, hence a lot less men in projection rooms.

WHO IS GOING TO BE DROPPED???? The man who studies, keeps right up with the times, and maybe a bit in advance, or the chap who reaches a certain point along the road of knowledge, imagines that to be the end of everything, parks himself, shuts off the gas, locks his wheels to the fence and lets his radiator freeze solid.

That bird will wake up bye and bye, but his machine won't run, and he'll be putting up a tremendous squawk to those who kept chugging along, keeping abreatst with knowledge and advancement.

"Old Woman" Richardson

As to Richardson being an "old woman"—well, I've been accused of a good many things, but that's a new one. Reckon were I to visit the City of Angels these chaps would at least have enough pity in their souls to try 'n get me into an old ladies' home—Gosh! Wouldn't that he real nice, huh?

Well, anyhow I well know the Los Angeles local is not all made up of that sort of has-beens. In fact I'm quite sure the local contains a goodly percentage of wide-awake men, who are competent, capable projectionists, and who keep up with the procession. The rest are merely an incubus to the local, to the profession and to the I. A.

Surface Argument

S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H., bawls the editor out as follows:

With regard to the answers published to question 170 of the Bluebook series, January 17 issue, the question arises as to whether or not the screen surface with a visible roughness is injurious to picture definition. No doubt you have a good reason for raising a doubt as to the correctness of Hanover's and Gray's conclusions in this matter, but I fail to follow you. I, for one, think those two answers were as complete and to the point as you will receive, and looking at the question as Friend Gray does, I side with him.

In the first place, just exactly what does "picture definition" mean, as applied to the screen surface? Surely the answer is: a surface which will receive the picture light and reflect (reproduce) the picture, or image in a clear, sharp, natural form to all those who view it, either from a short or a long viewing distance. That I believe is the surface which gives the best "picture definition."

No!

And if that be true, will the surface which has visible roughness produce such an image, or meet all the various requirements necessary to the best picture definition? Answering my own question, I say NO!

When the rough surface screen, such as we are discussing, is viewed from a considerable distance, the roughness is invisible to the eye, and fairly good results may be obtained. Viewed at close range, however, the roughness is visible, or at least partially so, particularly in objects which show white in the image, and many objects which in real life are of fine, smooth texture, will appear o nthe screen as of a rough, coarse, harsh surface, or texture.

If an object really is smooth surfaced, and the screen causes it to appear as otherwise, then the object appears unnatural, and the definition, as applies to it at least, must suffer.

The reflecting power of the screen may be high, and when viewed at a distance may appear pleasingly bright, but I nevertheless honestly believe more consideration should be given as to what surface will best reproduce the various things in the screen image, in the most natural, lifelike way, than to what surfaces will reflect the greater amount of light, and thus give a required brilliancy at the least expenditure of light—electric energy.

"Not Too Far Front"

Give the patron who does, or who is compelled to occupy the front seats as much consideration as those in the rear, and perhaps the well known "not-to-far-front," with which theatre ushers are over- familiar, will in time become less often used, as theatre patrons discover that a production may be viewed just as well from the front of the auditorium as from the rear.

All of which Friend Gray said in just fifteen lines of his answer, while you came back with only a "mebby so. Mebby!" There! consider yourself bawled out.

Do It Some More

Am very well pleased that I did, brother, for at the least it has brought forth your letter, which is just the thing needed to start further discussion on this highly important subject.

Granting the bawling out, and the correctness of your conclusions in the main, still I must repeat my "Mebby so-mebby." And for these reasons: First, it must be understood that in modern theatres where there is a proper distance between front rows of seats and screen, I very much doubt if the eye can discern, or perhaps I should say WILL discern the effect Brother Cooley speaks of. True, it might and probably would be very visible if the plain white light were on the screen, but even in the whitest object in a picture the light is very much toned down by the absorption of the photographic emulsion and the celluloid. I don't know just what the total absorption amounts to, but certainly it is considerable. Then, too, the contrast between whites and shades in the picture operates to make such roughness less discernible, or at least I believe it does.

Another thing: the human eye is a very coarse instrument, by comparison, and not at all keen at discerning such things, unless the attention be directly directed thereto. Such an effect might be present, and be visible. Yet it is extremely questionable in my mind whether or no a single one in all the audience would note it (I speak of ordinary, and not of exaggerated surface roughness, mind you) unless some one called their attention directly to it.

The question then arises, if this really is true, does a thing which is only noted when direct attention is called to it, mar the general effect, or does it not. If it operates to mar the definition—to make the image less sharp—then I grant you it certainly does do harm. But I am not sure it does operate that way, though the logic of it seems to favor the conclusion that it would.

Worth Study

Here, gentlemen, is a thing well worthy of your study and investigation. I shall be glad to have the results of your observations, or your reasonings upon the matter. Brother Cooley thinks the effect of a roughened surface is detrimental to definition and to general effect. I, as an editor and as an individual, am not certain about the matter. What do YOU think—and why do you think that way—how do y' get that way?

Note: By rough surface we mean a surface such as rough finish plaster, a stippled surface or something similar.

Rectifier Troubles

The Electra Theatre, Brigham City, Utah, by Walter Peterson, presumably owner, describes the following rectifier trouble, which I am referring directly to the General Electric headquarters for expert attention:

We use a G. E. rectifier for projection, pulling about 30 amperes A. C. The line supply is 220 volts, A. C. of course. This has been the condition since May, 1917, and no change has been made, either in the wiring, the position of the rectifier or ventilation of the projection room—that is, no change so far as we know.

Ten days ago a rectifier tube which had been in operation approximately 3,000 hours was started as usual, and after a few moments the glass cracked on one of the electrode arms, right close to the condensing chamber. This tube was replaced with another used tube, and after ten days' successful operation both electrode arms fell off, the glass breaking right close to the condensing chamber.

We are having a real cold winter, but it is not nearly as cold as was the month previous to this occurrance. Will you kindly send us such suggestions as seem applicable to our case?.

As I said in the beginning, I will refer this matter to the G. E. headquarters. I see no possible reason for such an effect, unless it be overload, and I'm not at all certain that would cause it. Don't see why it should. I shall myself be interested in knowing what the G. E. has to say about it.

A Hard Question

From New York City comes the following:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Am a rather new, but none the less interested reader of the projection department. May I ask your advice as regards the necessary formalities for becoming a motion picture projectionist? Am an Englishman, and have spent practically all my life in the exhibiting side of the industry, but am conscious of a lack of all knowledge concerning the way of working over here.

I learned my trade in a hard school, and over there was considered as a first class projectionist, or "operator," as we still call them. Am willing to forget all that, and to start at the bottom again. My best recommendation is that I never let a show down, or, through negligence, burned or damaged a single foot of film.

Brother Oldest Exhibitor

It may interest you to know that my brother is the oldest exhibitor in Great Britain, having been in the business for tweurty-five years, starting at the time films were 30 feet long, with one round hole per frame, instead of the four per side as now. The projector was, I believe, a Friese-Green, with a "claw" movement. The first picture ever shown was "A Train Leaving San Lezaye, Paris." Later he traveled the country with a "Prestwich" dog movement projector, and, later, had the distinction of being the first to use an arc light for projecting. It was called the "Hughes Electograph."

I shall obtain a Bluebook, for one thing, and study. Please advise me as to my best course in the matter.

What Shall I say?

Now, what am I to say to this gentleman, except that I just plain don't know. There is no use pretending I do, for neither I nor any one else can point out any short road to success "busting into" projection right now. The fact of the matter is that there is a considerable surplus of men in New York City, and I think that is the situation pretty nearly so all over the country. Comparatively few theatres are being built, and they are mostly pretty big ones, by comparison with those of the past. This means that these big theatres are decreasing the number of houses AND, OF COURSE, THE NUMBER OF JOBS, which creates the surplus I spoke of. Here in New York City one must either belong to the union, or stand a very slim chance of employment, and the union is admitting very, very few men these days. Also one must have a license from the City of New York—which you probably could get without much trouble, since fundamental principles do not vary much in different countries. You must stand an examination before the Board of Examiners at the Municipal Building. See them and get an application.

Tackling Pretty Stiff Problem

I think, though I don't like to discourage you, you would be tackling a pretty stiff undertaking to try to make the grade here in New York City now. If I were in your place I would take the New York City examination and, if possible, get a New York City license card. Then I would try to locate a position in some smaller city where the union is not so strict, until you "get the hang" of our methods over here, and get used to handling our equipment. You can then proceed as seems best to you.

I am really sorry, Friend Hughes, but I cannot offer anything better in the way of advice, nor do I believe any one else can. I wish you good fortune, and am sorry I am unable to give you greater encouragement and better advice, but we must face facts as they are, not as we would like them to be.

Electrical Action

Russel R. Kerr, Indiana, Pa., who for a long while was a regular correspondent of the department, is here again, with the following:

Dear Brother Richardson: Will you kindly pass the following along to the men for comment:

The Bluebook and other textbooks I have say that electricity passes from positive to negative. Professor John H. Morecraft, E.E., in May 25 issue of Radio News, makes the following statement: "If a wire is connected with a battery so that one end becomes positive with respect to the other, the free electrons, really negative electricity, will be attracted toward the positive end of the wire, and will gradually (I like that 'gradually' thing. 24,000 miles in three seconds.—Ed.) drift along through the crowds of atoms from one end of the wire to the other. This drift of the free electrons through the substance of the wire is called electric current."

Preston R. Bassett, in an address before the American Projection Society, April 26, 1923, said: "The twenty ampere arc is a quiet little arc, having the usual small yellowish flame tip above the purple arc flame, its peak occurring about half way between positive and negative. Doubling the current shows an arc of approximately the same size of arc flame, but with a larger positive crater and a large tail flame. It is also to be noticed that the tail flame has moved over toward the positive crater. This seems to show that as the current increases more material flows from negative to positive than from positive to negative. Doubling the current again certainly proves this to be true, for now we see that the arc flame is almost entirely issuing from the negative electrode, as though it were being forced out by some pressure."

Now, Brother Richardson, I am not trying to argue that electricity flows from positive to negative. The electro-plating process apparently disproves that, but nevertheless if it does not flow from negative to positive, what in Gehenna causes that tail flame from the negative carbon?

Where can a person get a good splicing machine? I spent six of those iron gentlemen for one that would ruin a film in less time than a film fire. The two sections are not in line, and cannot be lined without practically rebuilding the thing.

Who sold you that splicer? Send me his name, and I'll see that it is made good, or that the offending maker gets some free advertising. Maybe it is merely a defective splicer. Small excuse for that, but if he makes good without argument, we must all remember that WE make utterly inexcusable mistakes sometimes.

As to the which-way-does-it-flow argument, in the Bluebook I merely set forth what was and still is the generally accepted theory, that electric action is from positive to negative. I am fully aware of the tail-flame action, and I don't even pretend to explain it. My opinion is that we shall never know just what really does happen, until we find out (if any one ever does) exactly what the thing we call electricity is. Personally I don't see how anything really can "flow." It doesn't seem reasonable to me that anything can actually travel around the world through solid metal in two or three seconds. And if electricity does "flow," then currents must right now be flowing in a dozen directions through the air in the room where I am writing.

I dunno! Place a radio inside brick walls thirty-six inches thick, and it makes absolutely NO difference, so far as I can see, in its action. Even place it down in a coal mine, and the voices, the jazz, etc., come just the same. Do you mean to tell me something actually "flows" through all that substance, plus miles, miles and miles of air???

Well, I dunno. Mebby so! Mebby so!

Film Damage?

What's the Real Cause?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

This is the closing article of the series we have been printing, which we hope and believe has accomplished at least considerable good.

In these articles we have tried to tell and show you the various ways in which films are damaged, hoping that by thus driving the truth home we may get those who have been careless to improve their methods.

It has been shown you that worn parts and lack of proper adjustment of the projector causes enormous and entirely unnecessary damage to films. The Bluebook tells you how to make the various adjustments of the projector mechanism so that liability to damage will be avoided.

Improper rewinding is also the cause of enormous damage to films. As I have told you many times, rapid rewinding is, in the very nature of things, hard on films, and if such rewinding be on a rewinder the elements of which are out of line with each other, as is the case in an astounding number of cases, the strain on the films and the damage thereto is multiplied. If, on top of all that, the reels themselves are in poor condition, then the results are very, very bad indeed, though (and here is the big trouble with this) it is usually not immediately apparent.

Damage of this sort usually consists of straining and perhaps an abrasion of the edges of the film, and the bending of the film through the sprocket holes when the crooked reel strikes the edge of the film what amounts to a hammer blow, and often a very severe one, too, as the crooked reel side revolves at high speed. This inevitably tends to weaken the film stock between the sprocket holes, and to put it into condition to break easily, especially if the film is a bit dry and brittle.

The condition of the film has much to do with its susceptibility to any damage involving a breakage of film stock. You all very well know that moist, pliable film is strong and very tough. It may be bent double without showing fracture. On the other hand a dry film is brittle in exact proportion to the extent of its dryness. Every projectionist, and I think all machine operators as well, know this to be true. Knowing it, it is nothing less than amazing how exceedingly little attention is given the matter of keeping the films in a moist place—providing the film storage reservoir with any sort of adequate moisture, or means for radiating same if it is there.

It does very little good for a few of the many projectionists who handle films to supply their storage reservoir with adequate moisture if the rest supply none at all. Film wound on a reel more or less tightly has small chance for absorbing moisture. If of four theatres No. 1 and 3 have adequate, efficient moisture dispensing arrangements in their storage reservoir, and Nos. 2 and 4 keep the film in a hot, dry place, then at the end of service in the four the films have lost a great deal of moisture. While passing through the projector of theatre No. 1 the film is more or less heated, and loses moisture. This is slight, because it is immediately rewound, and will probably be fully restored in the reservoir, so that it arrives at theatre No. 2 in about normal condition. But what is lost in the projectors there is not replaced, hence they arrive at theatre No. 3 lacking moisture. The same applies in theatres 3 and 4, and at the end of the service in the four there has been an appreciable amount of moisture removed from the films, then their capacity for resistance to certain forms of damage has thus been materially reduced.

All that is rather crudely put. I have merely tried to convey the general idea to you. What is needed is adequate moisture supplying arrangements in ALL theatre film storage reservoirs, and I believe this would only be well served by means of a fairly generous size space below the reservoir, but integral therewith and connected by air passage with every separate film receptacle—which I think might be done without seriously affecting the individual fireproofing of the separate reel compartments—in which a generous supply of moisture can be kept, in which one or two sponges—sponges with large radiating surface—are placed.

I believe film exchanges would be well within their rights in demanding such an arrangement, and that the projectionist or machine operator who allowed the moisture chamber to be without water should be taken seriously to task.

Some of you may think this moisture stunt rather far fetched, as we usually do think when something we are not accustomed to is sprung on us. The tendency almost invariably is to say: "Aw, we've got along pretty well all these years without that!" And so you have, too, BUT the films have NOT got along so well. Think the whole thing over and see if you don't conclude the idea is not so crazy after all.

Now men, I've done all I can in this matter at this time. The rest is up to you. Examine your projectors. Ascertain whether or not they have the right aperture tension—see page 603 of Bluebook. How about your take-up tension? Are the sprocket idlers properly adjusted—page 606 of Bluebook? Examine the sprocket teeth with a condenser lens. Are they undercut or worn? How about your magazine fire valves? Are your rewinder elements so set that when two perfect reels are placed thereon they are in perfect line with each other? Are you rewinding at high speed? If so why not slow down the rewinder, by means of proper size pulleys, until it requires say at least six minutes to rewind 1,000 feet? How about YOUR film storage reservoir and moisture?

Go over your entire equipment, insofar as has to do with film handling, and put it in the condition it should be in. Even the machine operator CAN do that. The projectionist will do it as a matter of course. If he does not, then he lacks something of being a real projectionist.

Trouble

Sexton Dalton, Manager Dalton Theatre, Pulaski, Va., has trouble which he describes as follows:

> We have been using two 1920 model Power 6B projectors for four years, until two weeks ago. Light and general results excellent. Because of wear in mechanical parts of projectors we traded same in, on two new Powers of later improved model, Type E lamphouse.
> The new projectors are equipped with the same size lens and condensers we used in the old ones, but the results are not so good.
> We use A. C. at the arc, and have the same Compensarcs which were used with the old projectors. The light is blue and dim, and does not bring out the details of the picture, except in very close-up shots, and then the picture is hazy and very much obscured.
> At a Loss
> We are at a loss to know why we cannot get as good, or even better results with the new projectors than we had with the old ones. The lamphouse of the new projectors is much larger than those used with the old ones, but we cannot see why this should make any difference.
> We use same kind of carbons—in fact, have tried several kinds, but without improvement. Current is the same—voltage the same—around 115. Installation man from Washington and Manager of distributing firm have both been here, but were unable to locate or remedy the trouble. They suggest a motor generator set and D. C. at arc, but we had excellent results with A. C. at arc with old projectors, and wonder why we are unable to get it with the new ones.
> Picture is 15 feet 10 inches and projection distance 77 feet. The present projection is so bad it takes the life out of the entertainment. Help us if you can.

Not Projectors' Fault

On receipt of this I wired Friend Dalton for certain data. In the first place, it is not the fault of the projectors, except that it might be due to something not inherent—some fault merely requiring the application of a comparatively simple remedy. It is quite possible that the fault is partly optical and partly electrical.

First: Test your lamps and lines thoroughly for ground. By this I mean that you are to make sure that no ground exists on the projection circuit. This you may do by attaching one end of a wire to some positive ground, such as a water pipe, and its other end to one side of a lamp socket. Be SURE the water pipe end makes good electrical contact with the pipe. Attach a wire to other side of the lamp socket. Place a 110 volt lamp in socket, and, with all switches closed and everything ready to strike the arc, touch the loose end of the wire to the supposed-to-be-electrically-dead parts of the lamp, or to the lamphouse. If you get a light there is a ground, and current leakage. If you have a three-wire feed, and are using one outside and the neutral to feed your Compensarc, make the test by touching first one carbon and then the other with one test lamp wire and the dead parts of the lamp with the other—arc not burning. If you get a light there is a ground and current loss, and it is up to you to locate it and stop the leak. Or you may test with a magneto, if one is available. See Bluebook, page 356, Testing for Grounds.

Question No. 201—Into what three general classes may screen surfaces be grouped?

Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Mass.; Ralph W. Boone, White Pigeon, Mich.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H.; J. W. Rainwater, Albany, Ala.; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass.; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. D. and R. L. Crampton, Sacramento, Cali. made replies sufficiently satisfactory to deserve inclusion in the printed list.

Gray says:

On pages 258 to 267 of the Bluebook there is an extensive and comprehensive compilation of data on screen surface characteristics and performance that constitutes a very substantial addition to our knowledge of the subject. There are tables giving the physical characteristics and comparative reflecting properties of 36 different screen surfaces. For the purpose of convenience in discussing the comparative characteristics it was deemed expedient to make a general classification of similar surfaces and group them into three types. The lines of division are not absolute but are drawn so that screens of pronounced diffusing properties are placed in group C; those that reflect a large proportion of the incident light within a comparatively narrow angle are classified in group A; and, those that possess general characteristics falling between the limits of these first two groups are classified in group B.

Cooley says:

Group No. 1 consists of surfaces which will reflect a large percentage of the light back within a comparatively very narrow angle. These screens are adapted for use in auditoriums in which the viewing angle does not exceed 30 degrees. Group No. 2 consists of surfaces which will reflect most of the light back in a restricted, but fairly broad angle. Such surfaces are adapted for use in auditoriums wherein the viewing angle does not exceed 50 degrees. Group No. 3 consists of surfaces which give almost perfect diffusion. They are best adapted for use in wide, comparatively shallow auditoriums.

Bennewitz gives the following excellent answer:

Screen surfaces may be grouped into three general classes, as follows: Class A: those surfaces having high reflective and low diffusive power. This type of screen is best suited for use in theatres where the viewing angle does not exceed 25 degrees. Class C: Those surfaces which have low reflective and high diffusive power. This class is best suited for theatres where the viewing angle exceeds fifty degrees. Class B includes those surfaces which have reflective and diffusive powers intermediate between the extremes represented by classes A and C. This type of surface should be used where the viewing angle is more than twenty five, and less than fifty degrees.

ALLIE BARON
Projectionist of the T. & D. Theatre, Lodi, Cal.

Hanover says:

In attempting to classify screen surfaces into three general divisions I would say it would result in the following: Class A, the mirror and high power metallic surface screens; Class B, the ordinary dull finsh metallic surface screens, and class C, the low-reflective, high-diffusive surfaces such as cloth, paint and kalsomine.

The first named is, of course, for deep, narrow auditoriums, the second for wider houses where the extreme viewing angle is not to exceed about forty degrees, and the last named for theatres where the viewing angle is in excess of forty or fifty degrees.

I think the replies of Bennewitz and Gray cover the subject very well, but if any there be who disagree or have further comment to make, let them stand forth and be heard.

Question No. 202—Explain how you would employ the knowledge gained from tables 12 to 17 of the Bluebook in actual practice.

Bennewitz, Gray, Boone, Johnson, Hanover, Burnett, Cooley, Rainwater and Crampton all did very well. Burnett remarks at the end of his answer:

Note: I have tried my best to answer Question No. 202 correctly, and have studied the matter many times. Therefore if I have failed, don't think it is because I have not tried. At least I have done my best, and perhaps even though I may have failed to make good, it is better than following the example of those many who CAN make answers, but who are, I think, just too lazy to do it.

Burnett did not make a perfect reply, but did make a very good one under the circumstances. He could and would get acceptable results, AND by trying and studying he has IMPROVED HIS KNOWLEDGE, hence it has been more than well worth while. He was neither too shiftless nor too indifferent at least to make a real try, which same is evenly and exactly true with many of our no-bull lads scattered over the land.

I think Brother Gray has covered the thing so fully, and so exceedingly well that his reply is quite sufficient, insofar as has to do with selecting the type of surface, BUT owing to certain very practical remarks made by brother Bennewitz, with relation to the final selection of a surface, after the matter of reflective and diffusive powers are determined, I append his reply. Gray says:

First let us employ the idea embodied in figure 76, page 262 of the Bluebook. This can be applied to any stated condition auditorium to determine the exact number of seats in a specified viewing angle in a very accurate and expedient manner, as follows: Secure the seating plan from the architect's set of drawings. Then place an equal sized sheet of transparent celluloid or tracing paper over this plan (thumbtacking to hold it in unchanging position) and after marking or tracing the bounding lines of the seating area, plot this area into ten foot squares to the same scale as the underlying plan. Draw a line representing the screen at proper scaled distance from the front row of seats; use protractor, and, starting from the center of the screen, lay down lines representing the viewing angles. Then, through the tracing sheet, count the number of seats in each sector and mark same upon the plan, after which, it is simply a matter of addition to obtain the number of seats included in a certain viewing angle and the figures will be accurate. Such a plan should be included in the architect's drawings of every theatre designed. We have herewith a reduced skeleton copy of such a plan applied to this theatre and scaled to 1/120. It is minus seating figures in the different sectors and also fails to reproduce some slight jogs in the front corners of the house, but it is sufficiently accurate for the purpose and is included here to show the value of figure 76, to be used with charts 12 to 17 on pages 260 to 267 inclusive, in working out results for a stated size house.

The fact that we believe a good diffusing surface, giving a picture of apparent equal brightness to all seats in the house, is the soundest kind of projection policy, makes the application of these charts, in our case, a comparatively simple matter. We advertise the fact just outlined and attempt to carry out the promise even at a somewhat decreased factor of economy, so far as the utilization factor of arc amperage is concerned. I shall use this specific case, however, to apply these charts and will only consider commercial surfaces. Our floor plan shows practically all the seats to be within a maximum viewing angle of 40 degrees. Our objective is to obtain the highest possible average brightness over this entire area, and, at the same time, affect the lowest possible ratio of maximum to minimum brightness that is permissible and this we decide—expressing only the writer's opinion—to be not over 2. We find nothing in tables 15 or 16 (barring No. 7, which is not a commercial surface) that falls within the desired ratio.

We turn to table No. 17, and in the 40 degree column find four commercial screens—together with others—which are suitable. As the ratio of all screens is below the desired two, we may select the one which shows the highest reflective power over the entire viewing angle, which we find to be No. 35.

This happens to be a well known commercial surface which in actual competitive test has proven its qualifications. In the test a magnesium surface is in use, with results approximating that of surface No. 35.

In examining the published data regarding the surfaces, it will be noted that the limiting ratio of 4 is suggested as permissible, which, if applied in this case, would greatly alter the conclusions arrived at as per the foregoing. However, I am merely giving a specific case to illustrate the workings of the Bluebook tables, and expounding my own views in the matter—preaching what I am practising.

Bennewitz says:

I would first determine the maximum viewing angle of the auditorium, which may be done in either of several ways, one of which is shown in figure 76, page 262 of the Bluebook. Having done this I would then ascertain from tables 15, 16 and 17 of the Bluebook the surfaces having a mean average reflection power over the entire seating area which does not exceed the limiting value of 4 for reflection power ratio, selecting from these surfaces the one which has the highest average reflection power over the entire viewing angle.

Having proceeded thus far, we have but to turn to table 12 of the Bluebook to ascertain the trade name of the surface we have selected, as well as its approximate texture and color.

My next step would be to obtain all information available concerning the screen under examination, from those who have used them if possible—whether or not its surface will quickly oxidize or otherwise discolor; if there is a frame with it, and has such frame proven satisfactory? I would write the maker asking for as large a sample as he would provide, together with copy of the guarantee he will give. If for any reason the surface is found to be unsatisfactory, then I would select from the table the surface having the next highest average reflection power over the entire viewing angle, and proceed as before.

Bennewitz, Gray, Burnett, Cooley, Crampton, Rainwater, Hanover and Johnson all agree that surfaces 14, 20, 28 and 35 are the good diffusing surfaces found in table 14.

Gray explains the proposition very well indeed. You cannot possibly digest such an answer without coming to a better understanding of such matters, and a good understanding of them is exceedingly valuable to the man who aspires to be a real motion picture projectionist. Gray says:

Of the screen surfaces listed in table No. 14 there are four that may be classified as diffusing surfaces, in the full sense of the term as here used. They are numbers 14, 20, 28 and 35. This initial sequence of numbers is arbitrary and I will attempt to show in what order they should be listed at maximum viewing angles of 50, 60 and 70 degrees. Let it first be understood that at a 50 degree angle and considering the limiting ratio of 4, that the most effective surfaces to use would be 26, 25, 27 and 33 in order, but that classification is based upon average reflecting power over an angle of 50 degrees rather than being an indication of their full diffusing characteristics, and is only noted here in this fashion because an angle of 50 degrees is generally considered as requiring a full diffusing surface.

For evenness of distribution over an angle of 50 degrees the order of the real diffusing surface is 14, 28, 35 and 20. Over an angle of 60 degrees the same order holds true. Over an angle of 70 degrees the order is 28, 14, 35 and 20. From the viewpoint of average reflecting power over an angle of 50 degrees the order is 35, 28, 14 and 20. The tables are not carried out so as to give us the average reflecting power of these four surfaces over a greater angle than 50 degrees, but the question deals with the factor of evenness of absolute diffusion, as I understand it, rather than with the intensity of the light that is diffused, and I should summarize the answer by placing the surfaces in this order, viz: 28, 14, 35 and 20.

Question No. 204—Give us your idea of what constitutes a "glare spot" in a motion picture theatre.

Every one before-named made at least a fairly acceptable reply to this question, though some of them did not waste much ink. You see, men, a mere reply, which is in itself correct, may not have much practical value if it fails to give us an enlightened understanding. It merely tells me that you yourself know the answer, more or less completely, but it does NOT help the "other feller" who doesn't understand very well. The reason the replies of Brothers Gray, Hanover and Bennewitz are so often selected for publication is that, though I happen to know that at least two of them (Gray and Bennewitz) are very busy men, still they TAKE the time to go into details. You see if you ask me how much 4/7 times 2/3 is and I tell you it is 8/21, it is not nearly so satisfactory to you as though I said, Why, the answer is 8/21, which I get this way: I multiply the numerators (figures above the line) together for a new numerator, and the denominators (figures below the line) together for a new denominator. 2 x 4 is 8 and 7 x 3 is 21, therefore we have 8/21 as the answer. Dost see the honorable point???

In reply to 204 and 205 combined, Gray says:

Primarily, a glare spot is any isolated light source or small illuminated area that is located in the general line of vision of a person watching the screen that is of a sufficient intensity to tend to distract the eye from the picture. The factor of contrast, however, is what in a large measure determines whether or no a light source of stated brilliancy (within limits, of course) will really constitute a glare spot.

Suppose, for instance, that there is an opal glass shield covering a lamp in a wall fixture, and that the glass has an apparent brightness of 2 foot candles. The expanse of wall for some distance around the fixture is not illuminated at all. In this case the illuminated shield will just "jump" at the eye out of the surrounding darkness, so that it will require a conscious effort to keep the eye focusing on it, and where there is a conscious effort of this kind there is a certain amount of attendant eye-strain. Now suppose we bathe this same expanse of wall in a glow of subdued and evenly reflected light of an apparent intensity of, say, 1.5 foot candles. The lighted wall, if the sources be well concealed, may not effect the appearance of the picture in the slightest degree, nor in itself, tend to distract the eye from the picture; furthermore, while we have not altered the intrinsic light value of the illuminated shield, we have reduced the ratio of contrast, and eliminated it as a glare spot.

The brightness to which we may safely illuminate the interior of the theatre without affecting the picture, and the degree of brightness to which we can safely illuminate any isolated area without the effect becoming objectionable is quite fully covered by a pamphlet issued by the Eastman Company, and has been made the subject of some comment on pages 237-238 of the Bluebook. As this appears to be the only available data on this matter, it seems as though the suggestion that "no area of the theatre within the range of vision of any person watching the picture, except the picture itself, should have an apparent brightness of more than 2.5 to 3 foot candles," should be considered as authoritive and as a basis for all calculations concerning the subject.

Question No. 205—What is considered the limit of brilliancy of any spot of light, other than picture light, visible to the audience?

Boone, Gray, Bennewitz, Johnson, Rainwater, Hanover, Crampton, Burnett and Cooley all agree upon 2.5 to 3.0 foot candles as the correct limiting value. The combined answer to questions 204 and 205, by Gray, covers the whole matter so well that it seems there is no need to publish individual replies to 205.

IMPORTANT NOTE: Two or three of you, Constantino for one, are sending in acceptable replies just a day or two too late for consideration. Get busy, men, and get a week further ahead.

The Magic Pebble

Wm. Burnett, Newton, Iowa, sends in the following clipping from some paper, with the comment that he thinks it applicable to projectionists. The clipping reads:

Rabindratnath Tagore, Indian poet and patriot, dangerously ill in Buenos Aires, wrote one thing that will last. This is the story, shortened:

A man knew that somewhere along the pebbly ocean shore there was one pebble that a touch would change iron to gold.

Hour after hour he walked, touching pebbles to the iron bracelet on his wrist. But it did not change to gold.

On he went, picking up pebbles, dropping them. As the sun was sinking, he looked down and saw that he wore a golden bracelet. He had picked up the magic pebble, and it had done its work. But for a long time he had worked mechanically, ceasing to pay attention to the bracelet as he touched it.

Which of the millions of pebbles behind him possessed the magic power? He could not tell. He had held it, had thrown it away. The night was falling. It was too late to go back along the dark shore. His chance was gone. And he had held it in his hand. There is a moral in that story for workers that treat their jobs mechanically, content "to get by." Sooner or later the chance comes.

He that fails to pay attention, passes the chance and loses it.

My advice to you all is that you read and ponder. The story of the magic pebble is applicable to human endeavor of every and all kinds. Three years ago a theatre manager asked me to have an eye out for a careful, expert projectionist, to whom he would offer a really good salary and a permanent position.

I immediately thought of two probable men. That night I visited the show of one of them and about half way through color showed on the screen for a moment. Otherwise the work was good. I mounted to the projection room and asked the man why the discoloration. His reply was that he had been busy at something and was longer than he had thought—that such a thing very seldom happened on his screen.

Well, it happened that night, and that was the wrong night. He did NOT get himself recommended for the position. The man was recommended, took it and is there yet. Men touch "magic pebbles" in their work more often than is realized, and usually they never know they have touched them. Something comes their way which they think is just plain luck, but the real reason for its coming is that they touched the magic pebble by building up a record for consistently good work.

The Right Spirit

A few weeks ago Brother F. H. Moore, Projectonist City Theatre, Taunton, Mass., said something about "doing it the easiest way" with regard to mixing screen paint—would use ready mixed paint instead of mixing it, I think it was. I landed on him for it and he comes back thusly:

Thanks for the roast in this week's issue of our department, but what I meant was that the easiest way out of it would be by getting the paint ready mixed, instead of trying to mix it yourself. But anyhow, Old Dear, it was not what I meant, but what I said that counts.

Now that is the right spirit. It occasionally happens that when I call some good brother down, he acts like a spoiled kid, gets mad and writes a distinctly nasty letter—or a letter which he tries as hard as he can to make sound real nasty. Moore is not that sort, but a MAN who knows and realizes that I don't roast any one just for amusement, but resort to that when it seems to serve an end. In the case in point I was not so much interested in roasting Brother Moore as I was in making the point that the "easiest way" ought not to be considered at all, unless it happen at the same time to be the BEST way. My compliments, Brother Moore.

Abject Apology

I understand one A. E. Meyer, Assistant Sales Manager N. Power Company, has been whetting up his scalping knife, threatening dire things as against our more or less 'umble editorial self.

What's all this about? Why at the Campbell or Fox dinner (I forget which) when I was gathering data for publication, some designing knave solemnly informed me that Meyer's front name, monicker or handle was "Claude." Gosh! I printed it Claude both in the account of that dinner and in the caption of the picture on page 837, February 21 issue, whereupon Meyer emitted six wails, gnashed his gums together and threatened my life or peace or something. Says he: "I may be a lotta things, but by heck I'm NOT any Claude. Next thing I know you'll be calling me Alphonse or Cholly."

Apologies. In fact a whole bale of 'em. Don't blame you for getting sore, brother Meyer, but sit tight and in time it will blow over.

Birmingham Men Eat

I am in receipt of a very neatly gotten up program of the Thirteenth Anniversary Banquet of Birmingham, Ala., Motion Picture Projectionists Local Union No. 236 I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., which was held the evening of Sunday, February 15 at (examine this) eight (8) (IIIIIIII) (VIII) o'clock P. M. I've printed it all those ways so you'll be sure there is no error. Guess they're too religious to run those w-i-c-k-e-d movin' picters on Sunday down that way. Try and pull an eight o'clock bank wet up here in wicked New York 'n see how many there are to eat it.

The committee in charge was, as per program, Harry A. Rensford, Chairman; R. A. Root, Toastmaster; M. L. Ireland, Projectionist; J. T. Amberson, Decorations; Frank J. Emmerson, ?? and Earl Walker, also ??.

Officers of the local for 1925 are President, J. T. Amberson; Vice President, F. J. Emerson; Business Agent, C. L. Gaston; Sergeant-at-Arms, W. B. Tate; Trustees, F. L. Delany (Chairman); Carl Jones and A. Jackson; Secretary, J. F. Mankin; Financial Secretary-Treasurer, W. B. Herring. The program reads well. I'll bet ten centavos to a no-good tomato the boys had one swell time.

GOOD NIGHT!

Hey, wait a minute. This was a stag I think. Maybe I'd best not print those question marks until I know what they stand for.

New Capitol Theatre in London Opens; Claverings Rent It for $190,000

JOSEPH AND ALBERT CLAVERING have paid £40,000 as the first year's rent on the largest single theatre project ever conceived in England. It is for the New Capitol Theatre in Haymarket section of London, England, just completed and open this week for the first time.

The Messrs. Clavering are the chain known as the Metropolitan Picture Theatres, Ltd., and control among others the Shakespeare Theatre, The Kilburn Palace and The Camden Hippodrome.

The theatre itself is the most gorgeous in conception and beauty ever built in London. It has rest rooms, coat rooms, several floors reached by an elevator system and has beside the theatre itself, which is on the ground floor, a large fully equipped restaurant and a ballroom.

There will be a complete symphony orchestra to consist of a minimum of fifty men which will make it possible to present the very best of music in a widely varied program.

The orchestra itself will be seated on a movable stage which will be raised so that the players are in view when a musical number is being presented. This is an arrangement similar to the one used in the new Piccadilly Theatre in New York and which is very effective.

The lighting equipment will consist of fifty groups of lights in various colors controlled by apparatus of the very latest design.

The theatre is fully equipped with twenty large dressing rooms and all scenic material so as to be able to stage without any alteration a dramatic production of usual size.

Sir Walter Gibbon, who is the lessor of the theatre, stated that the building is worth $1,750,000. The rental is over $190,000 and is the largest sum ever paid for a motion picture theatre rental for one year.

To Build $100,000 House in South Bend

H. G. Christman Company has obtained building permit for the erection of a $100,000 moving picture house opposite the News-Times Building, South Bend, Indiana. Plans call for a two-story fireproof structure, with seating capacity of 2,000. The proposed theatre will be located at Main street and Colfax avenue, South Bend.

The main floor will seat 1,600, and will be 120 feet deep and 100 feet wide. A balcony will accommodate 400 more. The 100-foot street frontage on Colfax avenue will be occupied by two stores, each thirty-five feet wide and fifty feet deep. Between these stores will be the main entrance to the theatre, with a lobby twenty-four by fifty feet. The cornice, pilasters an dtrim of the structure will be decorated in ivory over-glaze. Panel surfaces will be in rose colored with a silver over-stencil. Curtains and hangings will be sage green throughout. Ample space will be provided for the screen projecting room, orchestra pit and pipe organ. The building when completed will be leased to some theatre inetrest.

Queens Village Has Theatre

The Community Theatre, Queens, Village, Long Island, was opened to the public last week. It is a well-appointed picture-house and has a seating capacity of more than one thousand. Music is furnished by a five-piece orchestra, under the direction of Fred Dressel, and a $12,000 organ. The program is changed every two days. The theatre is controlled by the Citizens' Community House, Inc. The house is under the management of Joseph Merck. The performance is continuous from 1:30 until 11 P. M.

BETTER PROJECTION PAYS
POWER'S PROJECTOR

The American Projectionist

THE MOTION PICTURE PROJECTOR is no longer a mere mechanical contrivance, cranked by hand, or made to operate by the simple closing of a switch. The Projectionist of Today must have an excellent knowledge of mechanics, electricity and optics and is in charge of a delicate and complicated mechanism made with scientific accuracy to handle a fragile and inflammable material.

THE PROJECTIONIST has a great responsibility—for a failure to measure up to the right standards means that all the producer, director, actor and cinematographer have striven for loses much of its artistic and commercial value, — the pleasure of the audience is lessened,—the exhibitor is subject to constant and unnecessary expense, —and lives and property are endangered.

Do the "dont's" of parents make the modern girl want to "do"?

The fathers and mothers of the twenty year old girls of today just can't understand them.

Their daring shocks them. Their habits frighten them. Their friends terrify them. Their late hours sadden them. What they do makes the parents wonder if they are really their own flesh and blood.

What's the answer? See this story of the flighty little flappers of today.

A big city, Chicago, disappearing in a tornado of flame.

The prisons emptied to save the lives of the prisoners, and the scum and the sweepings of humanity running wild with no law to stop them, with beauty unprotected before them and with loot and rum galore!

The Cast–

—is one of the best that has ever been assembled for a Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen.

Marie Prevost and Monte Blue have the roles of Julie Gamelyn and Peter Graham, respectively. Mr. Keable, in his book, describes the dynamic little Red Cross nurse as "gay, outrageous;" exhibitors have seen Miss Prevost in a score of roles which prove that she, better than any other actress on the screen, knows how to be "gay and outrageous." For the solid role of Peter Graham, calling for the expression of rugged manliness, and exceptional strength of character, the Warners chose Monte Blue.

John Roche is cast as Dr. Sampson, and William C. Davidson, who has played leads opposite some of the biggest female stars in the business, appears as Col. Donovan. Others in "RECOMPENSE" are George Siegman, Charles Stevens, Virginia Brown Faire, John Patrick, Etta Lee and Katherine Lewis.

The Editor's Views

THE next time you run over the list of State organizations that are closely knit and functioning in an efficient manner add a name to the roster. After you have mentioned, as is usually the custom, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and so on—add with emphasis: New Jersey.

They have accomplished things in New Jersey. Much good work of the sort that does not shout for publicity, many good deeds that deserve all the publicity they can get.

Under the leadership of Joseph M. Seider, New Jersey has come through to rank with the best of state organizations and is daily giving its members evidence of the dividends that real organization can bring.

These are thoughts prompted after attendance Wednesday evening at the testimonial dinner to former President R. F. Woodhull, under the auspices of the State organization. They are thoughts that can well be placed on the record in the bold type and prominent position that the editorial page affords.

"WHEN any Elizabeth exhibitor goes to jail for running motion pictures on Sunday, I want to go with him." The speaker is a former judge and present county prosecutor—yes, the same county where a Grand Jury has just gained its place in the headlines through resurrecting a moth-eaten statute to indict five exhibitors.

"I want to agree with Judge David, and say that any time a Newark exhibitor goes to jail for showing pictures on Sunday, I want to go with him." The speaker is Mayor Breitenbach, of Newark.

There is good will. And it is just a sample, brought to the surface through the opportunity afforded by the dinner, of the good will that New Jersey's organized theater owners have with officialdom of that State in general.

There are other evidences. Since time immemorial we seem to remember that the legislative sessions in New Jersey were prompters for talk about "black bags," lobby funds, and wholesale assessments. Most of the time it was nothing more than talk.

But that is past in New Jersey. The industry is standing on its own two feet, maintaining its own self-respect, and gaining the respect of office holders by doing so.

That is an accomplishment. Getting the wholehearted, active interest of men of the caliber of Charles Hildinger, of Trenton, is another.

We enjoy this task of saying good words about the progress of New Jersey organization. We have enjoyed giving the bouquets to Jim Ritter, Claude Cady, H. M. Richey and the rest of the Michigan boys when we set out to present a model in organization, but it is also pleasant to see others step into the foreground.

NEW JERSEY has its difficult problems in organization. In matters of legislation, of course, it has State interests. But in film terms the State is divided in a way that places obstacles in the path of those seeking unity and coordinated action.

The northern part of the State deals with New York's exchanges and its thoughts are towards New York, while there is also the danger of New York overshadowing it on points where a difference of interest may arise.

The southern portion of the State faces the same problem in respect to Philadelphia and its exchanges.

With these handicaps to consider it is all the more remarkable that so efficient a job of organization has been done. And since it is so easy to spend the hours bewailing our many faults in the industry let this be the occasion to place an emphatic word of approval for New Jersey on the records.

Speaking Freely

Well, I suppose we really ought to write a news story about that New Jersey dinner to the one and only "Pete" Woodhull. (Notice that on the more or less dignified editorial page we correctly label him "R. F.") But news stories about banquets and dances have always been a pet aversion with us. We think the country newspaper fellow who says "A good time was had by all," has the right idea if he would only let it stop there. So we'll use that style. It tells the whole story about the Newark affair, whether you are speaking from a social or an organization viewpoint.

Have to list the speakers though, if we are going to do even a half-hearted reporting job. First, because it is the usual thing; second, because they deserve it. So here goes: The toastmaster was Mayor Hosking, of "Pete's" home town, Dover; the others, Judge A. J. David, of Union County; Mayor Breitenbach, of Newark; Sydney S. Cohen, M. J. O'Toole, Joseph M. Seider, and, of course, a few blushing remarks from the overwhelmed "Pete" himself.

That's our story and we'll stick to it. Just repeat once more, "A good time was had by all."

We were going to reprint a wonderful telegram received from Bill Steffes and the Minneapolis boys, but just now it is in the tuxedo that is on the way to the tailor's. So all we can say is that it was an admirable expression of good will and it is a bright omen for eventual harmony in exhibitor ranks.

The rumor market still going strong, almost as strong as Famous stock, which last week hit a new high on the market. Lots of cheery smiles in evidence from the boys who are in on the pool.

Some of the rumors of a few weeks ago also blossomed into real news in the past week. Universal's taking over the Sparks circuit in Florida, for example. And the practically definite statement that Famous will take over Frank Newman's Kansas City houses. Frank, it is understood, going to Los Angeles for Famous in an important capacity. The Famous-Poli deal is still in the rumor stage, and the Hostettler rumor has fallen into the wastebasket.

The other interesting item of the week is First National's stock issue, followed by the statement that the franchise organizaion will give a friendly once-over to worthy independent product.

Looks as though the Johnny Hines-First National deal is signed, sealed and delivered. Nobody who ought to know will admit it but those on the fringe who always do know say that the deed is done.

Going to be a lot of shifting around of stars before September rolls around. They tell us now that Valentino may go to United. Tom Meighan is looking forward to his trip around the world and neither Tom nor Famous giving much thought to later production plans. Bebe Daniels said to be ready for a shift. Douglas MacLean still a free agent, but there are those who tell us that he won't be so for very long after audiences get a peep at "Introduce Me."

Lots of fifty-two, seventy-two and hundred and six page broadsides in the works, which means that the boys have their product as far along as the titles, anyway. And the strong possibility that someone is going to beat Famous to the splash this year.

"Fire Commissioner George Trendle,"—that's the way it reads now. Congratulations—Commissioner; And felicitations to the city of Detroit for its judgment.

From a Britisher who should know what he is talking about there comes to our desk a letter which says in part: "Why don't the American independents, instead of calling on the Anti-Trust laws, try getting a better foreign outlet? There is more money in the markets of this side of the water than most of them know. They are content to put their product through New York brokers, who pass it on to brokers here, who again pass it on to brokers in the European territories. What finally comes through to the Independent is pretty well chicken feed."

Worth thinking over, Mr. Independent? Well, then, we'll give you more of the letter: "If there are half a dozen—or even three or four—reasonably good independent producers on your side who want to get real money out of their European sales, I am ready to show them how it can be done and to organize it for them without any cost to them except freight and insurance."

Sounds interesting? Here's still more: "Having in the past six months crystallized my knowledge of the European markets, I know that I can get out of this country alone more than an independent usually gets for his entire European rights.

"If three or four of them will undertake to hand their product over to me I will get it distributed on small advances against high percentages which will go on earning them money long after the sums they now usually get for sales would be forgotten."

And then some more details. Anybody who wants to get in touch with this writer—his name means something—just has to give me a ring. And while we are in that branch of the trade publishing business I may as well add that I also have on the list at the moment a man who has proven his ability to get money out of Italy, and an exchange man who can get money out of a stone? Any offers? Line forms on the right. R. E. W.

Critics!—

Dear Mr. Welsh:

I read your recent editorial regarding motion picture critics with considerable interest and agree with you in every particular.

While it may be true that metropolitan criticism has no effect on the box office, there is no question that adverse criticisms, many of them unjust, do harm directors, players, scenario writers and others concerned in the actual production. Also I have reason to believe that adverse criticisms often figure in booking transactions to the disadvantage of the producer.

Inasmuch as I have been fortunate enough in my experience to understand both sides of the question I would suggest to any producer who feels that his picture has been unfairly or carelessly criticized that he take the matter up with the publisher of the paper in question. If the protest is properly presented and there is a just basis for it I feel certain that it will have the desired effect.

In my opinion there is too much of a tendency on the part of producers and others to cater to the so-called "hard-boiled" critic. They protest at his adverse criticisms, but when a favorable one is forthcoming it is featured throughout their advertising. For my own part I would only use for advertising or other purposes criticisms, or excerpts from criticisms from those reviewers who have proven themselves to have sound judgment and a fair outlook on pictures, and the picture situation.

Yours sincerely,

E. V. DURLING.

Co-operating with the Community

H. A. McClure Has Church Services in Theatre—Makes Good Will Pay

"THE good will of the community—that's my hobby" declared H. A. McClure, manager for the Strand Theatre Corporation, operating the Strand and Electric Theatres, in Emporia, Kansas. "And my ambition both civically and financially is to make the theatre more and more a community enterprise.

"Used to be that a theatre man brought to his town the pictures he thought were money-makers; he had a 'patent device' or two at the door to extract the money; and here his responsibility ended. Those days are gone forever," laughed Mr. McClure. "The motion picture exhibitor should take an active part in the community affairs. Fred Green, assistant manager, and I are both Rotarians, and members of the local Chamber of Commerce. We don't feel that we want to stand on the side lines while the life of Emporia marches past. We want to be in on every enterprise, pushing the band wagon, not riding free! Seven years we've been in this business, and every year we are more thoroughly convinced that the people of the town deserve our time and thought, as well as our willingness to separate them from their shekels!"

HARRY A. McCLURE

Here's the Idea

Here's an example of the sort of thing Mr. McClure means by community co-operation. The Strand played a four-day engagement of "Peter Pan" on National Release date. At this time the Emporia band of Goodfellows, like all Goodfellows everywhere, were making up baskets of provisions for needy families of the town. Toys were included in the parcels for all poor children in the community. Mr. McClure furnished the Goodfellows with enough complimentary tickets that each child had one on Christmas morning to see "Peter Pan" the following Tuesday. All but one or two tickets came in promptly.

"We had other guests for this picture, too. The Rotarians, who send more than sixty under-privileged boys each summer to their boys' camp, gave a dinner for these boys during Christmas week; and the Strand Theatre invited the lads to be their guests at 'Peter Pan' following the dinner.

" 'Peter Pan' is what we consider an ideal children's picture, for one thing," said Mr. McClure. "There aren't so many, you know! Then, too, we were glad to give the youngsters a chance to come to the theatre as guests. They don't forget those things in a hurry, and they are the theatre patrons of the future.

"Here's another co-operating stunt we did last August. Mr. McFadden, county agent, was planning a boys' and girls' club fair, where the country children competed for prizes in all sorts of farm products they had grown themselves, and in sewing, canning, and so on. He came to see if we could help him find some special inducement to get the farmers and their children out to the fair. We provided him, free of charge, with enough tickets so that he sent two tickets to the home of every Farm Bureau member. They were good for either afternoon or evening shows, and at either theatre. For a week after I couldn't walk down the street without being stopped by some farmer expressing his appreciation.

Helps Farm Bureau

"We had another chance today to help out the Farm Bureau. The county agent was having a two-day rally for members and their families. This morning the program was especially for the boys. He had an educational movie of his own to show; but we loaned him a news reel and a two-reel comedy from our show that day. It might cost a few paid admissions at our own performances, but we more than made up that loss by the gain in good will and service."

When the Lyon County Professional Institute was in session last August the teachers in attendance were invited to be guests of the Strand for an evening show during the week.

"When you throw a 'theatre party,'" advised Mr. McClure, "have all your guests sit in a body. It is a good ad. They appreciate the invitation more, and they enjoy the show more if they have friends all around them to nudge and to chatter with. Crowd psychology, you know.

"But, of course, we can't play fairy god-mother to the whole town on every picture we show. The next best thing to a gift ticket is a benefit ticket. Perhaps it is an even better thing; for we human beings seem to prize highly that which costs us money or labor or both. Here is the plan:

"The Women's City Club, with a membership of 800 women, wanted to raise money for a milk fund, to bring the underweight children of the public schools up to standard for their ages. We arranged for them to sell tickets for 'Captain Blood,' giving them 25 per cent. share in the receipts of advance ticket sales, but not in our box office receipts.

"And we didn't trust to luck that people would buy the tickets out of the goodness of their hearts either," added the manager. "We wanted them to come to the show and enjoy it. We made up a good display on a bulletin board at the Hotel Broadview, for a City Club meeting. A member of the Club, who had seen 'Captain Blood' elsewhere, made a talk on the picture. As a matter of fact, we didn't clear so much money on this show ourselves, for it seemed as if everyone who came had a ticket purchased prior to the opening of the box office; but we feel that we realized heavily on the good will of the town, the parents of the underweight children, and the women of the City Club. Women, you know, are admittedly good advertisers!

"The American Legion counts on an annual benefit show with us. We go out of our way to do anything we can for these young 'veterans.'"

Warns of Danger

Dangers lurk in this benefit plan, unless one is on his guard. Never choose a picture, Mr. McClure warns, at any part of which your audience is going to cavil or take offense. A bad reaction will follow a picture easily criticised, a reaction deadly to the good will you are seeking to nurture. Not only that. Carefully select a strong picture. You want the habitual theatre-goers to be glad they came; and you want especially the new patrons to feel that the motion picture offerings are on the upgrade, and that they can in safety invest their valuable time again. The Thomas Meighan type goes over well for ladies' aid benefits.

Another danger in this exploiting of pictures by local organizations, is in running them too frequently. Nobody loves a canvasser. People have since 1914 been crowded with drives of one worthy sort and another. They are tired of being ding-donged into buying something, even if they get their money's worth. There must be a truly worthwhile cause prompting the sale of tickets. It isn't enough that an organization is hard-pressed for funds; that is a common complaint! The Strand carries about six benefits every year. There is always a waiting list, too.

Friend or Foe?

"It's better to have the community with you than against you—co-operation is better than competition."

That's the bed-rock of sound showman sense on which H. A. McClure builds his success as an exhibitor.

So he doesn't worry if somebody wants to show a picture—he helps him get it.

He doesn't satisfy himself with contributing to some worthy charities—he jumps in and helps them make money while he makes a reputation for himself and good will for his houses in Emporia, Kansas.

And he makes certain that the church people will come to his house. How? Well, that's part of his very interesting story.

Mr. McClure enumerates some of the advantages of permitting a sharing of proceeds with various community societies. It brings into the theatre hundreds who are not regulars. They may not be susceptible to the contagion; but at least they are inoculated! The ticket-sellers go to the homes, carrying the name of the theatre, the picture, and the date, to people of all classes and interests. It means publicity galore for you and the picture. And it is no risk as a business proposition, either. They are always down the day after the engagement with the money and the extra tickets, to settle the account. Every benefit show makes the theatre friends and increased good will.

"Of course, there are other ways of co-operating in our business. Mrs. King, a member of the City Club, is especially interested in motion pictures," said Mr. McClure. "We save a file of clippings from trade magazines and newspapers for her. Once a year she makes a talk before the City Club, not necessarily a defense of pictures, but to educate her hearers in the progress our industry has made. This helps us as well as her.

"When the colored M. E. church burned and had to be rebuilt, the members of the parish had no place to hold their meetings. We permitted them to use the Electric—in which, as you know, we allow colored persons to witness the show—all day Sunday, every week, for their Sunday-school and church services. They had to pay only for the heat, light, and janitor service involved in the course of the day. This service on our part was a community move, which has resulted in a real following from the people of the race.

Co-operates with Merchants

"Of course, we co-operate with merchants when they desire to show advertising films occasionally. We charge a moderate rent for the theatre, letting them use the building in the mornings, or after the afternoon show.

"Perhaps the most worthy community enterprise we engage in," declared Mr. McClure, "is our Sunday motion picture service on the first Sabbath of each month. This is a non-Sunday town. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the Episcopal Church receives the customary 25 per cent. from the silver offering taken after the picture. The remaining 75 per cent. averages enough to defray our expenses. We show to 3,000 people, which means capacity houses for one afternoon and two evening performances.

"The reels shown are not necessarily religious, although they always have an obvious moral. The rector of the church officiates. Hymns and responses are given from the printed programs, and the rector makes a short sermon. People who are never seen in any church, people from as much as forty miles away, people from every denomination, witness these pictures, and take part in this non-sectarian service.

"The type of picture we show is best represented by 'Boy of Mine,' 'Big Brother,' 'Shepherd King,' 'Torment,' and 'Captain January.' We cannot definitely check the results from good will propaganda like these instances I have mentioned, but we feel that it pays and pays big."

Occasionally the Kansas State Teachers College, in Emporia, or some one of the churches or schools who have a machine, want to obtain second-run pictures. Mr. McClure helps them secure the films they want. Co-operation is preferable to competition; makes better feeling, as well as better business results. And the man whose business it is to keep constantly informed in the news of the trade can be a real help to these occasional exhibitors, with whom showing films is, after all, a side line.

Capitalizes College

"Speaking of the Kansas State Teachers College," added the exhibitor, "we feel a real responsibility for the type of film we show during the summer season, when the college is overflowing with students. The personnel is largely made up of teachers from smaller places and rural districts. They want to see the big pictures not available where they have spent the winter. We feature return engagements of the outstanding pictures of the past sea-

Films Aid Children Indiana Educator Tells Teachers

Exhibitors who in the past may have been the target of unfavorable criticism from irate parents whose offspring has preferred the movies to the classroom, will find a ray of hope in an address delivered by L. N. Hines, president of the Indiana Normal School, before the National Council of Education, which was in session at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently. President Hines said in part:

"Science and American inventive genius have put into the hands of the people of the world a mighty agency for the dissemination of information. This mighty agency is moving pictures.

"Most of our modern education comes through the eye. What is seen may not be so readily forgotten as that which is heard. Whether we like it or not, the commercial moving picture contributes much towards the education of millions of children.

"The movie house has its own methods and materials, the whole system being based on what will bring revenue at the box office. School people cannot hope to bring about a condition that will eliminate all films except those which are educational in their scope. We can, however, educate the parents as to what their children should see in the moving picture theatres.

"Some day, perhaps, all schools will be adequately equipped with projection machines for the showing of educational and other films which will be of material benefit to the students, but until that time arrives, if it ever does, children should attend moving picture performances regularly, being careful, of course, as to their selections of the pictures."

The session of the National Council of Education was attended by members from all over the United States.

St. Louis Exhibitors Waiting for Returns

With the city primary elections scheduled for Friday, March 13, the motion picture exhibitors and others closely allied with the industry in St. Louis have assumed a hands-off policy in the political fight, but the reform element has concentrated on one of the five candidates for the Republican nomination for Mayor—Victor J. Miller, who is running on a strict law enforcement platform.

Miller has emphasized law enforcement in his fight for the nomination, holding in the background the executive and business functions of the Mayor as head of the city government. He is of the reform type and has made a typical revival campaign, most of his meetings being held in Protestant churches and similar meeting places.

SAN ANTONIO'S NEW FIRE CODE

San Antonio, Texas, new fire code provides that theatres, boards of education having control of school auditoriums and owners of public halls must comply with the regulations of the City Fire Code, with instructions particularly to the hanging of asbestos curtains. Other appliances required in the code are back-stage fire sprinkler system, fire boxes in each show house, all doors in places of public assembly swung outward, asbestos fire curtains and fireproof scenery.

Earthquake Rocks Albany Theatre

With men and women frightened almost beyond control, running frantically from the Colonial theatre, in Albany, N. Y., on the night of February 28 as an earthquake rocked the structure from side to side, a stampede was averted through the coolness of George Roberts, veteran manager. Nothing like it had ever been experienced in any motion picture theatre in Albany.

Playing to the usual Saturday night crowds, with practically every seat filled on both the main floor and the balcony, the theatre was crowded when the first tremors of the earthquake were felt. Men and women glanced from side to side, with blanched faces, and then as several jumped from their seats, under the impression that the building was about to collapse, others joined, someone meanwhile yelling out that the building was on fire.

Aided by Fire Chief Michael W. Fleming and Battalion Chief William T. Nugent, Roberts devoted his efforts mainly in keeping the fleeing patrons in as orderly a crowd as possible.

New Syracuse Scale

A new scale of license fees for motion picture theatres in Syracuse has been incorporated in an ordinance scheduled for adoption by the common council of that city. Under the regulation, fees for all but the smaller houses will be based on their seating capacity, $10 for each 100 seats. This will mean material reduction for the larger houses, which in the case of 1,000 seats or more have paid a fee of $300 yearly. Houses with 100 seats or less will pay the same fee they were charged under the former ruling, $50. It is expected the new scale will be hotly contested by Alderman Thomas J. Staunton who started the movement which has resulted in lowering the fee by proposing in the council that fees for the larger houses be raised to $500.

Erie Caters to Youth in Lent

Erie, Pa., theatres will lose very little, if any, during Lent on account of a great number of people abstaining during this season from any form of amusement, according to the managers of the principal theatres throughout the city. Statistics show that during Lent last year Erie theatres did a greater amount of business than at any other time during the year. The reasons for this may be summed up in a statement by one of the managers:

"The theatres of the city are patronized mostly by young people and in fact we depend mostly on them for support. Of this class very few observe Lent and the people that do observe the 40 days are the ones that patronize the shows at great intervals."

Connecticut Exhibitors Lead Fight Against Movement for Review Board

Bill Revealed as Measure to Replace Deficit Caused by Tax Repeal—$10,000 for Salaries; Also "Reasonable Tax"

"UN-AMERICAN, unethical and un-everything" was the charge made by Joseph Walsh, president of the Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, against the bill to create a state board of motion picture review, sponsored at a hearing before the judiciary committee of the Connecticut Legislature at the Capitol in Hartford on February 27. The measure was introduced by Representative Ernest L. Averill of Branford, a member of the judiciary committee. It would create a board of three persons, one of whom would be a woman, to regulate the exhibition of photoplays in the state, and also to levy a reasonable tax on the films. The salaries of the three members of the board would be $4,500 a year each. Power would be given to these officers to have such deputies, inspectors and other employees as they considered necessary and the bill also appropriates $10,000 for the salaries of these assistants.

Representative Harold L. Durant of Guilford, in an explanation of the bill, said it primarily was "aimed to increase the tax income of the state." The bill, he asserted, is a duplicate of the present censorship law in New York State whereby films are taxed by the state. The only way that a tax on films could be raised, Durant stated, was by licensing them.

Opponents of the measure asserted that inasmuch as less than 13,000 reels of film that come into the state annually would be subject to the tax the proposition would not prove profitable to the state. There now are adequate laws covering obscene and salacious photoplays, they declared.

Louis M. Sagal, vice-president and general manager of the S. Z. Poli theatrical interests, regarding the bill, stated that censors became holders of political jobs. He stated that he had known of pictures being ruined by the censors. Sagal said that censors had to show people that they were doing something, so they slashed pictures.

President Walsh said there was no objection to the tax, as proposed by the measure, but he was unable to see why, if the purpose of the bill was to increase the State's tax income, a censorship board had to be added. Walsh emphatically stated that the New York censors had done more harm than good.

Henry Needles, general manager of the Strand and Princess theatres in Hartford, said that the censoring body in Pennsylvania gave children suggestive thoughts because the parts of the picture deleted were obvious and children imagined circumstances which could not possibly be shown on the screen.

Superintendent Robert T. Hurley, head of the state police, said that a board of review was unnecessary inasmuch as a law had been adopted in 1921 which provides for the licensing of every motion picture theatre manager and complaint against the pictures he showed virtually meant that his license would be revoked.

Mrs. Henry F. Burton, deputy commissioner of the New York State censorship body, outlined the work of the censors in that state. Among other things, she said that most of the trouble with immoral or objectionable moving pictures comes from foreign producers and those who are not allied with the organization headed by Will Hays.

Among other provisions of the bill is one that says the main office of the censoring board shall be located in New Haven, but that branch offices may be established "wherever efficiency, economy and the public interests requires." The board shall license the film unless it, or parts of it, are "obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, sacreligious or is of such character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite crime."

It was revealed during the hearing that the principal object of the bill is to raise an amount of money which the state had lost as a result of the repeal of the admission tax on theatre tickets priced at less than 50 cents.

Even though the New York State Motion Picture Commission may manage to survive the onslaughts now being directed at it, it will have to manage to run during the next year at $18,000 less than what it expected. This was disclosed during the present week, with the appearance of the annual budget bill in which are included all items for all state departments.

The commission had requested something like $117,000 to meet its running expenses for the year, enumerating several reasons why this amount, which ran approximately $18,000 over last year, was necessary. The reasons, which failed to make even so much as a dent with those making up the budget, included another deputy, two or three more reviewers and a stenographer or so.

WEST VIRGINIA'S AIRTIGHT BILL

West Virginia, according to reports, is in the throes of drastic censorship regulations. According to a report emanating from Charleston, a bill has been proposed by Senator Yoho and E. F. Roberts barring William S. Hart and Tom Mix from all screens throughout the state. They would likewise ban all pictures where either a hospital or jail is shown in connection with slapstick work. Moreover, card playing, drinking, or any other scenes showing violation of the law in any manner would be barred. In order that nothing may be overlooked, these pure-minded gentlemen would suppress all pictures where firearms are displayed, or artistic dancing indulged in.

Indiana Exhibitor Rally Fails to Stop Kissinger

OPPONENTS of "blue Sunday" legislation made repeated attempts in the Indiana house of representatives last week to kill the Kissinger bill, which bars virtually every commercialized amusement or recreation, except Sunday baseball, but their efforts were unsuccessful and the measure was advanced to third reading. Owing to the fact that there is only one more week of the legislative session remaining, it is doubtful if the bill has time to get through the senate even if it is passed by the house.

When the bill was handed down for second reading the roll call showed forty-six favoring indefinite postponement while forty-eight stood under the "blue law" banner. The vote on a number of the amendments was about in the same proportion.

Representative Kissinger, author of the bill, presented a series of amendments which struck out double penalty provisions in the original measure, took some of the "teeth" out of the bill and eliminated penalty provisions providing for imprisonment for violation of the bills provisions. These amendments carried, and as a result it has been bleached to a somewhat paler blue than when it made its debut.

The motion to postpone indefinitely the bill was made by Mrs. Antoinette C. Hagenwald, representative from Vigo county and the wife of a Terre Haute theatre manager.

One amendment adopted specifically exempts baseball games conducted at a place "not less than 1,000 feet from a place of worship" on Sunday from the provisions of the bill. Numerous attempts to exempt a number of other forms of amusement and recreation failed by viva voce vote. The Leonard bill to strengthen the penalties of the existing Sunday "blue laws" is still awaiting third reading in the senate and is expected to be called up sometime this week. To date there has been no test vote.

Sparks' Florida Circuit of Seventeen Sold to Universal

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the New York offices of Universal that the seventeen Florida theatres comprising the E. J. Sparks Enterprises have been acquired and will be operated by Universal in the future. These theatres are located most advantageously in Florida and every house, with one exception, is thoroughly up to date and in a highly strategic local position.

The statement was issued by R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal. It follows:

"Universal has acquired the Sparks Circuit of seventeen theatres in Florida. Like every other theatre which Universal books or owns, this deal was forced upon us by the necessity of a proper and fair representation of Universal pictures in territories dominated either by producer-owned theatres or by theatre combinations which didn't permit of representative Universal first-run showings.

"Universal has never had any desire to own theatres. It hasn't any now. The moving picture business, as at present constituted, seems to demand a protective guaranty of first-run showings, and it is only to afford this protection that Universal has acquired or ever will acquire moving picture theatres.

"Competition for first-runs in Florida, and in fact throughout the South, is becoming keener every day. Universal has embraced this opportunity to definitely establish its first-runs throughout Florida in a way which will protect it and subsequent exhibitors against unnecessary postponement of dating and consequent lack of exploitation so necessary to start pictures in adequate fashion. Universal was shut out of a number of these and other towns, and Mr. Laemmle and I have felt for some time that if the only way to get into closed towns was to buy our way in, it would be much better to do that than to stay out of them entirely.

"It is generally considered among theatre men that the theatres comprising the E. J. Sparks Enterprises are among the most desirable from every standpoint in that section. Many of these theatres were taken over from the Southern Enterprises at the time of the break-up of the S. A. Lynch theatre regime. Following is a list of these theatres and the towns in which they are located: Jefferson and Orpheum at St. Augustine, the Dreka and Athens at DeLand, the Beacham, Grand, Phillips, American and Ark at Orlando, the Capitol and Abbott at Plant City, the Sarasota at Sarasota, the Palace at Bradenton, the Star and Opera House at Arcadia, the Baby Grand at Winter Park and the Octavius at Arcadia."

Says England Catching Up to America on Picture Releases

"THE United Kingdom is gradually catching up with America on the release of the big new film productions," said John H. Taylor, managing director of Christie Film Sales, Ltd., of London, who has arrived in Hollywood to see the new films which are scheduled for early release abroad in the countries which he represents.

"There was a time," said Mr. Taylor, "when it was from two to two and a half years after new pictures were released in America before they could be shown to our British public. This was due to the fact that the English exhibitors had booked pictures in large numbers and so far ahead that they could not possibly be shown until long after the tremendous publicity and public interest from their American showings had worn off.

"Now in some cases it is only six months, and in a few cases only two or three months after American release that we get the new big pictures.

"Our custom of showing pictures differs from the usual procedure here in that we invariably have trade showings when the new pictures arrive from America. Practically every theatre owner within a day's journey of London and our other distributing centers attends these trade showings which are huge affairs and which, with sometimes thousands of people in attendance, present the pictures with the atmosphere of a real audience."

Accompanying Mr. Taylor to Los Angeles was F. A. Enders, managing director of the F. B. O. distributing organization in England, one of the largest releasing organizations abroad.

State Rights Sales

Herman F. Jans announces he has closed contracts with the De Luxe Film Exchange of Seattle, Washington, whereby they acquire the territorial rights to all six of the new Jans productions. These include, "Playthings of Desire," "The Mad Dancer," "Married," "Ermine and Rhinestones" and two others to be announced; also contracts with Louis Hyman, of All-Star Feature Distributors, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, whereby they will acquire the territorial rights in their district to all six of the new series of Jans productions.

Screen Advertisers' Cleveland Session

The Screen Advertisers' Association, which is the film departmental of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, holds its annual convention at Hotel Statler, Cleveland, beginning March 12.

The Association's achievement of the past year will be told in the address of Douglas D. Rothacker, association president. Other speakers will be: Charles Burrell, president of the New York Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce, G. P. Foute, Screen Companion; Frank Ryan, Cleveland Illuminating Co.; Earl Pearson, Associated Advertising Clubs of the World; Marie E. Goodenough, Educational Screen; Harrison Goldsmith, Cleveland Automobile Co.; James Simpson, film man of Dallas; J. Homer Platten, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; R. R. Ritchey, United Film Ad Service.

Obituaries

Peter J. Hanlon, for 12 years an exhibitor of Vallejo, Cal., and one of the best known exhibitors in California, passed away at St. Mary's Hospital, San Francisco, on February 13, following a short illness. His death came as a distinct shock.

C. O. Davies, owner of the Wigwam Theatre, Reno, Nev., and possibly one of the oldest exhibitors in point of service in the San Francisco field, died in the Nevada metropolis February 14. Mr. Davies had conducted the Wigwam Theatre for eighteen years.

Albert J. Hollister, president of M. W. Wolf Company and executive head, treasurer and director of the Lyceum Theatre in Rochester, died at his home in that city on February 17. He was a former president of the Rochester Theatrical Men's Association.

Jean C. Havez, 55, film comedy writer, died suddenly at his Hollywood home, 251 North Beachwood Drive. He was connected with the scenario department of the Harold Lloyd Company and previously to his motion picture work was a song writer. He wrote more than 100 popular songs, including the old-time hit, "Everybody Works but Father," and numerous vaudeville skits.

In the death of Peter Bacigalupi, which occurred suddenly at San Francisco, February 21, the local picture industry lost one of its pioneer exhibitors, although but few remembered him in this connection. Mr. Bacigalupi showed moving pictures in his penny arcade before they became theatre attractions, first in penny-in-the-slot machines and later in a room where patrons stood while a short picture was thrown on a screen. He was 70 years old.

Sam Berger, sportsman, clubman, merchant and at one time theatre owner, passed away at his home in San Francisco on February 23. He was a noted boxer and at one time held the world's heavyweight championship. Later he managed James J. Jeffries and was regarded as a leader in the world of sports.

Members of Syracuse theatrical organizations attended the funeral of Clarence Ball, assistant stage manager of the Temple Theatre, who dropped dead on the stage. Ball had been employed at the Temple for the last 12 years.

Ouimet Organizes Montreal Company

L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, one of the first exhibitors in that city and recognized as the first organizer of a film exchange in Canada, has organized himself as a company with a capitalization of $50,000 under the Federal laws of the Dominion under the title of L. E. Ouimet, Limited.

Ouimet established the first Canadian film exchange when he started the renting of single-reelers to other theatres which he imported from Europe for presentation first in his own house. A short time later, he became Canadian distributor for Pathe releases and held this franchise for years until he sold the Pathe rights in Canada to Regal Films, Limited, Toronto. Prior to this sale, he operated six Pathe exchanges, known as Specialty Film Import, Limited, in six cities across Canada. Several years ago he organized Laval Photoplays, Limited, with head office in Montreal, for the producing of features in California. With his latest incorporation, he plans to organize an independent film exchange in Canada, it is understood.

ASCHER CIRCUIT MORTGAGE

The Ascher circuit, Moving Picture World is advised from its Chicago correspondent, has secured a $750,000 second mortgage loan on its theatres from B. K. Goodman Company. The mortgage will run for three years at seven per cent. The proceeds from this negotiation will be used by the Ascher concern to pay the Metro-Goldwyn loan. It is announced that Nathan Ascher will control the theatres in the future.

Five New Jersey Exhibitors Indicted Under Antiquated Law

Grand Jury Disarms Elizabethians by First Refusing to Indict—Blame One Juror for Shift—Set for Finish Fight

By TOM WALLER

A NEW JERSEY law, written on the statute books so long ago that it was considered time and mosquitoes had obliterated its legibility, was rejuvenated this week with alarming suddenness by a Union County grand jury. Consequently five leading exhibitors of Elizabeth are each under $200 bail awaiting trial in the County Court on indictments charging violation of the vice and immorality law.

Former United States District Attorney Kessler has been retained by the defendants: Henry P. Nelson, owner of the Capitol; Raymond Connor, of the Fox-Liberty; William O'Day of Proctor's; William P. Stein, the Strand, Royal and Sariteros Concalis.

Private investigators, according to Nelson, may be called to testify to one of the most astounding things recorded in the history of the film industry if a petit jury is impaneled tomorrow, March 6, and the charges are actually thrashed out in court.

The indictments came as a bomb-shell not only to showmen throughout the entire state and the country, as the news is broadcast, but to people of all walks of life. From accounts from the most authentic sources the charges were a last-minute pushed-through proposition.

The most amazing feature of their appearance was the fact that they followed, by exactly two and one-half weeks, a presentment directed by the same twenty-four jurors to the legislature. This document, said to bear the stamp of unanimous approval, is credited with literally demanding that the lawmakers of the state erase this particular statute on the ground that it was obsolete. It was upon the contention registered in this document, according to reports, that the grand jury at that time refused to indict the five present defendants.

Such presentment disarmed the theatre men to the extent that they are said to have considered it a point against "bluishness." Had they any inkling of an undercurrent which they now claim was then in existence, through information alleged to have been gained by their secret agents, they would have taken advantage of the sweeping restrictions of the "blue law" to have brought about a repetition of what occurred in Hudson County last year. Then, it may be generally recalled, a Jersey City grand jury attempted to enforce this law, with the first result that they found they had 21,000 residents, from bootblacks up, to indict and with the grand finale in deciding to forget all about such enforcement upon the Supreme Court ruling that they could not discriminate.

According to Henry P. Nelson, the defendants are now informed that the rushed-indictments were the work of a single juror. They credit this man with waiting until a short time before the adjournment of the latest session of the Union County grand jury before playing for a coup. His argument, Nelson says, seems to have been that they had done the fair thing by advising the revising of the law on this subject, with the proviso that they should continue to do the fair thing and indict the exhibitors and continue to indict until such revision might be effected. Thirteen jurors favored the proviso, and the indictments were brought about by a one-vote majority, Nelson says the defendants believe.

Nelson, who is chairman of the Union County Exhibitors and secretary of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey, when located by Moving Picture World in Newark today, March 4, was vehement in his declarations of the "unjustness" of the proceeding.

"Why," he said, "they waited until the last minute before they adjourned, before there was any suspicion of an indictment. They rendered a presentment nearly three weeks prior to this time a column and a half long which pointed out the unpopular points of this law, practically demanding the legislature to revise it. The prosecutor, as well as ourselves and the reading public, was stunned when the indictments were disclosed.

"They charge us with running disorderly houses because our theatres are open on Sunday, and yet over the two weeks before they had refused to consider indicting because they said the term 'disorderly house' should not be applied to a motion picture theatre.

"After the story of the presentment got out in the newspapers I received calls from ministers—not from priests because they always have been with us—who congratulated me as chairman of the Union County Exhibitors for the support we got from the grand jury. They said they fully realized the movies were beneficial instead of detrimental and that they were in favor of Sunday opening. Their only objection was violating the law and that until the law was changed they could not come out and support open Sunday.

$2,591,139 for New West Coast Houses

Announcement has been made by West Coast Theatres, Inc., that approximately $2,591,139 is represented in new theatres now under construction and those soon to be erected in various parts of the state. The motion picture houses to be erected and their respective costs include:

Washington and Vermont, $553,139; Orange, $45,000; Long Beach, $465,000; Pasadena Avenue and Avenue 56, $208,000; Tenth and Western, $360,000; Slauson and Mesa Drive, $240,000; Ocean Park, $135,000; Manchester and Moneta, $200,000; Beverly Drive and Welshire Boulevard, $95,000; Glendale, $300,000; Huntington Park, $205,000; South Pasadena, $165,000, and Washington and Lake, $25,000. There will be thirteen new West Coast theatres in Los Angeles and vicinity within the next few months.

SOUTHERN CONDITIONS GOOD

Returned from a trip through the South, Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players theatre department, declares that the theatre business below the Mason and Dixon line is in fine shape. In Miami he closed the deal for the new hotel, office building and theatre to rise at East Flagler and Second streets to cost $1,100,000. Ground will be broken April 1 and the house will probably open January 1, 1926. He also found business satisfactory in St. Louis.

BIG FIRST NATIONAL GROSS

First National's gross for 1924 was $23,500,000 and the net profits were $1,868,457, according to a prospectus issued in connection with the flotation of the new $2,500,000 block of 8 per cent. participating first preferred stock. The new first preferred would be entitled to an extra dividend of $1.17 on each share, making total dividends for the year $9.17. Average net earnings for the past two fiscal years totaled $1,500,390, or 7½ times the annual 8 per cent. dividend requirements on the new issue.

Total assets are figured at $11,189,287. Advances to producers total $4,183,446. The sum represented in pictures in work and prints is $4,231,777.

RADICAL BILL HITS MISSOURI

Further evidence that the reformers are not dead in Missouri was given at Jefferson City February 26, when Dr. Richard Ray of Kansas City introduced to his fellow members in the House of Representatives a measure under the provisions of which every form of Sunday amusement except religious entertainment and church services would be absolutely prohibited.

CANADIAN SALESMAN MALTREATED

A near tragedy occurred in Nova Scotia on February 26 when A. Cass of St. John, N. B., a film salesman, was brutally beaten and robbed of $400 and valuable papers by two thugs who decoyed him to the Dominion Road, on the outskirts of New Waterford, near Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Censorship Repeal Bill in N. Y. May Be Held Over Term

THE New York State Legislature is scheduled to adjourn on March 28. Up to the present time no action has been taken toward a public hearing on the bills calling for the abolishment of the New York State Motion Picture Commission on July 1, next. At least 100 hearings are scheduled this week on as many different bills. If a hearing is to be held on the censorship repeal bill, action must be taken at once. If there is no public hearing, the chances are that the bill will die in committee, and another year must pass before any attempt can be made toward ridding the Empire State of one of its most obnoxious laws.

Unless all signs fail, there is little chance of the bill being passed, even though it should be reported out of committee. The whole thing will hinge on the attitude taken by the Senators and Assemblymen from Monroe and Westchester counties. With few exceptions those from New York City are favorable to the repeal of censorship through the abolishment of the present Commission. Nothing has been heard relative to the bills since their introduction and reference to the committee. Hundreds of bills die an uneventful death each session, in committee, through lack of public support or agitation.

Since the introduction of the Freiberg bill, last week, considerable interest has been shown in the measure, seeking as it does to amend the general municipal law. This bill may eventually pass, and if so, it will be signed by the Governor.

ST. JOSEPH ASSOCIATION POSTPONES ELECTION

At a meeting of exhibitors of St. Joseph, Mo., last Friday it was decided to postpone the election of officers of the newly organized city association until the next meeting, which will be March 3, at the Hotel Robidoux. F. O. Williams of the Electric Theatre was elected chairman of the next meeting, John Egli of the Hickory Theatre being chosen assistant chairman.

The St. Joseph exhibitors have adopted a logical plan in the formation of their organization. Mr. Williams is a downtown first-run exhibitor; Mr. Egli is a suburban theatre owner. Each will look after and investigate the needs of the respective theatre owners so that a comprehensive report will be ready by the next meeting.

Admission Tax Bill in North Carolina Is Forestalled

As the final week's session of the North Carolina General Assembly opens it appears that the state has possibly escaped the levying of an admission tax on theatres, but only "by the skin of its teeth." After many members had unqualifiedly denounced the idea of any sales taxes, and the theatre owners and Coco Cola bottlers were resting easy, there developed a further shortage of $2,000,000 in prospective income for the coming year.

Then it was that some outside experts came in and started a concerted campaign in favor of an admission tax declaring that "this tax could be put on without the strong opposition which might develop on other sales taxes."

The theatre owners are extremely fortunate in having as a member of the Senate Finance Committee, Hon. A. F. Sams, of Winston Salem, who is a theatre owner himself. Sams, while no one would accuse him of opposing the theatre tax if he thought it was just and proper, has been able, owing to his high standing with the legislators as a whole, to convince many of them of the unfairness of the proposed tax, while at the same time feeling a hesitancy in taking such a stand for fear of being considered disloyal to the best interests of the State.

Colonel Henry B. Varner, president of the state M. P. T. O., together with Montgomery Hill, of Southern Enterprises, S. S. Stevenson of Stevenson Theatres, Inc., and several other theatre owners of the State, answered a hurry call for aid, and were successful, it is believed, in forestalling the bill's progress. The legislature should have adjourned the last day of February, but a mass of uncompleted business will compel the lawmakers to stay in Raleigh probably a week or ten days into March.

A. M. P. A. HEARS "PIG" STARS

Two exponents of clean plays were the guests of honor and speakers before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the meeting at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, last week. Wallace Ford and Nydia Westman, co-stars of John Golden's comedy, "Pigs," expressed themselves emphatically in favor of wholesome dramas and comedies.

NEW PRODUCER IN OKLAHOMA

The Arrowhead Motion Picture Company is the proposed name of a producing organization now being formed at Pawhuska, Okla. A charter naming the capital stock at $50,000, with $25,000 paid in cash, will be applied for at once. James G. Youngdeer has been named as general manager.

Once Banned Tubs

Oklahoma continues its career as enactor of legal measures designed to improve the morals of its citizens. Two bills introduced in the latest legislature provide for screen censorship and Blue Sundays.

In 1838 the Oklahoma Legislature decreed against bath tubs as immoral and un-American. The lawmakers waxed quite vehement on the subject of such man-size, zinc-lined affairs, considering the old-fashioned Saturday night bucket, scrub brush and cake of homemade soap in accordance with the best American ideals.

Then the President of the United States installed a bath tub in the White House. Oklahoma gasped, but as they couldn't pinch him they had to wink at the gradual appearance of bath tubs within their precincts.

Now a new Oklahoma City hotel boasts 600 rooms, each with a bath. The Chamber of Commerce is stressing the adequate arrangements for the removal of dirt, and the Blue Sunday measure permits as many baths on the Sabbath as citizens wish.

Co-operating with the Community

son, of the type especially suited to their tastes, like 'Peter Pan,' 'The Covered Wagon,' and 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall.' We open fire on the students the first week of school with a full page ad in the college daily. It is an institutional ad, really, aimed to sell them the theatre over the attraction. Of course, we use our summer snow-capped signature cut, emphasizing our coolness; for Kansas can turn loose some sizzling days, and the theatre is really an ideal place to cool off!"

"Do you ever give souvenirs?" the manager was asked.

Mr. McClure laughed. "I guess you weren't here New Year's Eve! We staged a midnight show, one performance starting at 11:30. It was a preview of Lloyd in 'Hot Water.' Midnight shows aren't so unusual, but I never happened to hear of our plan. We gave noise makers to the first five hundred people buying tickets. It was a howling success, as they say in the classics. The show resulted in a mob at the regular engagemnt of the picture the week following.

"Sometimes we give prizes for various community contests. Here's an example. We are offering a silver loving cup engraved Strand Theatre Cup, for the bowling tourney at the Y. M. C. A. It is to be in use for two or three bowling seasons. And each week of the tourney we give two tickets for the individual high man.

"Here's my philosophy of such success as I have had as an exhibitor. If the community isn't backing you, it is because you aren't backing the community. Good will of the town makes business, and it makes life worth living."

Reformers Call "Wolf, Wolf!" Once Too Often for N. Y. Legislators

"Are Here to Legislate for All" Assemblyman Informs Clergyman Who Admits His Bill for Closing Has No Endorsers

THE New York State Legislature is sick and tired of so-called reformers introducing bills of a drastic nature and then appearing at public hearings with a statement that they represent large numbers of persons or organizations, when in reality they represent but few. This fact was plainly impressed upon Rev. John Ferguson just recently when he appeared before a committee in connection with the "Blue Sunday Bill," a measure which would prevent all Sunday motion picture shows and likewise put a stop to many other forms of innocent amusement.

There is no chance of this bill being reported out of committee. The hearing attracted a crowd that not only filled the committee room, but overflowed into the adjoining corridor. Men and women of the reform type were present, demanding of the committee the passage of a bill that was little short of ridiculous in its hundred and one provisions, calling for the observance of Sunday in a way that would have carried the state back to the days of Puritanism.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson, as well as his associates, received scant encouragement from the committee. To begin with, Mr. Ferguson declared that "some sixty men" had agreed upon the necessity of some such bill. One of the committee inquired who prepared the bill. Rev. Mr. Ferguson replied that "several" had been mixed up in it, a remark that caused considerable laughter.

"You say that you represent all the churches," said Assemblyman Esmond, presiding. "Have you anything with you to show that you represent the First Baptist Church, we will say, of Ithaca, or Buffalo, and anything to show that such churches have taken any formal action on the bill?"

Rev. Mr. Ferguson replied that he had not.

"How many communities in this state," inquired Chairman Esmond, "failed to approve this bill?"

Rev. Mr. Ferguson replied that none had endorsed the bill and then hurried to explain that such was due to the fact that they had not had a copy of it.

"As a legislator," replied Chairman Esmond, "I am tired of having persons appear before committees and declare that they represent the members of all the churches of the state, or similar organizations, when in reality they do not represent them at all. Furthermore, do you understand that the churches do not represent all the people of the state, and that we, as legislators, are here to legislate for all residents of the state and not solely for church members?"

As a result of the hearing there will probably be less legislation attempted of the fanatical sort, and as for the Sunday motion picture theatres of New York State, they have absolutely nothing to fear in so far as the present bill is concerned. It will never go to a vote, and even though it should, it would not be able to attract more than one or two to its support.

Spring Meeting of S. M. P. E.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its spring meeting at the Hotel Schenectady, Schenectady, New York, beginning Monday, May 18, and lasting four days.

A tentative program is now being made up. If past programs may be taken as our guide, the meeting will be both interesting and productive of much good to the motion picture industry. From information now in hand it appears that both laboratory directors and manufacturers will be very deeply interested in the new developments brought before the meeting, as well as in the inevitable discussions of the same which will follow.

The Society has already very much more than won its spurs. Its work has been of inestimable value. It now has its feet on solid ground, and is forging ahead to its right place as one of the most important institutions in the industry.—F. H. R.

Smoke Is Worse, Says Trooper, When Film Refuses to Flame

That "non-inflammable" motion picture film (cellulose acetate) will burn was conclusively shown before the judiciary committee of the Connecticut Legislature by Robert T. Hurley, superintendent of the State Police. It was the contention of the Rev. F. C. Williams, of Willimantic, that this film would not burn and for that reason churches and schools showing motion pictures on such film should not be required to pay a license fee to the State Police for an inspection of the fire hazards of the places where the showing of the film was no more dangerous than the exhibition of stereopticon slides. The minister touched a match to some film, which caused it to smoke some and then went out.

Superintendent Hurley succeeded in making the film smoke considerably and it continued to burn slowly although there was no flame. The police official argued that smoke was more dangerous than fire so far as causing a panic was concerned.

CLERGY VERSUS EXHIBITORS

The clergymen of Fitchburg, Mass., have taken up the cudgel against Sunday film shows just at the same time that the exhibitors of the city are seeking to be granted the right to open. The ministers signed a petition against the Sunday shows and presented it to Mayor Joseph H. Delaney. The mayor has publicly announced that his decision in the matter will rest entirely with the opinion of the majority of residents. The exhibitors have obtained nearly 5,000 signatures to cards, which state that Sunday shows are desired.

FURTHER CONVENTION PLANS

National President M. J. O'Toole, R. F. Woodhull, chairman of the board of directors, and others on the M. P. T. O. A. convention committee issued the following statement this week about the convention preparations and associated elements: "Special trains containing the leading independent motion picture theatre owners of the United States and Canada will roll into Milwaukee for the big sixth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Clarence A. Cohen of the transportation committee has established headquarters in Suite 1110 at 25 West 43rd street, New York City, where he is prepared to give every possible assistance to theatre owners in arranging for their trip to and from the convention. Cohen has associated with him on the committee the representatives of the trunk line railroads of the United States. Fare and one-half has been definitely agreed upon, which means a saving of twenty-five per cent in transportation charges and the convention of the Twentieth Century Limited and other fast trains will go directly to Milwaukee."

Six N. Y. Companies Incorporate in Week

There was a slump in New York State last week in the number of motion picture companies incorporated. All told there were but six, these showing a total capitalization of $141,000, two of the companies not stating the amount of their capitalization when filing their papers.

The following gives the names of the companies incorporated, capitalization and the directors chosen for the first year: Cumberland Trading Corporation, $1,000, C. Shakin, E. M. and F. S. James, New York City; B. and H. Enterprises, Inc., capitalization not given, R. Wander, G. Weinstein, R. Fichtel, New York; Russhill Productions, Inc., $20,000, F. C. Cocheu, J. F. Bouker, E. H. Rippe, New York City; The Forties Corporation, capitalization not given, O. Gustafson, M. A. Pollard, J. F. Wharton, New York; B. M. Film Exchange, Inc., $20,000, H. Binder, I. Milstein, M. Fischler, New York; Terry Trading Corporation, $100,000, C. Shakin, J. M. Mullin, E. M. James, New York City.

BILL TO CENSOR NEWS REELS

The bill to abolish the Kansas censorship board having been killed by a committee in the house of the Kansas legislature, a "next best" measure was introduced in the senate this week by Senator Van de Mark—a bill to abolish censorship on news reels only.

T. O. C. C. Nominates; Cohen Refuses Chair, Taking Lower Post

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at its meeting this week nominated officers for its ensuing election. The present executives were re-named. Sydney Cohen was prevailed upon to accept the nomination for chairman of the board of directors. Names were mentioned for the board but definite action was postponed in this respect until a future meeting, due, it is said, to the fact that this New York exhibitor organization has decided to increase its directors from nine to eleven.

When the meeting opened William Brandt named Sydney S. Cohen to succeed the present chairman. Charles O'Reilly. Cohen, however, declined the nomination because of the many other organization activities in which he is engaged. Thereupon Lee Ochs moved for the re-nomination of O'Reilly. The latter at first declined but finally accepted with the understanding that Cohen would agree entering his name for nomination for the post of chairman of the board of directors. This Cohen agreed upon.

In view of these conditions and the perfect harmony that is reported to be now existent within the walls of the organization, it is expected that the attendance of T. O. C. C. men, most of whom are members of the M. P. T. O. A., will be a record one at the national convention which will be held this year in Milwaukee.

CHILLICOTHE LOST MONEY AND NOW HAS OPEN SUNDAY

After all business activity was suspended in Chillicothe, Ohio, for one Sunday, the closing order was rescinded by Mayor A. P. Minshall, which action was taken following the adoption of a resolution by the Chamber of Commerce requesting the ban to be lifted on the ground that it was contrary to public sentiment of the community, and was causing the city great financial loss.

Certain ministers who originally favored the closing order have agreed that it was too broad and sweeping in its scope, although three ministers are still active in support of the measure. Exhibitors in cities adjacent to Chillicothe had advertised excursions to their cities over the week-end in order that the public might enjoy the movies, and this, it is believed, is what turned the tide.

IOWA SESSION MARCH 16

The Iowa Theatre Owners' Association has called a state convention for a one-day meeting to be held at the Savery Hotel, Des Moines, Monday, March 16, for the discussion of the many problems confronting exhibitors. The convention is to be followed in the evening by a banquet, the features of which will be speaking, music and a general good time.

IGNORE $15,000 FILM ITEM

Maintaining that they had insufficient time to study it, among other things, the conferees of the House refused this week to include in the Commerce Department appropriation bill a sum of $15,000 for the creation of a film commodity division in the Department of Commerce. The bill, it is also reported from Washington, will go to the lawmakers for consideration without this provision.

UNITE TWO BREWSTER MAGAZINES

Brewster Publications, Inc., announces that it is combining two of its magazines, Motion Picture Classic and Beauty, under the title of the former. The merging will be effective in April.

GET BEHIND FREIBERG BILL

Exhibitors all over New York State are requested to communicate with their representatives by letter or personal interview to get support for the amendment to Bill 484, introduced by Assemblyman Charles Freiberg of Buffalo in Albany the other day and which provides for the admission of minors to theatres between 2 and 4 o'clock on Saturdays and holidays where special educational, travel, industrial pictures and comedies are presented. This request is made by J. H. Michael, chairman of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., and a member of the legislative committee of the state body.

Bitter opposition to the proposition to legalize Sunday motion pictures developed at a meeting of the Ministerial Association in Waterloo, N. Y., last week.

O'TOOLE SPEAKS IN HARRISBURG

"You can get out of government only in proportion to what you put into it, as no government is self-perpetuating, and like other entirely human institutions, rises or falls in efficiency and integrity just as the honest interest of the citizens in public affairs is intensified or diminished."

This was the opening statement of an interesting address on "Citizenship and Service" delivered by National President M. J. O'Toole of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America before the members of the Reading Rotary Club on March 2.

ATTENTION, ALBANY EXHIBITORS!

All exhibitors in the Albany, N. Y., territory are invited to a luncheon at the Hotel Kenmore, in Albany, on March 23, which will be followed by a meeting of the Albany Zone Committee, at the headquarters in the Mark Strand building. Invitations to the luncheon and meeting are being sent out of headquarters this week. The coming meeting is the first to be held since the committee was organized in Albany on January 6, at which time Meyer Schine was elected as President.

ASSOCIATED PICTURES JOINS THE HAYS ORGANIZATION

The latest addition to the ranks of the Association of Motion Picture Producers is Associated Pictures Corporation, which organization is producing Barbara La Marr starring films for First National Pictures, Inc.

A membership in the West Coast division of the association has been issued to Herbert Lubin and Arthur H. Sawyer, executives of the producing organization, and Arthur H. Sawyer has expressed himself as in favor of the many benefits which have accrued to the producer since the inception of the Will Hays organization.

"I heard from six ministers after the jury handed down the indictments. They told me immediately after that it was one of the most disgraceful things they had ever heard of. One of them even addressed his Sunday school class last Sunday on the subject, saying it was the worst case of double-crossing that had ever come to his attention.

"The outcome of this situation means life or death to us. We regard it most seriously, quite contrary to the earlier belief that it was to be taken in the nature of a joke.

"If these charges are not thrown out of court, then we are going to fight a fight that will be a real fight. If we are dismissed we will be able to run our theatres, and the same if we are acquitted. If we are convicted—I feel pretty sure we won't be, but if we are—it will mean closing down the theatres on Sunday until we go through every higher court. It will mean that the railroads will be able to run only two trains through Union County on Sunday—one east and the other west. It will mean that if a minister rides in a street car he will be arrested. It will mean that if a man plays golf or if he operates his auto on Sunday he will be arrested. If we are convicted we will enforce this old law to the letter. If we are convicted you will live to see a revolution in New Jersey."

Rudy-Williams Split Report Described as "Nothing Startling"

Unconfirmed reports emanating from Los Angeles that Rudolph Valentino and J. D. Williams had split, that Valentino would probably join United Artists and that the staff preparing the next Ritz picture had been dismissed, were referred to Ritz Carleton Pictures by Moving Picture World just before this issue went to press.

In the absence of Williams and his publicity director, Bill Yearsley, both of whom are on the Coast, the Ritz president's secretary made known the following telegram received March 4 from Yearsley. It follows:

"Nothing startling has happened here. We have simply closed down between pictures in order to complete preparation for the "Hooded Falcon" which is to be a big expensive picture."

Charles Moyer, publicity director for United Artists, said that New York office knew nothing at this time about the report.

Warners Building Seattle Theatre

Construction of a $100,000 theatre for Warner Brothers, in the University District of Seattle, will start within thirty days. Negotiations are completed and contracts are being let. The location is on University Way near East 45th.

This theatre will be in direct competition to Jensen & Von Herberg's Neptune and will be the last word in modern theatre construction. It will be built in addition to the big downtown theatre contemplated as a part of the Warner Brothers' theatre plan, which is of national scope.

Last week the Washington Theatre Enterprises, Inc., were incorporated for $650,000. Casper Fisher and L. K. Brin were the incorporators. Mr. Brin is the Warner Brothers' franchise holder of the Pacific Northwest.

"SECRET" CENSORS IN CINCINNATI

Cincinnati legitimate managers and the public in general are worked up to fever heat by reason of Mayor Carrol having appointed a secret committee of nine to censor all stage attractions appearing in the city. The plan is being vigorously denounced on all sides, the leading dailies devoting columns of space in opposition to the procedure. There is a rumor heard now and then that the movies will be the next to come under the drastic mayoralty order, and while it is believed that these rumors are merely the result of idle gossip, yet some of the exhibitors are not altogether impervious thereto.

ROBBED TWICE IN 14 DAYS

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Paul, owners of the Marvel Theatre, Carlinville, Ill., were trailed to their home by three armed bandits and robbed of jewelry valued at $1,200 and $200 in cash. They bound and gagged the couple before fleeing to a waiting machine. The week before the Pauls had their new auto stolen, but the police recovered it forty-eight hours later.

Four Police to Handle Carroll's Crowd On a Familiar Campaign on Hot Water

NOTHING in the campaign made by L. W. Carroll for Hot Water is new, and most of the stuff has been worked on Hot Water; indeed his best bet, a tie in to the gas company is peculiar to this picture, but the point is that combining the best exploitation features on this picture gave Mr. Carroll a second-night standout that required the services of four policemen to handle. That's going some, even for a Lloyd comedy.

But the best part is yet to come. This happened in Burlington, Vermont, where they don't fall very hard for exploitation. Unless the town has changed very considerably of late, Burlington takes more showing than Missouri, and to call out reserves is like having to book a couple of extra weeks in some towns. This just happened to hit them right.

On the Gray Circuit

The Majestic Theatre is part of the William P. Gray Circuit, with a home office in Lewiston, Maine. Mr. Carroll, you will recall, took over the management some time since, a year or more. He has worked a number of good stunts, but he never before batted out one like this. And the best part is that it cost very little.

THREE OF THE TEASERS

In its last analysis it consists merely of teasers, the usual newspaper campaign, the loud speaker and the hook-up with the gas company. That's all, but it worked so well that on the second day so many persons came to the first night show that the police had to be called to hold the standout until the second show was due.

He Tied to Heaters

The hook-in was with the Ruud heaters, which have been used in most of the campaigns with the gas companies. The company took four spaces two eights each, skipping one day in between. Mr. Carroll gave them a cut from his mat, using the same cut in all of his own advertising. He had others, but he figured that the repetition of the same cut would work better than where two or three styles were used, so that was made the trade mark.

He also gave them cutouts and pictorial material for a window display. One of the stock accessories used by the heater company is the towel draped youngster familiar wherever the heaters are handled. This was set into a real bath tub, given a pair of horn rimmed glasses and a straw hat and introduced as Harold Lloyd, Jr.

There were also the letters spelling the name of the heater pasted to the glass, each decorated with a lithographic cutout. Two three sheet cutouts, several stills and some lettered cards completed the display.

THE COMPANION ADS.

In return for this window, Mr. Carroll permitted them to set up a heater in the lobby of the Majestic. It was a good advertisement for the heater and a better one for the play.

He also posted 50 one-sheets supplied by the gas company and as many straight ones on Lloyd.

But literally the big noise was hooking the audience up to a three tube set which not only broadcasted the laughter of the patrons but also sent out a cornet solo and talk about the current and underlined attractions. According to the newspaper the music could be heard nearly half a mile away. This not only swelled the crowd but helped to hold those already there and Mr. Carroll plans to make this radio a permanent feature, not only picking up his own music but other programs for the benefit of his waiting patrons.

Newspaper Work

The newspaper work started with one inch double column teasers and ran into the regular space the following day, with the gas company kicking in every other day.

He also used the bangle stunt at two matinees, and of course the trailer.

There isn't a single new idea, but the combination just fitted together well, and of course it was new in Burlington; as new as though every stunt was a first timer.

Profitable Hooks of Augusta, Ga.

Frank J. Miller of Augusta, Ga., tied in on two contests for Love's Wilderness. The Army Recruiting Service originated a cross work puzzle designed to help recruiting. It was published in the Herald with an offer of tickets to the Modjeska for the best solutions.

On its own hook the Herald was running a limerick contest limited to children under sixteen. Miller offered five ticket prizes each day. As they were good only for the matinees it did not hit the box office. On the contrary many of the tickets brought in cash patrons and Miller got a lot of free advertising that helped the run.

ANOTHER GAS COMPANY TIE-UP ON HOT WATER

Engineered by L. M. Carroll, of the Majestic Theatre, Burlington, Vt. The company supplied the window, fifty one-sheets and four sixteen-inch advertisements. Four policemen were required to line up the crowd the second night.

West Coast Theatres Tie to a News Reel

Getting a window display and a general theatre hook-up for a news reel item is something reasonably new, but in Los Angeles the West Coast Theatres tied in hard to a recent International News Reel showing pictures of Death Valley taken by a cameraman from an Army plane.

The window display was made in one of the largest department stores and showed a background with the plane flying over the sand and cactus. The foreground merged into a cyclorama effect of real sand, with bleached bones, an old wash basin and a discarded canteen. These were lettered in white as shown in the detail picture. Enlargements were used to complete the display.

Hooking to this Loew's State Theatre played up the News Reel as strongly as it worked for the dramatic feature, and the Orpheum and Hill Street theatres followed suit. In all some thirty houses in the vicinity came in on the benefits of the display.

The Examiner gave more than half a page on the front of the second section to the stunt, using the same "Army planes fly below the sea level." The layout included a semi-photographic heading, one big enlargement and a vividly written story.

As a result the news reel drew as much, if not more, business as the feature, and this against some strong dramatic pictures. For years the public has been much more interested in the news reel than has the average manager, who regards it too often as a necessary evil. Almost any issue carries something that can be played into a timely appeal; often there are a number of strong items, and yet week after week a brief "and news reel" is about all this business bringer gets in the announcements.

This experiment demonstrates that the reels can be made to yield real business in almost any type of house.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

THOMAS MEIGHAN'S "Coming Through" was a short feature, only one hour and ten minutes long, and offered an opportunity to step up a little on the musical presentations and short subjects. The show was made up of a Franz Liszt music film, the Topical Review and four musical incidents. George Washington's birthday anniversary falling this week was also remembered by placing some special shots in the Topical Review. This, with the rest of the incidents, took up fifty minutes, bringing the total show up to an even two hours.

The orchestra opened each de luxe performance with an Overture Populaire, in which M. L. Lake had taken "Indian Love Call" and "Rose Marie" and welded them into a symphony presentation. The lights: Two light amber Mestrum floods of 150 amperes on the musicians from the dome; purple foots and borders on large stage; two medium amber and two blue-green floods from the booth on the gold draw curtains which were closed across the production stage, these floods augmented by spots of the same colors from the side; light green open box lamps back of the transparent windows at either side of the stage. Seven minutes for this number.

Premiere danseuse and six members of the ballet corps were presented in excerpts from "Coppelia," (Delibes). The first was the waltz, then the polka and closed with the gallop. The set was a heavy set cottage front, with terrace. The lighting was in amber and orange, including spots from sides and overhead and two floods from the booth. The dancers wore ballet costumes with orange dots. Six minutes for this presentation.

Following the Topical Review, eight minutes, with its George Washington feature, was a special number built around the song, "When We Were Seventeen." Irving Berlin's melody was sung by tenor and mezzo soprano dressed as an old couple, seated beneath a bower of roses to the left of the stage. A white overhead spot hidden in the flowers covered the pair. To the right was a set bench on which were seated a boy and girl of a decade ago. This side of the stage was not lighted until after the first chorus, when "Will You Remember," from "Maytime" was interpolated by the tenor. Lights then came up on the boy and girl, who were joined by two girls, and a little "business" was put in until the finish of the second chorus of "When We Were Seventeen." Five minutes altogether.

The Franz Liszt reel was played by the orchestra, the special score being used in which were introduced "Liebestraum" and "Second Hungarian Rhapsody." Twelve minutes.

The Joe Thomas Saxotette, five performers on trumpets and saxophones, had twelve minutes of melody, introducing new and old numbers in special arrangement. The setting had as a background silver beaded draw curtains in front of which was a silver balustrade. On this set were played vari-colored spots from the sides and two white floods from the booth lighted the whole.

A Scored Cut

The Smalley Theatre, Sidney, N. Y., worked a change on the old dissected cut puzzle. It took a cut of Alice Terry in Scaramouche and sawed lines across the face, disfiguring the cut, yet leaving identification reasonably easy. Then it offered prizes for the identification of the picture. This was worked on throwaway cards, and got a lot of attention.

The theatre recently put out the chewing gum fake. This is merely a strip of pasteboard the size of the conventional gum stick, wrapped in the same pink paper. On the front is "Youcan Cum," which looks enough like "Yucutan Gum" to be deceptive. On the "gum" is printed the statement that you can come to the Smalley any day and see a good show.

This may sound foolish, but if you print up enough to get them all over town you'll be surprised at the way the stunt will take hold.

HERE IS A REAL NOVELTY. A WINDOW HOOK-UP WITH THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS REEL

And this was just one angle of a general hook-up to the pictures of Death Valley made by an International cameraman. The West Coast theatres used some thirty lobby displays in and around Los Angeles to tie into the window display and a better than half page smash in the Examiner. The news reel is what you make it. The trouble is that most managers make no use of real opportunities.

A DANCE HALL ORCHESTRA DRESSED FOR THE CANDY BALL

This was one of the outstanding stunts of a heavy campaign on The Golden Bed planned by John J. Friedl and Raymond B. Jones for the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas. They had three beds, a radio concert and some good stunts to help out.

Cutout of Norma Filled the Lobby

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made the medallion of Norma Talmadge on the 24-sheet his appeal for Secrets. This dropped nearly to the floor of the lobby, but it left plenty of passageway, and he needed this for his patrons. It even helped when the overflow of the river threw the residential section into darkness one night of the run. People came to see Secrets in spite of the darkened streets.

Mr. Miller recently located an empty store on the main street which he was able to rent for a small sum, pending its lease. He used this for a lithographic stand, using three sheets for the Modjeska and the Rialto, a sister house. A permanent sign is used above the sheets and the two posters are separated and at the same time given more prominence through painting the intervening glass.

It gives him a splendid double stand at a cost of only $25 a month, and at the same time the owner gains some revenue from the store while it lies otherwise idle.

Ever Try It?

It's old, old stuff, but if it works, it's good. R. L. Gyuer, of the Queen Theatre, Austin, Texas, had one 24-sheet on The Snob posted upside down on one of the most prominent stands.

Almost before the bill poster had moved on to the next job the telephone calls started to come in, and they fairly swamped the phone. Since comparatively few of those who noticed the supposed mistake took the trouble to call up, it is to be presumed that thousands had their especial attention called to this announcement.

You can't take a repeat on this more often than a year or two, but it surely gets the attention.

And while we are on the subject, most of you seem to have forgotten the sister stunt of letting a lobby card apparently fall to the floor. One manager had to hire a boy to upset the sign after kind hearted people had picked it up. Try that, too.

Pulling Wires

Claud Frederick, of the Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., sent a telegram to every teacher, to officials of the various women's clubs and the Parent-Teachers Association. This was not a fake wire but a well worded direct telegram telling of the coming of Peter Pan.

The telegraph company made a special rate, since they were local messages, and all Western Union offices in the New England territory were advised to get in touch with local theatres for a repeat of the stunt.

Copied

Some time ago we showed how a theatre over in New Jersey had gained a window display with a white sombrero, attributing it to Tom Mix.

Frank J. Miller, of Augusta, Ga., has just worked the idea for the Rialto Theatre there, displaying the hat and a card for Mix.

It may be that Fox is circulating the hat, since most dealers do not carry this size in stock. If that is the case, get after it.

Cleaned Up Dallas on the Golden Bed

Working in conjunction with Raymond B. Jones, his publicity man, John J. Friedl, made a wonderful campaign on The Golden Bed at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

The society editor of the Times-Herald helped out on one stunt in which a real society matron was permitted to show the picture to her guests at a formal party three days before the opening. It gave her an absolute novelty, and all of the papers played up the story of the event, not forgetting that the picture was coming to the Palace.

Appealing to another class, the Ritz, a dancing palace, was tied to a candy ball, red and white striped paper converting the room into a semblance of the party given by the weak-minded hero of the play.

Two ten-pound boxes of candy were awarded the best dancers, and as Jones had the candy store hooked up this involved the payment of only $3. The Ritz hammered on the event for a week, always with "Held in conjunction with the showing" of the picture at the Palace.

A furniture store had a close reproduction of the bed itself, while another was the main feature of the lobby display and a miniature was made for the window of a jewelry store.

But the knockout was a contest on "What would you say over the telephone to a movie star?" This was tied to the Times-Herald and carried special stories for a week, with a blow-off when the winner chatted over the wire with Vera Reynolds, in Los Angeles, for five minutes. This was arranged in advance, and it was worth several columns of space.

Made Front Page

Selling the Boston Traveler on the serialization of Captain Blood, C. W. Sawin, of the Vitagraph Boston office, sold it so hard that the paper ran the first instalment on the front page. Advertisements in the other papers told of the stunt and materially helped the publicity, while the 26 delivery trucks used by the Traveler all carried posters on either side.

A PAINTED LOG EFFECT WAS GOOD FOR BIG TIMBER

R. M. Kennedy, of the Royal Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., used a compo board banner for William Desmond and got a convincing display, with a few branches of fir to add to the local color. Stills and cutouts ornament the lower "trunks."

Made One Display Serve Three Shows

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., decided that a holiday lobby should be good enough to last through Christmas week; so he got one that was good enough to get attention to all three.

Tongues of Flame led off, so he put a log cabin on one side of the lobby, with a display of stills in the window. This was built of rough boards with cotton snow and a couple of small pine trees. The stills were changed with each change of picture.

On the other side of the lobby he had a miniature house, borrowed from a concern advertising a patent roofing, the model being shingled with their material. It was a very complete model as concerned the outside, but Mr. White bought furniture from the toy department of the ten cent store and fully furnished the interior, even to Christmas greens and a row of red stockings on the mantelpiece. This got so much attention that he had several propositions from parents who wanted to purchase the house for a child.

The rest of the lobby was done in holly and red berries and multi-colored lights added to the Christmas effect, while there was room for plenty of signs and a full sheet card listing Paramount's Famous Forty.

The display stood for the entire week and worked right down to the last day.

Figured Dresses

About the best stunt C. B. Stiff worked on Peter Pan at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, was a hook to the Peter Pan dresses.

A number of these were on display in a store window and some of them were numbered. If you could figure the size and price of the dress, you got it, and the store gave out a lot of information as to prices that helped later business. Of course the number of dresses to be given out was limited, but they lasted well.

Needed Two Cops

Eddie Collins offered a free ticket to North of 36 to anyone who had lived in Galveston for fifty years. It took two cops to handle the crowds at the Queen Theatre.

This doesn't mean that there were such crowds of pioneers, but the newspaper which was the ostensible host to the pioneers made such a fuss over the picture that a lot of people who had been in town from forty nine years down to the day before came along too, even if they had to pay for their seats.

Took the Cake

H. B. Clarke, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., used the window numbers contest on Peter Pan with very good success, the local paper printing the list of windows on a coupon which could be used for the notation of the sums.

One of the prizes was a huge cake, donated by the Federal Bakery, and this Mr. Clarke used for his lobby display, dressing it up with cutouts of Betty Bronson and fairies. To gain further interest a pound cake was offered anyone who could estimate the weight of the cake. As it was much larger than the average cakes, this called for close figuring, which added to the interest.

Preferred Death to Ballyhoo Work

It used to be said that no one ever saw a dead mule, but Griffith, of the Criterion Theatre, Macon, Ga., knows better, because he saw one. More than that, the mule's owner hints that Griffith is partly responsible for the death.

Griffith had planned to send the mule around town with one of the ushers made up as Beery in Wanderer of the Wasteland. He wanted a desolute looking creature, and this mule came up to every specification. He had three hoofs in the grave and the other pawing at the topsoil, but he looked good for a few more days and Griffith put him under charter.

Next day, when the usher, carefully made up, went over to get the mule, the Jack was grazing on the fields of asphodel in the meadows of Paradise. The owner solemnly declared that the mule had died of a broken heart at the prospect of being used for a ballyhoo.

Griff sent a wreath of flowers and hustled around for the next best thing, which was all that was left of a once perfectly good horse. There was not much left, but it could navigate, and for a couple of days the wanderers of the wasteland roamed the streets of Macon to the decided benefit of the picture, for although most theatregoers had seen the picture during its first run, Mr. Griffith was able to run his receipts up about ten per cent over the average at a cost of only $7.70, the usher contributing his services; in fact, the boy asked for the job.

Everything But

Getting out a double decker on Wine, the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., lined up a coal dealer, a milliner, furniture store, radio shop, a haberdasher, women's wear and a service corporation—everything but wine. Each ad carried three letters in brackets somewhere in the space, and the trick was to cut these out, paste them into a four word sentence and present it at any of the stores in the co-op in order to receive a free ticket. It took less than 250 tickets and built an enormous business against heavy opposition.

HOOKING THE CANDLE TO THE RECKLESS AGE

Ten dollars and five passes were given those who made the best estimates on how long the candle in a bank window would burn. The bank tied the title to the savings department and not only got immediate business but plated other seeds.

Tied Savings Bank to a Reckless Age

Seeing his chance to hook a savings department of an Akron bank to the idea that the Reckless Age is that in which no money is saved, Andrew Sharick dug out the old candle idea that was featured so heavily on The Eternal Flame.

The bank gave a window in which was displayed a candle, obtained from an art store. It was of fancy design, eighteen inches long and three inches in diameter. It was lighted only during banking hours, but the bank was open from nine to nine. Estimate blanks were free and the one figuring the closest received a $10 savings account. The next five were given passes to the Orpheum, where the picture was playing.

All who deposited a guess were handed a card calling attention to the fact that at the reckless age one was prone to overlook old age and the need for saving, and suggesting the starting of an account. These cards were distributed to business offices, as well. It got the bank a sufficient number of new accounts to be satisfactory, and it helped to get others thinking, which may be realized upon later.

Sharick also gave the Press ten pairs of tickets for each of eight days, these to be given for reported acts of courtesy on the argument that in this reckless age courtesy was apt to be forgotten. He also got 2,000 free telegrams through adding to the talk about the show the fact that he used the Postal Service "because it is always the most reliable and speediest. When you have anything important, call on them." The Orpheum paid for the printing but the Postal supplied the blanks and the messenger service, which was cheap at the price.

Naturally business was amply good.

Swanke Made Sale at Record Speed

Most managers are content if their lobby displays bring in business in excess of their cost, but Arthur Swanke, of Eldorado, Ark., did better than that. He made a display on The Lighthouse by the Sea that he sold to a manager in a nearby town within half an hour of its erection, and made a small profit in addition to getting the use of the display for the Mission Theatre on a profitable four-day run.

It was a lighthouse in front of the box office, rising to the top of the lobby. The rays from the light extended either side, one beam announcing Rin-Tin-Tin and the other the title. A 500-watt light back of a strong lens caught the eye up and down the street.

Mr. Swanke also sold a lobby frame he used at the Rialto on A Sainted Devil. Apart from the cutout of Valentino the display was wholly done in different shades of red, the outline of the devil's head being cut into the front sheet and the design setting back in the box. This makes the photograph all the more remarkable, for it is a kodak print and not the usual professional 8x10. Swanke is the only contributor who regularly equals professional work with a small box, but he does it every week.

Loew's Bijou Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., put another kink in the telephone stunt recently when every telephone subscriber was called and asked "What are the admission prices to So This is Marriage next week?" Addison's Coupons Make Good Business

Coupon stunts of various sorts help H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton Theatre Company to keep things moving. His newspaper and poster advertising care for the general run of business, but Mr. Addison knows that something different is going to bring in business not otherwise obtainable, and he knows, too, that a coupon card of some sort, widely distributed, will give point to an idea that never would get much attention in the newspapers.

Some stunts require newspaper publicity to get over, and the publicity gained is the chief reason for the stunt. Others are of a sort that would be read with little or no interest if offered in the newspaper, where the same idea put upon a card and handed out will be a definite and convincing peg.

About the most original idea is one in which he offered the Boy Scouts a percentage on the sales they made. This is not new, of course, but the method of working it is. The boys were not asked to sell tickets. They handled no money. Instead each boy was given a pack of cards to hand out. These stated that if the card was presented at the box office and tickets were purchased for a certain Friday evening, the Scouts would receive one-third of the purchase price. Emphasis was given the fact that payment would be made only where the cards were presented. All the boys had to do was talk the recipient into using the card. To facilitate handling, the card carried a coupon with the numerals from one to ten and the various prices. If a patron bought three fifty-cent seats, the treasurer punched the figure three and the fifty-cent price and handed it out with three seat coupons. The strip served as an admission ticket and the count-up gave the Scouts the credit. This will work where Scoutmasters will not permit the boys to handle money, and we understand that Scouts are not permitted to make sales under the national rules.

Another coupon is an adaptation of the Jacksonville street car pass idea, or at least along the same lines. An interurban bus line was provided with cards to be given patrons. These were good for one admission if presented the first three days of the week before half past four.

A SPECIALLY PAINTED BANNER ON THE SEA HAWK

H. B. Clarke, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., carried the idea of the sea story very nicely and its vivid coloring suggested the intense action of the play. We don't quite like the skull. A head of Sills would have been better.

A more limited stunt was an invitation to the members of the police and fire departments to attend any performance the week before Christmas, as the guests of the theatre. "Just a little appreciation of the many courtesies extended to us and to wish you and yours the best of season's greetings." It helped fill the house on a dead week, and it made scores of firm friends.

Of course he has tied with the Legion, in this case using tickets which were sold to the men. Half the proceeds were retained to furnish their club rooms.

He sends in a number of "Companion passes" which give two admissions for the price of one. They were voided after December 24th, evidently being used to build business on the pre-Christmas season.

His latest stunt is not a coupon idea, but a radio contest worked with a local paper, with prizes for distance, number of stations logged and the one who picked up the most unusual feature during the hour specified for the contest.

Mr. Addison knows that routine advertising will bring routine business. He wants more than that, so he goes after it and gets it.

Hooked Gold Paint to the Golden Bed

Howard Price Kingsmore worked a good idea on The Golden Bed when he hooked up the furniture stores and the paint dealers.

One of the former presented a reproduction of the bed used in the play, while the others offered the suggestion that their beds were just as comfortable as the French importation and had more modern springs. Others tied into brass beds instead of golden ones, and hammered on that angle.

Paint dealers showed various tints of gold paint with the urge that you make your own bed golden if you felt like it. The feature of one display was the fact that you could get several shades of gold paint instead of just one.

Nothing is said of wood refinishers, but a display of wood stains could carry the statement that a varnish stain can make the old wood bedstead look as good as the golden one, and add to the number of window displays. If you can get a window with a woman doing over an old bed, so much the better.

Tompkins Offers Some Unusual Results in Advertising Displays on New Lines

Supplementing an earlier letter, A. Tompkins, of the Kimena Theatre, Fresno, California, sends in a set of six displays, five of which form a very complete exposition of what amounts to a new technique of advertising display, though he uses no device that is in any way new. It is merely that he gets new effects with old mechanisms, and if you could see the actual examples he sends in, instead of the reductions made necessary by space demands, you would agree with us that Mr. Tompkins has been doing something. In brief, he offers a set of displays in which the effects are partly obtained through the use of the router, which forms a part of the equipment of all engraving plants and which often is to be found in printing offices which do not make their own cuts. In its simplest form Mr. Tompkins uses the router to get a solid cut into which he can set his mortised type. In the most advanced example he gets a reverse cut 10 by 12 inches at a cost of $3.75, plus a little trouble.

A TYPICAL OUTLINE

Mr. Tompkins is fortunate in having the assistance of an engraver who is expert at routing, a Mr. Carroll, who seems to be unusually expert with the machine, though reasonably good work can be had from any office. We are going to let Mr. Tompkins do his own talking. He writes:

"The ad on 'Butterfly' represents a combination of ruling done in the composing room and in addition an effect secured with the aid of the routing machine. A cardboard form enclosed in my detail sheet served as a guide in tracing the outline upon the cast, after which a few moments with the routing machine brought about the effect of the butterfly. This same process also applies to the 'Locked Doors' layout. I might say that the background is first set by hand, leaving openings of approximately the size of the cut and keyhole. A mat and a cast is made of this. It then returns to the compositor who scratches the outline of the cut and keyhole upon the cast and the router completes the task. By casting the backgrounds the disturbing of the rules is avoided when any cuts are to be mortised in or any routing done.

"The example on 'Abraham Lincoln' is still another routing machine effect. Securing a piece of engraver's metal such as ordinary cuts are made on, a small head of Lincoln, clipped from the press sheet, was placed in a stereopticon and the image projected to the proper size upon the plate. After tracing the outline the assistance of Mr. Carroll, a local engraver who is an artist in handling the router, gave the effect of the reverse silhouette. I would also call your attention to the interesting effect gained by the use of an engraver's tool to create an impression of the hair and mustache. This type of work can be facilitated by using a plain newspaper cast as this softer metal can be worked with even greater ease than the engraver's metal. This example should furnish thought for any number of ideas that can be secured with the co-operation of the local engraver or the newspaper should they possess a routing machine.

gather that Mr. Tompkins had this advertisement set as a straight piece of rule work in a five eights. This was matted and cast, the cast cut showing an unbroken expanse of rule work where the white butterfly now is. This butterfly was outlined on the cast which was then sent to the router and the space within the outline routed to conform to the design, with the jog for the cuts, the type and cuts being set into the mortise thus formed. It might seem to be a more simple stunt to set the rule to form the mortise, but remember this would entail the cutting up of a large amount of rule into irregular lengths. As it was, all of the vertical rule was forty picas, entailing no laborious trick cutting. The routing can be done in an infinitely small portion of the time that would be required to get all of that rule cut to proper length. It would take a printer the better part of the day merely to cut the rule. In this layout we imagine that even the candle cut was later set in. The result is a display much more distinctive than a black—though a black can be obtained, and there was not the slightest danger of the rule work buckling when the type was set in, for the rule work was all solid metal when it was cast and the cut was solid metal before the mortise was cut.

ANOTHER STRIKING EFFECT

The Locked Doors example is even more simple, just the keyhole effect with the jog for the plate and the portrait cut. Here the rule is broken to give a tile effect that is a change from the solid tint.

The best example is the Lincoln display, which is a five twelves. The tooling of which Mr. Tompkins speaks probably will not show in the reduction, but an engraver's tool has been used on the hair, eyebrow and beard to suggest a few loose hairs. The type announcement and the panel for the smaller features are all set into the mortise. First National provides somewhat similar cuts, but not in the large size Mr. Tompkins wanted.

Properly the Swanson display does not belong to this set, but it shows what can be done with a still when you can have a halftone made in the precise screen that will give you the best result with the paper and ink to be employed. This is about an eighty screen, but it comes out as few press book cuts ever do when they are run in the newspaper. This is an expensive job, but Mr. Tompkins probably figured that the star was worth the cost in the extra business she would bring him if properly played up. This probably will mess up a little when reduced to about one-fourth of the original, for it will then give about a 300 screen, but we think you can get an idea of how it looked.

The other two examples might have been made straight mortise, but routing did better, because the mortising was done on solid metal instead of loose rule, and that, in itself, is something well worth while. Even with this very interesting set we believe that Mr. Tompkins has only scratched the surface of the idea. Perhaps some of the rest of the bunch can take this up and go beyond, though it is going to take a lot of beating. Send in your results.

Here's a Reverse That Gets a Show

It does not pay to experiment with reverse cuts, but when you know how to handle it the reverse idea works well in many instances, as witness this storm cloud for The Tornado from the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas. Even here "with a tremendous cast" sinks in considerably, but the star and title are too large to be lost in the tint and the result is a striking effect, which is materially helped by the fact that the reverse does not extend to the edges of the space, and the white surrounding it gives additional emphasis to the black. This is a simple display, but it is an effective one to back up a general campaign. You can work reverse if you make it a rule never to use letters smaller than one inch in the cut. You may drop a little below that in a small size, but it does not often pay to use reverse where you cannot use letters at least one inch high. Reverse is properly the device for big spaces. Small sizes should be handled in some other manner if the best results are to be obtained. This, however, does not hold good if you get a black ink on good white paper. There the reverse can be much smaller and still be effective.

Norma Shearer Scores Heavily in Dual Role in Metro-Goldwyn Film Finely Directed by Monta Bell

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Two interesting points in connection with "Lady of the Night," a Metro-Goldwyn production based on a story by Adela Rogers St. John, are that it was directed by Monta Bell who gave great promise by his work in screening "Broadway After Dark" and "The Snob" and that it features a young woman whose performances for some time past deserve recognition—Norma Shearer.

From the spectator's angle, the work of Miss Shearer is naturally the most outstanding and she certainly has abundant opportunities here as she appears in two widely different roles, as two girls in love with the same men, one a girl of the upper classes, the other a girl of the underworld the daughter of a criminal. And she certainly makes good. In one she appears in the kind of roles with which her fans are familiar. In the other, one of exaggerated make-up, she reveals exceptional ability as a character actress. She strikingly brings out the contrasts between those two characters, never once by movement or mannerism giving the impression that the two characters are played by the same person. She makes of both characters real human beings.

"Lady of the Night" has a rather slight story and the significance of the title is not clear. Lest it be confused with a current and much talked of play with a quite similar title, we want to assure you that there is nothing risque, and it is devoid of sexy situations.

The story is really a character study of these two girls with the emphasis on the girl of the underworld. The other characters are subordinate. She is the one who gets your sympathy. Miss Shearer makes the unrequited love of this girl tug at the heart, but at the same time there is excellent comedy touches mingled with the pathos. You are apt to be a bit disappointed when she sacrifices her own love so that the hero may be happy with the other girl.

Mr. Bell has strikingly brought out the limited possibilities of this story which is not particularly strong in drama, and leans more to the emotional side. Many of the situations are extremely effective and the picture is at all times interesting and entertaining; his excellence in other respects makes one wonder at the overdressing of the underworld girl and her Bowery sweetheart which amounts to caricature, and there are other minor lapses. These, however, are more than made up for by its many good points, and it is a picture that should prove a pleasing attraction for all classes of patrons.

The only other characters of prominence in the cast are the Bowery beau capably portrayed by George K. Arthur who made a good impression as the Boy in "Salvation Hunters," and the hero, a role which Malcolm McGregor fills to entire satisfaction.

A chap tries to get fresh and Dave, a young inventor with a workshop nearby, comes to her rescue, and he and Molly become pals. At her suggestion he sells an invention to bankers instead of giving it to the crooks on percentage. In this way he meets the judge's daughter, Florence. Soon both girls are deeply in love with David and he returns Florence's love, but she finds out about Molly and says Molly has a prior claim. Molly and Florence meet and Molly sacrifices her own love for David's happiness and marries Chunky, leaving David and Florence free to find happiness together.

"Breed of the Border"

Thrilling F. B. O. Western Stars Lefty Flynn, as Invincible Hero, and Dorothy Dwan

Reviewed by Tom Waller

"Breed of the Border" is five reels of F. B. O. western material with a one man hero of the invincible type. As regards action, it travels along like a somewhat condensed serial of the plains.

Lefty Flynn all during the feature wears a nice smile and a gaudy cowboy outfit. There is not a single obstacle which he does not overcome with such ease as to make him appear blase in the face of the most harrowing incident or greatest hazard. Single-handed, Flynn, as Circus Lacy, cleans out a nest of bad men and frightens them to such an extent with his lightning-like twirling of forty-fives that they seem to be rendered dumb when he appears.

Cowboy Lacy is possessed with an intuition nothing short of phenomenal. He clears up one situation just in time to prevent anything fatal from happening in another. He proves that the politicians are in league with marauders, captures the $10,000 reward and also the girl whose father he saved at another time from hanging.

People who like this sort of story should be guaranteed satisfaction before witnessing "Breed of the Border." It has a mine robbery in addition to the other things which include almost every ingredient ever used or being used in western plots and narratives.

Story

Circus Lacey, a stranger, drifts into a little western town on the wake of a series of robberies. He proves to the sheriff that he is the quicker of the two on the draw. He saves Ethel from Red Lucas, terror of the community. The sheriff frames Ethel's father when Ethel refuses to submit to his demands. Circus saves Slocum from being hanged by the mob. He later captures one of Lucas' men, from whom he learns of the bandits' secret home. Surprised by Lucas, Circus decoys him into mountainous caves. Lucas cannot find his way out and in order to prevent himself from dying from thirst accedes to Circus' demands and turns over his guns. He also reveals that the sheriff is his confederate. Circus gets back to town just in time to prevent the bank from being robbed and to catch the sheriff and his men redhanded.

"Percy"

Charles Ray Has a Congenial Role in Pathe Picture That Should Please Majority of Audiences

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Charles Ray has the type of role that suits him in "Percy," a Thomas H. Ince production distributed through Pathe, based on the novel, "The Desert Fiddler," written by W. H. Hamby. It is the kind of picture that will appeal to Ray fans and provide satisfying entertainment for the majority of patrons.

The title is descriptive of the type of character Ray portrays in part of the film, but, as usual, he finds himself and proves a hero under exciting circumstances. An amusing opening shows a child, apparently a girl, doing classical dancing, but it proves to be Percy, who grows up to be a regular mamma's boy. A friend of father takes a hand and puts Percy through his paces, involving a cabaret, anti-Volstead stuff, etc., with the result that to escape the police he hides in a freight car and finds himself in the West in the midst of a fight over water-power. In the climax he licks the villain and wins the girl.

This is all congenial material for Charles Ray, and the kind he can do so well. There is good human interest, a pretty little romance, excellent comedy and a melodramatic climax where the dam bursts and Ray and the villain fight in the swirling waters. There is also a good aeroplane sequence.

The picture is interesting and entertaining throughout and moves along at a good tempo. The star has the advantage of a fine supporting cast. Barbara Bedford is a fine type for the girl, and Charles Murray in a very much out of the ordinary comedy role does the best work of his career and at times threatens to "steal" the honors. His character is that of Holy Joe, who either talks religion or cheats at cards, depending on his audience. His quaint philosophy and effective material assistance as a pal of the hero register strongly. It is an eccentric comedy characterization, with some of the situations even burlesqued. Betty Blythe shines as a Mexican vamp.

There is plenty of action, and the big climax is well handled. Altogether it is a picture that should please in almost any theatre.

Percival (grown-up)	Charles Ray
Breezy	David Winter
Reedy Jenkins	Victor McLaglen

Based on novel "The Desert Fiddler" by William H. Hamby.
Scenario by Eve Unsell and J. G. Hawks.
Directed by R. William Neill.
Length, six reels.

Story

Much to the disgust of his father, Percival was raised by his mother as a regular sissy, so when, during a political campaign "Breezy" offered to take Percy and make a man of him, father was only too willing. Several drinks disguised with ginger ale make Percy a roaring fighter and he took the stump for his father. Escaping from a street riot he entered a freight car and the next morning found him in a wild Mexican border town. An eccentric character, Holy Joe, rescued him from tramps and took him to a saloon where he made a hit with his playing. The owner was seeking to grab lands by shutting off the water supply. Percival and Joe came to her rescue, and when Percy learned that the saloon-keeper Reedy had gone to the dam, he followed and there was an exciting fight, during which the dam was blown up and they continued to struggle in the water. Percy's father arrived and congratulated him, and Percy asked the girl Imogene whom he had helped to become his wife.

"Too Many Kisses"

Richard Dix in His Third Paramount Star Offering Proves His Forte to be Light Comedy

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

If Richard Dix in his star offerings is fishing around for the most suitable style of story, he should stop short with the type represented by his third offering. "Manhattan" was an interesting melodrama and "A Man Must Live" impressed in spite of a rather unpleasant theme, but "Too Many Kisses," a comedy stressed almost into farce, is a type of entertainment that offers Dix at his best. He should hold to this general type of production.

There is not much depth to the plot, but the thread of story is well defined and always apparent and the ample comedy developments all connect with this thread of story. The plot is not left hung up in the air while the director and players proceed to develop amusing situations. The situations arise from the plot, so that the story interest is constant if not intrusive.

Apart from a few close-ups in which Dix looks entirely too well satisfied with himself, he plays easily and without self consciousness the role of a susceptible young business man, to which William Powell supplies an excellent foil as the fiery Basque rival. He does not clown, but he gets the full comedy out of the role. Joe Burke, as Dix's male chaperone, is more in the comic opera style. Frances Howard is given small chance to be other than pretty, but she is an ample excuse for the rivalry between the two men.

Several fine interiors and three well-built exteriors give a picturesque setting that never oppresses. The photography is excellent and the direction of Paul Sloane is capital, even though at times he overdevelops a situation to gain a few additional laughs. Sloane and Dix have hit the bullseye squarely in the centre for a comedy hit. It should appeal to almost everyone.

Story

Putting pleasure before business, Richard Gaylord, Jr., is given a last chance by his much tried parent. His factotum, Simmons, is about to leave for the Basque country, and tells the senior Gaylord that the Basque women never marry outside of their own race. Dick is sent with Simmons and told that if he will leave women alone for three months he can have a half interest in the business. Then he meets Yvonne Hurja, daughter of the man with whom Simmons has come to do business. Yvonne is desired by Julio, the local police chief, who also is head of the local banditry. When she prefers Dick, Julio has him captured by the bandits while he goes to claim the hand of Yvonne, but that does not track with Dick's ideas, so Gaylord, Sr., arrives on the scene just in time to cheer on the fight and give his paternal blessings to the victor.

"The Re-Creation of Brian Kent"

Principal Offers Another Harold Bell Wright Novel That Should Please Majority of Patrons

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

The enormous sale of Harold Bell Wright's novels is indisputable proof of their widespread popularity, and as "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," produced and distributed by Principal Pictures Corporation, is an unusually faithful adaptation of the author's story of the same title, it should provide pleasing entertainment for the majority.

Mr. Wright's stories are not written for the blase and sophisticated, but for the masses; they deal for the most part with familiar characters and situations and extol the homely virtues. In this instance the story is built around the beautiful and uplifting influence of an elderly spinster school teacher whose kindness brings about the regeneration—the re-creation—of a fellow who has yielded to temptation and stolen money from the bank in which he was employed.

This picture has the advantage of an unusually capable cast, with Kenneth Harlan in the title role, Helene Chadwick playing opposite, Mary Carr as the school teacher, an intensely sympathetic and appealing role of the kind Mrs. Carr can handle so well, and ZaSu Pitts as a crippled little slavey. They handle the majority of the action, with such well known players as Rosemary Theby, T. Roy Barnes, Ralph Lewis and Russell Simpson in subordinate roles. Every one of the players is capably cast and give thoroughly satisfactory performances.

This story belongs to the type where everything moves along smoothly in well-ordered fashion, working out just as the majority would wish it, and even if there is little suspense, it is pleasant, refreshing and absolutely clean entertainment. There is a charming romance, with pathos and effective comedy in the unrequited love of the little slavey, an element of drama in the sudden reappearance of the hero's wife and a good melodramatic climax where Kent unsuccessfully tries to save her and both are swept over a high falls and he battles with the rapids below. But above all and permeating the whole story is the beautiful mother-like love and influence of the elderly schoolmarm.

Former Film Salesman Starts Chain in Northern New York

Acquiring three additional theatres during the past week, James Rose of the Bijou in Troy, N. Y., has started the nucleus of a chain that may in time rival that of the Shine boys, William Smalley or some of the others that have expanded in New York State during the past year or so. After several years as a salesman, Mr. Rose took over the Bijou a few months ago and started right off the bat by demonstrating that he knew the prices he should pay for a house of the type he was running. He played good pictures from the start, paying prices of the "live and let live" variety and the patronage of the Bijou grew by leaps and bounds. Now Mr. Rose is out to repeat with Gardner's Hall, a Troy house owned by Miller and Armstrong, closed for some time, seating 450; the Columbian, a 450-seat house in Rensselaer, run by Elmer Griffin, and the Opera House in Kinderhook. Mr. Rose will reopen Gardner's Hall about April 1, charging 10 and 15 cents, while the Columbian, charging 10, 15 and 20 cents, will reopen at about the same time. Mr. Griffin being continued as its manager, the Kinderhook Theatre, with 20 and 25 cents admission, remaining open.

What did Walter Roberts do the other night after leaving the Troy Theatre, where he is manager and chief factotum, but lug home a couple of lobsters and $8 in hard cash, all through his efforts on the alleys. Mr. Roberts is some bowler. He was high man among the bowlers of all Troy for two weeks, holding the honors as high man in singles, high man for three games and a few other things. But that's not all. Here's the sad part. Benjamin Stern, assistant manager, took Mr. Roberts on for a few games the other night and trimmed him to a frazzle. Too many splits dished Mr. Roberts' chances from the start.

Hobbling about with a cane is a blamed sight better than being obliged to use a crutch, or at least such are the sentiments these days of Sol Mannheimer of the Robbins' theatres in Watertown. Mr. Mannheimer has been laid up with the rheumatism but is now on the road to recovery. Last week he discarded the crutch and the cane is the next to go.

If Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, had a million, or, we'll say, half that amount, the chances are that he would get more real enjoyment out of life than many a millionaire of today does. Harry makes a good living with his theatre and doesn't keep his nose to the grindstone 365 days out of the year, either. Last week found him at Lake Placid, hiking around the lake during the days and enjoying the skating evenings. Incidentally, Mr. Hellman just forgot that there was such a thing as theatre worries.

Smacking of the good old days when he trod the boards as a showman, Dave Seymour, owner of the Pontiac Beautfiul at Saranac Lake, is pretty dramatic at times, especially when it comes to talking prices for films with the salesmen. And they do say that Friend Dave is a convincing talker, too. Anyhow, his theatre is making money aplenty these days, and its owner isn't a bit worried about a rumor that another house may shortly be erected in the Adirondack village.

Joseph Saperstein of the Griswold in Troy took a little jaunt down to New York last week, but the white lights didn't make much of an impression. Joe had hardly arrived back in town when he was heard to remark that he was "glad to be back."

Looking the picture of health, with a tan acquired on Florida beaches, M. E. Silberstein of the Community Theatre in Catskill arrived on Film Row during the past week and just admitted that he had enjoyed himself in a recent trip that included Havana and southern resorts. Mr. Silberstein took a fiendish delight in remarking that while Albany was wading to its neck in snow he was sporting around in a bathing suit. Now he's back, he may still get a taste of real winter.

Who is the busiest exhibitor in all Northern New York? Ask any film salesman and the answer will be, "Ernest Wolfe of Lowville." Mr. Wolfe has many irons in the fire and has always got to do "this or that."

Well, what do you suppose Henry Wilkinson, one time manager of the Lincoln in Troy, is doing? Mr. Wilkinson hasn't been around these diggings in a long time, but some of the boys ran into him the other night in Utica. Mr. Wilkinson hasn't deserted the business entirely, however, for he is selling organs.

At times Nate Robbins of Utica, with theatres in that city, Syracuse and Watertown, must feel like the proverbial mouse that ventures out of his hole and finds himself being watched by a cat. The other night there were no less than ten film salesmen or managers of exchanges in Utica, waiting for a chance to see Mr. Robbins and explain just why he should book their product.

According to the latest dope, the American Theatre in Troy, recently taken over by the Strand interests, will not reopen until September. There was some talk that the house would reopen in March, but thus far there is nothing to indicate it.

In order to make it more typical than ever of its name, the Gem Theatre in Little Falls is in the process of dolling up a bit, with a redecorated interior, a new lobby and other improvements. The house is owned and run by Mrs. McGraw, whose sister, residing in the country, has been ill.

His Greatest Thrill (Slip Us Yours)

A Single Picture Staved Off Bankruptcy

Editor, Exhibitors' News and Views:

It has been a long time since I have had anything thrill me; that is, anything that had to do with the movies; for since several New York birds are hogging things, fellows like me who used to get a kick out of an occasional trip to New York and battle for some of the big ones are forced to stay at home and take the left-overs.

At any rate, I have had several darbs, the first when I ran the first page ad in a Toledo Sunday newspaper eleven years ago, which, I think, was the first ever run anywhere. You should have seen the people flock to the theatre all the week. "Inside of the White Slave Traffic" was our picture, 10 cents was our admission price and we cleaned up and put the old theatre on the map. Prior to this we were ready to give up—$24,000 in the hole. This, however, turned the tide and we are still at it.

Thrill No. 2 came when I brought "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" for a two weeks' run at the Temple Theatre, grossing $14,000 at 50 and 75 cents, this after a nine days' run at a legitimate theatre in Toledo at $1.65 at a little over $8,000, I was informed.

Yours very truly,

H. C. HORATER.
Temple Theatre, Toledo, Ohio.

P. S.—You fellows are getting there with The World. I am watching you, old top.—H. C. H.

Albany, N. Y.

Although Tivoli is nearly two miles from a railroad station, it doesn't lack good pictures presented in one of the most attractive houses in this part of the state. Charles Roff does the booking for Masonic Hall where the pictures are shown two nights a week. The house is finished in hardwood throughout and is a model of cleanliness.

Getting a bit homesick, so the story goes, when he reached North Carolina, Mike Kallet, a well known exhibitor of Oneida, is back from his southern trip and finds Oneida isn't such a bad place after all.

Effects of the Lenten season were reported by some of the managers in Albany and Troy during the past week. Both cities have a very heavy Catholic population and the slump is expected. Some of the houses will play off their more common pictures during the month, while others are planning to go after business by showing some of the biggest and best pictures booked.

All records in the way of attendance at the Rose Theatre in Troy went by the board last Saturday when "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" packed the house to suffocation from noon until far into the evening. Mr. Rosenthal had five men on the floor handling the crowds and watching that children were not caught and injured in the rush for seats. Mr. Rosenthal has arranged to bring the pictures back for the Tuesday before Easter. He charged his regular 10-cent admission.

Abe Stone now weighs 255 pounds and last week admitted the fact, hastening to add that while he is devoting many hours each day to his two theatres, the Delaware and Arbor Hill in Albany, he simply can't seem to lose weight. Mr. Stone hasn't partaken of a breakfast in many years and has cut out meat and potatoes for weeks, but the scales keep right on telling the same old story, or worse. Mr. Stone has just installed a new projection machine at the Arbor Hill house and announces his intention of surrendering the Delaware when his lease runs out next fall.

In Canajoharie, N. Y., the two exhibitors there can watch each other's every move without any great amount of trouble. The houses are next door to each other, William Wood running the Strand and James Chest looking after the Capitol.

From now on it's "Attorney George Dwore" of Schenectady, for Mr. Dwore, who runs the Capitol and Cameo theatres in that city, has opened a law office after receiving his sheepskin.

Speaking of lawyers, William F. Kennedy, running the Lyceum in Champlain, may have missed his calling in that direction, despite the fact that at the present time he is theatre owner, express agent, postmaster and a few other things. Mr. Kennedy was along Film Row last week. For arguing over prices he has few equals. Mr. Kennedy closes his theatre during the summer and enjoys himself at his camp evenings.

WILLIAM K. HOWARD

Director of Paramount's "The Thundering Herd," which takes high place among "western" pictures, in the judgment of the most exacting critics.

Beat this, if you can, for 10 cents. One day last week Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose in Troy, for a 10-cent admission gave "Romance Ranch," 6 reels; "The Woman Who Sins," 7 reels; a two-reel episode in "Ten Scars Make a Man," a two-reel comedy and a news reel. All of which caused Jake to remark that his patrons can't help being in a good mood when they leave the theatre, many stopping and telling Mr. Rosenthal how much they enjoyed "the picture."

"Charley's Aunt" is going over big this week at the Troy Theatre and the Mark Strand in Albany. The two theatres called for the picture sooner than anticipated by the exchange, and there was a lot of hustling during the week, with wires to Chicago and New York for advertising matter "Pop" Linton of Utica has bought the picture for the opening of his new house in that city this month.

These are strenuous days for Oscar Perrin of the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany and the Empire in Glens Falls. Last Sunday was a fair sample. Mr. Perrin retired at 1 o'clock Saturday night, was up at 7 o'clock Sunday morning and in Glens Falls three hours later.

There was a time when Paul Alberts, as manager of the Albany Theatre in Schenectady, was along Film Row each week. Then he disposed of the house to the Farash interests, journeyed to New York and hasn't been seen since until last week when he dropped in on his many friends in Albany.

If "Al" Bothner's trusty old Ford will only stand the gaff, the Mohawk Theatre, owned by William Smalley and managed by Mr. Bothner, will be known far and wide. In fact, Mr. Bothner is distributing his window cards and one sheets for a radius of fifty miles and may eventually invade Utica. Mr. Bothner works up and down the Mohawk Valley, never letting an opportunity slip by to advertise the theatre.

Elmer Crowinshield, a former exhibitor, now in the theatre supply business in Albany, was sick in bed with an attack of the grip last week. Mr. Crowinshield had managed to fight it off for a week or so, but last Wednesday had to give up and crawl beneath the sheets.

If there is one exhibitor in this part of the state who stands right with the young ladies in one particular exchange, it's W. H. Tremper of Rhinebeck, who runs a theatre, and also raises what the young women declare are "the finest violets in the world." It seems that some time ago Mr. Tremper promised C. R. Halligan of the Universal exchange a barrel of apples. They never arrived, and so in a spirit of fun Mr. Halligan remarked that he might send violets. Then came the biggest and best surprise in many a month—no less than six bouquets of violets. The next day Mr. Tremper received a round robin of "thanks" from every girl in the exchange and Mr. Halligan, too, for one bunch went to his wife.

Robert Landry of the Strand in Ogdensburg last week booked his first serial, signing a contract for "Into the Net," the DeLuxe Theatre, a Robbins house in Utica, booking "Idaho," while Shirley's house, the Albany in Schenectady, did likewise. Mr. Landry is interested in the Grand in Malone and was in that village last week.

The Troy Theatre opened just two years ago and has now become one of the institutions of that city. Last week, in observing its anniversary, the theatre ran "The Great Divide" the first three days and "East of Suez" the last three days.

"When there is no business I believe in putting on the pictures that will bring them in," said Jake Rosenthal of Troy the other night, emphasizing the word "the." It's one of the keys to Mr. Rosenthal's rules for success and the reason why his house is filled seven nights a week.

"I hate to give you coppers," remarked a patron of the King Theatre in Troy the other night to Ben Apple, who was presiding at the cashier's window in the absence of Sadie Epstein, spending a couple of days in North Adams, Mass.

"That's all right," replied Mr. Apple. "They are made by the same company as the dimes and quarters."

Mr. Apple is paying considerable attention to improving projection at the King, installing Jess Lohman as projectionist. Westerns are largely being shown, and according to Mr. Apple bring him in at least $20 more a day than the society type. Mr. Apple arrives at the theatre about 9 o'clock each morning, remains until 11 o'clock at night and then calls it a day. He has about 500 "regulars" who have been coming day in and day out for ten years.

That it is easy to lose money as well as make it in the picture theatre business was well illustrated one night the past week when Benjamin Apple, formerly of the American in that city, which became involved in financial troubles a few weeks ago, said that only two or three years ago he had refused the sum of $100,000 for the lease of the house. At that time the American was making money hand over fist, "Way Down East" playing to over 36,000 persons as a sample. And then other and larger houses opened and the profits were almost as quickly swept away.

Don't tell Tony Veillier, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, that it's economy to buy a cheap second-hand car. Tony planked down $75 for a car. That wasn't so bad, for the car ran and is still running. But during the month Tony has dug into his jeans for a couple of new tires, a new carburetor, a battery, spark plug and a few other things which he never knew existed before.

Quake Causes Much Commotion in Western New York Houses

The earthquake which rocked Western New York on Saturday evening, February 28, caused much commotion in theatres in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Olean and other cities. The audience in Shea's North Park Theatre left the house in orderly but somewhat alarmed fashion when the seats began to shake violently. A near panic ensued when a boy in the Crescent Theatre, Syracuse, yelled, "Fire!" Reports spread that a balcony had collapsed and ambulances were rushed to the scene. Order, however, was soon restored. Twelve hundred persons in the Palace, Olean, fled into the street when the quake rocked the building. Through a freak of the trembler, patrons of the Haven Theatre, two blocks away, did not even feel the shock. The quake also caused a near panic in a theatre in Hornell. There was a general rush from the Empire, Syracuse, with women screaming and adding to the terror of those who feared the building was about to fall. One woman fainted.

High Davis of Rochester has been appointed manager of the Cameo Theatre, a remodeled East Side Buffalo house and a link in the chain controlled by Michaels' Enterprises of Buffalo. The Cameo was opened March 1.

Edwin O. Weinberg has resigned as manager of the Rialto in Lockport, a Schine house, and has returned to Buffalo where he has entered the real estate business. Mr. Weinberg is one of the veteran showmen of the state, he having managed theatres in Buffalo, Syracuse and Troy.

It is reported that the music programs of the Shea Hippodrome orchestra will be broadcast by the new station WEBR when it moves to the top of the Marine Bank building in Buffalo. Buffalo will soon have three stations on the air, WGR atop the Statler hotel, WEBR atop the Marine bank and the new station to be placed on the Liberty bank building.

East Aurora men interested in the new picture theatre being erected in Roycraft Town have been visiting along Film Row arranging bookings for the house, which is expected to be ready for the public about May 1. Elbert Hubbard, II., is interested in the project.

There is doubt as to the future of the Grand Theatre in Saint Catharines, Ont., owing to the death of its owner just after he had spent $75,000 to remodel and modernize it. The house has been closed pending decision of the administrators of the estate as to its disposal.

Michigan

A score of Michigan exhibitors in the smaller towns have been complaining to the exhibitor association that a smooth gentleman has victimized them out of several hundred dollars on a ticket scheme. He proposes a co-operative plan between the exhibitor and merchant in the small town, receives money and then leaves town. Several of the boys would like to talk to him once more.

Sam Caplan, prominent Detroit exhibitor, is the guest of Ty Cobb in Atlanta for a few weeks. This is Mr. Caplan's first vacation in eleven years of exhibiting.

Flint's new theatre is now blazing its great lights on the Vehicle City's White Way. It is owned by Lester Matt, who has two big theatres in the downtown section. The opening attraction was "K—the Unknown."

Pittsburgh

Louis K. Sidney, district manager and managing director for Loew's Aldine, Pittsburgh, has arrived back in Pittsburgh after a five-weeks' business trip to St. Louis. "Sid," as he is best known here, was met at the depot by Walter S. Caldwell, resident manager of the Aldine. The funny part of this episode is the fact that Caldwell had raised a moustache during "Sid's" absence, and the latter refused to recognize him.

The Maryland Theatre, owned by David and Myra Boyd at Blawnox, was opened on February 24, "The Mine With the Iron Door" being the attraction. The opening was a big success, the house being packed all evening. The new house, described in this column several weeks ago, seats 350 and is the first theatre to be built in Blawnox, a fast growing suburb of Pittsburgh. For the present the Maryland Theatre will be open only on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

Charles Ferguson opened his beautiful Copeland Theatre at North Braddock, February 23, with our old friend Tex Arthur as house manager. The opening was a gala event to the community of Copeland, as can best be judged by the fact that there were over 1,500 paid admissions on that evening, the ticket sale being stopped twice and many turned away. The house seats 640. Mr. Ferguson has given the community an amusement center that is a delight to the eye and a complete satisfaction from the standpoint of comfort. Manager Arthur was kept busy on opening night passing out roses and cigars to the patrons.

Sam Abramovitz, local exhibitor, who has been in the restaurant business the past few weeks, his disposed of his interests and is again looking for a picture theatre. He can be seen most any time on Film Row.

To Radio-Equip Theatre Chain

THE formal opening of the Cameo Theatre, Rocky Mount, N. C., became of state-wide interest and nation-wide knowledge owing to a novel idea originated by the management, when KDKA broadcasting station at East Pittsburgh announced at their evening concert on opening night the opening of the new theatre and that it was radio equipped, following with several numbers dedicated to the theatre and its patrons.

The theatre was of course tuned in on KDKA at the proper hour, and the announcement came in loud and clearly and was greeted by thunderous applause by the capacity audience. State newspapers, in addition to the local newspapers, gave the stunt much prominence as something new in theatre exploitation.

The Cameo is equipped with one of the strongest of all radio receiving sets and nightly periods of radio music are given to the patrons. Headphones are used for tuning in and selecting the music each night for presentation, and only when it comes in loud, clear and free from interference is the loud speaker plugged in. It has so far proven a very strong and popular extra attraction with patrons, so much so that the other theatres in the chain will be radio equipped.

The Cameo is under the banner of Stevenson Theatres, Inc., with home offices in Henderson, N. C. The officers are as follows: W. D. Burwell, Henderson, president; Roy P. Rosser, Raleigh, vice-president; S. S. Stevenson, Henderson, secretary-treasurer and general manager. George E. Stevenson is resident manager of the Cameo and D. Monte Bain is publicity chief for the chain.

Earthquake Badly Frightens Theatre Audiences in Boston

Patrons in many Boston theatres were badly frightened by the earthquake tremors on Saturday night, February 28. More than 200 persons out of an audience of 800 hurriedly left the Regent Theatre, Arlington. The ushers prevented a panic and Manager Alfred A. Lionais calmed the frightened patrons by announcing the cause of the theatre shaking. At the Exeter Theatre in the Back Bay someone shouted "fire" as the building swayed and the audience began a mad race for the exits. No one was hurt, as an announcement quickly was made that Boston was within a quake area. At Loew's Orpheum Theatre a large number of persons left their seats but there was no untoward excitement.

Manager Dennis J. Shea of the New Park Theatre in Boston has had his collection of rare old portraits and playbills increased through the presentation of additional "relics" from Charles Harris, manager of the Boston Theatre.

How is this for a show? It's only a sample of what the Bowdoin Square offers its patrons every week—"The Thief of Bagdad," "The Warrens of Virginia," "Galloping Hoofs" and five vaudeville acts. That comprised the bill for the week of March 2.

The Blanchard Brothers of Southbridge, operators of three theatres in that city, are going to add to the number of their houses. Balaban and Katz Make Many Chicago Managerial Changes

Quite a few changes have been made in the managerial staff of Balaban & Katz during the past few weeks and several of the assistants have been advanced to house managers as recognition of their work with the big circuit. Roy Bruder has been transferred from the Roosevelt to the McVickers, where he will be assistant to Manager Bruce Fowler, and Alfred Hay Malotte has been made organist of the house, succeeding Remington Welch. L. A. Shead has been transferred from the Central Park Theatre, where he has been assistant to Manager Max Turner, and made manager of the Roosevelt Theatre. He is succeeded at the Central Park by Mr. O'Donnell.

Harrington Stoll has been transferred from the Roosevelt to the management of the Tivoli, the big South Side house, succeeding E. C. Leaper, who has been made manager of the Riveria on the North Side. Miles Concannon has been transferred from the Riveria to the executive staff of the Chicago Theatre, and John Balaban, who has been at the big North Side house for several years as managing director, has also been added to the executive staff of the Chicago Theatre and the home office in the Chicago Theatre Building.

With several new houses projected and in course of construction, Balaban & Katz will be materially expanded as they are put into use. The work on the big Uptown Theatre is progressing according to schedule and the plans call for the opening on Labor Day. The work on the new Masonic building house is going ahead and the foundations for the big structure are about ready for the steel workers. The new Detroit house site is being cleared by the wreckers, while the Howard street house will soon start.

Another feature that will interest patrons of the Balaban & Katz houses will be the publication of a magazine by the organization devoted to the activities of the circuit, the programs of the houses and news notes of interest about stars and films. It is planned to have the first issue out early in April.

Business at the various houses of the circuit has been holding up well. The Chicago Theatre will have its third syncopation celebration the first week in March.

Work has started on a $500,000 theatre block in Berwyn at 6330-44 Roosevelt road, between Cuyler and Ridgeland, just across the boundary line from Oak Park. It will be called the Oakwyn and will have a 2,250-seat movie with complete stage. There will also be six stores and eleven apartments. Hooper & Janusch are the architects. James I. Biba and John J. Lynch, who took title to the 161x125 site, will operate the Oakwyn.

The new house will be of a Spanish type of architecture and will seat 2,600. Dickey to Give Kansas City 1500-Seat Picture Theatre

Theatre construction in Kansas City continues at an unchecked pace. The latest new house to be announced is a 1,500-seat theatre at Prospect and Independence avenues, to be built by Dr. M. A. Dickey of Kansas City. This makes a new theatre a week for the last month. The new house, the entire cost of which has not yet been determined, will be a combination office building and theatre. The site recently was purchased by Dr. Dickey from E. L. Salmon for $15,000. The architect expects to have plans completed within a few days. The theatre, which will have a 50-foot frontage on Independence avenue, will be of an adaptation of Spanish architecture. There will be five ground rooms and a lobby entrance.

M. L. Guier, owner and manager of the Auditorium Theatre, Slater, Mo., went before a jury in the circuit court of his county and put to route an old Sunday closing ordinance which had been dug up for the purpose of closing his theatre on the Sabbath. The old ordinance, if enforced to the letter, could have been used to prohibit the delivery of newspapers on Sunday, and that was exactly what Mr. Guier had intended to do should he have been ruled against. He now is operating his theatre on Sundays and playing to good crowds.

Kansas City exhibitors and their families turned out in large numbers to attend the revue and dance staged by twelve motion picture actresses and actors at Convention Hall. The event was under the supervision of the Cosmic Production Company of Hollywood, which sent the players with whom it has contracts on a tour as a part of a nation-wide campaign to establish personal contacts with their audiences. Among those in attendance were: Bryant Washburn, Cullen Landis, Anna May Wong, Helen Holmes, Jack Daugherty, Kathryn McGuire, Carl Miller and Joe Murphy.

The Missouri Theatre of Kansas City, a Shubert house, temporarily has returned to its former policy of motion pictures. "The Call of a Nation," a World War picture, is running there this week under the auspices of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Officials of the Hostettler Amusement Company, which operates theatres in Kansas City and surrounding territory, points to the district court ruling in Hastings, Neb., as a death blow to non-theatrical competition. District Judge B. H. Payne of Grand Island, Neb., granted an injunction staying the operations of the city of Hastings from engaging in the show business in its municipal auditorium. Plans for the installation of a $13,000 pipe organ in the auditorium also were halted. Hastings started into the show business last year, charging the Hostettler interests were charging unreasonable prices, and has been operating in defiance of a temporary restraining order since then.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory last week were: M. L. Guier, Auditorium Theatre, Slater, Mo.; Lawrence Brenninger, Topeka, Kans.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Christian, Excelsior Springs, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.

The Columbia Theatre, Fort Madison, Iowa, will be taken over, March 1, by Capitol Enterprises of Kansas City, Samuel Harding, president of the company, announced the other day. The Orpheum of Fort Madison was taken over by Capitol Enterprises recently.

Indiana

Work was started this week on the construction of a handsome new picture theatre to be erected in a North Side residential neighborhood in Indianapolis by the Zaring Realty Company, of which A. C. Zaring, owner of the North Star and Garrick theatres, is president. According to Mr. Zaring, the building is expected to be completed the latter part of August.

The new structure will have a frontage in Fall Creek boulevard of 100 feet and a depth of 131 feet. The main entrance will be in Central avenue, with two exits on each side connecting with Fall Creek boulevard and Central avenue. The building will be constructed of steel, tile, brick and a cement mixture. It will contain the main auditorium seating 1,500, a mezzanine floor and promenade on which will open men and women's rest rooms, the offices of the company and a basement in which the heating and ventilating plants will be housed.

The lobby will be finished in marble and the building will be constructed on Egyptian lines. In front of the auditorium there will be an orchestra pit, with additional space for the orchestra on one side and an organ on the other. The North Star Theatre, now situated only a few blocks from the site of the new project, will be closed and the property will be taken over by a business concern as soon as the new theatre is completed, Mr. Zaring said.

At the direction of Maurice Fox, manager of the American Theatre, Terre Haute, a benefit show was given at the theatre Saturday morning to raise money for the fund being established at Sullivan for the widows, orphans and dependents of the victims in the mine disaster there. Employes of the theatre contributed their services and all proceeds of the show were turned over to the fund.

Five stops in this show. Family picture; tone and appeal good. Draw better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

F. B. O.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels). Star, Al Wilson. An action picture that is different and pleased immensely. Can be used in place of a western or other program picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

CLOUD RIDER. Star, Al Wilson. Here is one that will make their eyes stick out. Thrills that are thrills, a very good thrill drama. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LIGHTS OUT. (6,938 feet). Star cast. Very good, but can't call it a special. Film was in bad condition. Lots cut out in mending. Tone okay. Special, no. Audience appeal fair. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Almyra, Arkansas.

LOVE PIRATE. Star cast. I would call this a good program picture which took well here, drew well and seemed to please seventy-five per cent. Good story. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. STEPPING LIVELY. (5,317 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Not as good as the other Dick Talmadges we have played. Action drags in the early reels and the lively stepping does not take place until the fifth reel is reached. The fans expect whirlwind action from the start to the finish in the pictures made by this star, who has a good following. Action should be of the type so admirably put over in "American Manners," which was far superior to this production. Fair tone. Appeal eighty per cent. Yes for Sunday, but not as special. Draw general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, George Billings. Here is the greatest picture that has ever been shown in Sioux Falls since I ventured into the business. It is not the picture that will appeal to the flapper, but with the co-operation of schools as well as all of the other educational organizations, civic clubs, churches, American Legion, G. A. R. and all other patriotic organizations this picture will make exhibitors a lot of money. Not only the actual cash receipts at the box office for this picture but will give the house prestige for attractions that are not so worthy of this support. We received daily write-ups in the papers besides getting editorials and letters by the dozens from people that appreciate a real clean, entertaining, educational, patriotic picture. With the proper exploitation every exhibitor can feel positive that they will make money on it besides friends. We played this for nine days and had a wonderful business. J. O. Sholseth, Princess Theatre, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Between Ourselves

Service to the greatest number of exhibitors is the watchword of this dependable tip department.

Our "Gang" sends in reports that are given in a sincere and unbiased spirit of helpfulness.

The additions to the actual "report" such as the suitability of a film for Sunday or as a special, the class of patronage, type of audiences and so on, may not be necessary to you.

But there are a lot of the good scouts reading these tips who DO get help from the additional information.

One of our old-timers, who has been out for a while—B. A. Aughinbaugh—verifies this statement in a letter which I am glad to show you on another page.

It indicates one of the ways through which the reports can be made more fully useful—by utilizing the additional information which exhibitors kindly supply with the actual reports.

Tells How He Uses Reports

"We always look to see just the sort of a town an endorsement or denunciation comes from, and that frequently tells the story, for it frequently tells the type of theatre supported, and that tells the type of owner or manager who writes the criticism.

"We aim to get the best pictures we can afford, and have on our list 'The Sea Hawk,' 'Hunchback of Notre Dame,' 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'He Who Gets Slapped,' 'Captain Blood' and so forth.

"We have played most of the big ones, including 'Covered Wagon,' 'Scaramouche,' 'If Winter Comes' and others of last season."—B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Metro-Goldwyn

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star, Ramon Navarro. Poor picture. A travel story with weak appeal. Fair business. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star, Ramon Navarro. This picture is far better than "The Sheik" and pleased my audience one hundred per cent. Small town class town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. E. D. Muchow, Hub Theatre (210 seats), Gaylord, Minnesota.

FOG. Star cast. Lay off. This one not fit for youngsters nor anyone else. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Here is really a splendid picture. However, it failed to get me quite a normal business. Not a good title to sell and the picture is over the heads of some of the so-called masses. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. All classes city of 91,000. Admission 40-50. Guy O. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,150 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. An excellent picture for city, or higher class, but don't think it will go in small towns. Story of New York in the early days. Davies does excellent work. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday. Special, suitable in some places. Draw family and transient trade, city 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

RENDEZVOUS. (7 reels). Star cast. First the title was very bad for us here, next the picture itself was away below Marshall Neilan's standard and finally the flop it took was simply a nose-dive smash. It came pretty near chalking up a new record on the wrong side of the ledger. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

SHERLOCK JR. (4,605 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This one about the worst Keaton has done so far and the people told me so many more like this one and Keaton is done for. Print good. Tone, none. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

SHERLOCK, JR. (4,605 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Very good, but I wish Keaton would tell me how to run a feature all on one machine without changing, just for fun and what state is it where they let the reels lay on the outside uncovered. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THREE WEEKS. (7,500 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. Elaborate and sumptuous film presentation of the book. Well acted and faithful to the story. It brought a crowd of all classes. MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Some people expressed themselves in superlatives over the excellence of this production while others shrugged their shoulders not knowing what it was all about. Undoubtedly, it was a wonderful production and a credit to the producers. I lost money on it because I was oversold. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. One fine picture and my patrons told me that it was better than "The Covered Wagon" in many ways. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. One of the best "kid" pictures ever. The children ate it up and the adults screamed for the crumbs. We used the song, "Peter Pan" as the hub around which to build a pretty prologue. It worked fine. It will go big wherever children exist, and that covers about every place. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Public School Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Very good. Be sure to tell them that it is a fairy tale. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. No for special my opinion. Draw rural class, town 250. J. J. Halley, San Anselmo Theatre, San Anselmo, California.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A good children's picture but won't please adults. Watch your step on price. Not a good box office attraction. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Valentino is dead so far as our town of 4,000 goes. Poorest photography of any Paramount ever run in our theatre. Action very slow. As a box office attraction we lost plenty of money. Only a fair program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star cast. We heard this one "panned" a good bit, but we do not see that it merits such an attitude. The picture carried with it a splendid lesson and was well acted. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER. (7 reels). Star cast. A very good production, liked by all, but not for youngsters. Tone, good for grown-ups. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. Star cast. (7,800 feet). This proved to be a great box office attraction for us. Played it one full week at advanced prices. GARRISON'S FINISH. (8 reels). Star, Jack Pickford. One of the very best stories centering about the race track that we have ever played. No small town, or large one either need be afraid of this one. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Town and rural class town of 1,078. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. Star, Mary Pickford. This is a story based upon a conflict between a pious rich man and squatters on his land and his attempt to evict them. HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is one of the best pictures to date in my opinion, but didn't please all—only about seventy-five per cent. And it didn't draw the crowds. Good tone. Great for Sunday. Yes as special. Appeal about 75 per cent. Draw all types, town 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star cast. In my five years' experience as an exhibitor I don't think I ever ran a picture, and I have run all the best produced, that I had such unqualifiedly enthusiastic praise on as this one. I ran it in one of the worst storms of the year and didn't pull as I would have done had the weather been favorable. It's an outstanding picture of all time. A credit to the producer and an added prestige to any house running it. While I ran it late, surely the proverb: "Better late than never" was at no time truer than on this. I make my bow, very low, to Mr. Carl Laemmle. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

K—THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. One of the cleanest pictures produced in a long time. Very favorable comments heard from patrons. Big business. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

LAW FORBIDS. (6,262 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. Boys this is a very good picture and if you haven't played it go get it and boost it. Print good. Tone, very good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, very good. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

MERRY GO ROUND. (9,175 feet). Star cast. Was considered a great production by the majority and duly appreciated as such, while it didn't show up so well at the box office it was no doubt due to the very severe weather. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

RECKLESS AGE. (9,593 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A fine production. No dull moments. Good tone, fine appeal. Sunday yes. Special, no. Draw rural class, town 250. J. J. Halley, San Anselmo Theatre, San Anselmo, California.

RIDING PRETTY. Star, William Desmond. Desmond goes for me and he is getting better all the time. He has plenty of action in his stuff. A good picture all the way around. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

RIDIN' KID FROM POWDER RIVER. (5,727 feet). Star cast. Just a program picture that's all. Town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This one went over like a shot. While there is nothing big about it. It's a swift moving racing show that grips old and young alike and send them away telling us they had a heck of a good time. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (8,785 feet). Star cast. Fine entertainment. Our patrons liked it very much and did not hesitate to tell us so. Business was poor. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. As special, no. Draw rural and town of 1,078. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

WOMEN FIRST. Star cast. Dandy little picture of the Kentucky race tracks. It had the customary villain who needs the money and wants the girl and the hero who saves the day. Tone, very smooth. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

CLEAN HEART. (7,950 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. We are sorry to say it, but we had more kicks on this picture than any we have run for some time. Story not good for a picture and direction very poor. This is not the kind of stuff people want to see at our house. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Better than average picture. Good Saturday show. Town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, JR. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. This feature has a combination of good qualities that pleases all classes. The youngsters will eat it up and the comedy element puts it over with the older patrons. Tone, O. K. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. Star cast. An excellent show with a title that drew good business on our poor night. The print had some bad spots in it that is the only complaint I have to make about the show. Tone, good. Not suitable for special. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LOVERS' LANE. (6,000 feet). All star cast. Six short reels, but it seemed to satisfy as a program picture. Good acting by Robert Ellis, who made a strong hit with the female portion of the audience; in fact this picture should appeal to the ladies more than to the men, and the boys who have bought this should bear the fact in mind. Fair tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Comedies

AGGRAVATIN' PAPA. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. Here's a comedy that kept the audience in an uproar. Lots of action too and Jimmie Adams did his stuff to perfection. The dog, Peter the Great, also played his part well and had the kids yelling the roof off the old shack. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BEHIND THE SCENES. (State Right-Chaplin.) Proved to be very funny, even though about five years old. I find that these old Chaplins go over fine. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

BIG BUSINESS. (Pathe). "Our Gang." One of the real good Gang comedies used with "Miss Bluebeard" made an evening of laughs, and it pays to get them in good humor. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeals to patrons that are in need of a laugh. Farmers town of 2,500. Admission 10-20,

GEORGIA HALE

10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexander, Minnesota.

BONEHEAD. (Educational). Star, Poodles Hanneford. Yes, Poodles, played the part well. He sure acted the bonehead and in so doing put part of the audience to sleep. Second reel had a little more action but there was too much repetition. This boy should be put into real comedies as he seems to be trying to do his best even in slow drags like this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Weak appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GETTING GERTIE'S GOAT. (Educational-Devore). Another excellent Educational with plenty of action in spite of fact that it is a Dorothy Devore comedy. Don't be afraid to tell the old standbys that the comedy will be good on the night you show this one. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GIANTS VS. YANKS. (Pathe). "Our Gang." Not above the average of this series. A few laughs, but to my opinion just an ordinary comedy offering. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

LARRY SEMON REISSUES. (Vitagraph). These one-reel reissues are as good as the average one-reel comedies. Prints on these are always new. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

LONESOME. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Punk. No laughs in two whole reels. What are supposed to be laughs didn't even get a whimper here, and that's going some. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MACK SENNETT COMEDIES. (Pathe). I have played all these to date and have never had a poor one yet. They are the safest comedy on the market to buy. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

OVER THE FENCE. (Educational-Juvenile). Really a 100 per cent kid comedy. Pleased grown-ups and children, and the kids almost raised the shingles with their yells. It is seldom that a Juvenile Comedy hits the mark, but this one surely did do it. Draw general class, town about 1,000. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Jane Novak and Fuller Mellish in Vitagraph's "Two Shall be Born"

"The Rag Man"

appears in the kind of character and makeup in which he achieved his popularity, that of a little urchin of the streets in ragged, oversize clothes and the familiar battered cap.

It is a different Jackie, however, that appears in this picture, a Jackie who unmistakeably shows that he has grown older, and while he has lost much of his winsomeness which was so evident in "The Kid," he has improved in other ways, for Jackie has developed as an actor, revealing a sureness of touch and a technique in handling situations and putting them over that would do justice to a much older person.

The story this time is one that is strong in sympathy and human interest, in which Jackie appears as an Irish orphan who forms a partnership in the junk business with an elderly Hebrew. This gives opportunities for a lot of Jewish and Irish humor that makes for good entertainment. In fact the picture is largely made up of gags and situations skilfully worked up for their audience effect, and there is a lot of sure-fire stuff.

Jackie is surrounded by a good cast, including Robert Edeson, Ethel Wales, Lydia Yeamans Titus and others, but almost all of the action falls on Jackie and Max Davidson as his partner. Davidson's work is excellent, his characterization sure, introducing both pathos and comedy, and he is an excellent foil for little Jackie.

The plot interest is slight; the story is inclined to drag somewhat. However, the comedy gags and human interest situations and pathetic bits, combined with an amusing lot of subtitles that will get a lot of laughs, should make this picture a pleasing one for the average patron. Its greatest handicap, really, is the fact that Jackie, the clever child actor, has to start to win all over again those who cherish the memory of his wonderful charm and winsomeness as a very small and delightful kiddie.

"The Swan"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

One of the outstanding successes of the past theatrical season, "The Swan," a play by Ferenc Molnar, has been transferred to the screen by Paramount with a cast headed by Adolphe Menjou, under the direction of Dmitri Buchowetski.

"The Swan" is a romantic comedy of European court life concerning the love affair of a princess who is wooed by a neighboring prince, a brilliant, sophisticated man of the world, but who really loves an insignificant tutor in the royal household and finally overthrows tradition by declaring her love for and marrying him.

There is a delightful opening to the picture in which all the gorgeous pomp of royalty is laid on heavily and then treated in a clever satirical vein. For instance the fact that a fly lights on the prince's foot and he is beginning to awaken is flashed from flunkey to flunkey all through the palace creating great excitement.

The outstanding character which far outshadows every other is that of the prince, and as played by Menjou under Buchowetski's direction it is a brilliant and delightful performance. Mr. Menjou is the perfect embodiment of the sophisticated prince, bored with the idea of his marriage to the haughty princess, always ready to flirt with a pretty woman and a good fellow among his own men. He reveals a new angle of his work in a scene where coming in out of the rain, wet and bedraggled and peevish, he changes to nondescript clothes but still retains his monacle and imperious air. His every moment on the screen is enjoyable.

Mr. Buchowetski's direction is clever and scintillating; he puts over the points with telling effect and introduces realistic continental atmosphere in his scenes of royalty. The picture is beautifully mounted and strikingly photographed; a flashback to a story which the tutor is telling of a page who loves a princess reminds one by its clearness, beauty, composition and perfection of detail of the work of some of the old masters of painting.

It is the type of picture that depends largely for its appeal on its smartness, cleverness and brilliancy of comedy, characterization and direction. In a word, it is really more in the handling of the story than in the story itself that its charm lies, for stripped down to its essentials for those who put story value first, it belongs in the class of the romances that delighted us in childhood, with the poor and untitled chap winning the love of the great princess who throws over the proud prince to marry him.

Ricardo Cortez gives a performance as the tutor that will please his admirers, and Frances Howard, a stage star, appears as the princess. As the haughty and unbending "swan" of the title she is beautiful and extremely effective, but rather unbending in the love scenes, and has little chance to show real dramatic ability. Clare Eames is extremely effective as the prince's mother, with Helen Lee Worthing registering as a flirtatious woman, a decided contrast to the other feminine roles.

There is a very effective and cleverly handled duel scene, where the tutor manouvres until the fight is out in a big corridor and the entire palace aroused. He is finally wounded and this has the effect of causing the princess to declare her love.

While its slight story may not appeal to some, its clever treatment should make this a picture that should prove popular especially with the better class of patrons.

"The Mansion of Aching Hearts"

B. P. Schulberg Offers a Sentimental and Emotional Melodrama Suggested by a Well Known Song

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Using as a basis a sentimental song which achieved great popularity and got in the best seller class, B. P. Schulberg Productions is offering "The Mansion of Aching Hearts," an exceedingly emotional melodrama.

A woman on a small island off the Atlantic coast, peopled by fisher folk, marries a hard-hearted, narrow-minded and tyrannical banker and soon realizes her mistake in having thrown over the man she loved. Her husband becomes jealous and finally drives her away after doubting the paternity of his child. Mother and child become separated and the father raises the child as an outcast, shunned by the community. The boy grows up to hate his mother, who becomes matron of a home for wayward girls. When she returns he heads a mob to drive her off the island. The husband finally confesses how he has wronged his wife and son and the family become reconciled with the boy marrying a girl whose character the father has sought to blacken.

It will be seen that this story has been built with the idea of playing on the emotions and introducing as many heart-throbs as possible, and in this a good measure of success has been attained. The production is well made, with some good outdoor scenes and plenty of melodramatic action, including a storm in which the mother is wrecked in a small boat and rescued by her own son. The cast is entirely adequate.

Logic has not always been adhered to in the story, for one is apt to wonder why the mother made no attempt to find out whether by any chance her boy might have been rescued. The title of the song is brought in on two occasions as both the home of the wife and later the rescue home where she is in charge are captioned, "The Mansion of Aching Hearts."

Ethel Clayton, after an absence from the screen, returns in the role of the mother, and does good work, impressing by her sincerity. Cullen Landis is cast as the son and Sam deGrasse is effective in arousing antipathy as the hard-hearted father.

A few comedy touches are contributed by Edward Gribbon, but it is the emotional and sentimental angle that is heavily stressed and the heart-interest and sympathy for the mother that is played up.

Story

Pauline Craig realizes too late that she made a mistake in marrying Martin Craig, the town banker, a hard tyrannical man, in place of his cashier John Dawson, whom she really loves, but determines to take her medicine. Her little son becomes attached to Dawson and calls him "Daddy John." Crazed with jealousy, Craig accuses Pauline of infidelity and drives her from home on the island. In a storm she becomes separated from the boy and believes he is drowned. Dawson disappears at the same time and Craig denounces them before the townpeople. The boy is raised as an outcast. Pauline becomes matron of a home for wayward girls, and Martha, who Craig has driven from the island tells her of her innocence. Pauline returns to the island with Martha. Her son who hates her because of the lies Craig has told, becomes attached to her until she reveals her identity, then he gathers a mob to keep his vow and drive her from the island. Martin, who has learned that Dawson went to South America, realizes the havoc he has wrought and, with the aid of the boy in whom his love for his mother has triumphed, rescues her. Martin confesses the wrong he has done both of them and agrees to the boy's wedding with Martha.

"The Scarlet Honeymoon"

Shirley Mason's Latest is Thoroughly Enjoyable Romantic Comedy Drama Directed by Alan Hale

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Alan Hale, well-known to picture patrons as an actor, makes his debut as a director for William Fox with "The Scarlet Honeymoon" starring Shirley Mason, and has turned out a thoroughly entertaining little picture.

This production is an intimate little romantic comedy drama filled with delightful human touches. The sympathy of the audience is early focused on the hero and heroine in their love affair against parental opposition, and the interest is held right up to the last foot.

The story concerns the young son of a wealthy Argentinian who comes to New York and falls in love with a girl he sees in the Automat. Their romance, bright at first, strikes a snag when her family look askance at the lad, believing him to be poor, but receive him back with open arms when he returns with evidences of wealth and starts catering to their whims, and are quick to throw him over when it appears he has been guilty of stealing bonds. This proves to be a plan of the boy's father to test the girl's love, and you feel a pleasing satisfaction when she turns out to be true blue as you knew she would. We must confess that we fail to see the significance of the title which is really misleading.

Miss Mason is delightful as the heroine and Pierre Gendron is ideal for the South American hero, who by the way, at no time appears in the picturesque costumes usually associated with that continent, but is garbed in the correct clothes of the U. S A. In fact, every member of the cast does good work.

Somehow, there seems to be an unusual feeling of warmth, spontaneity and realism to this little picture. Its pretty little romance and true-to-life touches, get down under your skin and we confess getting a lot more real enjoyment out of it than from a number of big specials, and we are firmly of the opinion that it will prove a thoroughly pleasing attraction for the big majority of patrons.

Kay is heart-broken, but after a while he reappears with a swell car, gives all of the family expensive presents and says he inherited a fortune. Pedro's father cables the New York manager to find out about the girl and if she really loves Pedro. He does this by having Pedro arrested by fake detectives for embezzling money. The family turns him down, but Kay goes to the manager to plead for Pedro, and to further test her love he tries to make love to her. Pedro comes in and gives him such a mauling he lands in the hospital. Pedro and Kay marry and go to the Argentine, where she is welcomed by his people, and his father explains everything, stating the manager has reported Kay as true blue.

(Educational—Novelty—One Reel)

Of especial interest to small children who delight in stories of birds is this single reel film in colors which features a little girl and tells a pretty little fairy story of how she caught a nightingale and as it sang to her she saw in her dreams its life history pictured, how it became separated from its mate and was caught in a trap while searching for it. She let the bird go and in gratitude it loaned her its voice during the daytime, which, as the story goes, is why nightingales sing only at night when children are asleep. It is prettily told, with a lot of appealing sentiment, and there are some excellent scenes in color of birds and various flowers, and some clever plastic effects in simulating bugs and other insects.—C. "Olympic Games"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This Hysterical History Comedy purports to show the first Olympic event, a terrible contest between Bronchitis and Tonsilitis for the hand of a fair maid. Bronchy appears a sure winner in a majority of the events until balls of fire from a Roman Candle hitting his trousers encourage Tonsy to speed up in the foot race and pass Bronchy. The laurels of the day then hang on the chariot race. The maid winsomely loosens a wheel of Bronchy's conveyance and Tonsy wins after he has backed his balky mule across the finish line. Shallenberger Sounds Appeal

Believes Semi-Standardized Advertising Will Be of Material Aid to All Independents

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Pictures Corporation, gave it as his opinion, in a recent interview, that semi-standardized advertising for all the independents everywhere—producers, national distributors and state right exchanges—would be a vast aid in building up exhibitor confidence in the independent and his product.

"My advertising department is working at present," said Mr. Shallenberger, "on a series of advertisements shortly to appear in the trade press. While I am not at the moment prepared to divulge the exact nature of these advertisements, the fact remains that they are worked out against a unique background and carry a pithy slogan.

"This background and slogan I want to see adopted by all the independents, if this can be done, which will create an impression of solidarity which will go far toward strengthening the theatre owners' confidence.

"Further details of this plan will be announced later. For the present, let me say in all seriousness that I firmly believe that, if adopted, it will mark a distinct step forward for the independents."

F.-P.-L. Drive Under Southern Cross

What is generally regarded as the greatest campaign for the advancement of the motion picture industry ever undertaken under the Southern Cross was launched on March 1 throughout Australia and New Zealand by the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of Sydney, Paramount's Australasian organization.

This is Paramount's Second Greater Movie Season and as a tribute to E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the campaign has been named in his honor with a slogan, "A Shower for Shauer."

The greater movie season, which will have the earnest support of the great majority of exhibitors in Australia and New Zealand, will continue for the month of March, and is expected to be a great box office stimulant which will affect the entire industry in those two countries.

Under the leadership of John W. Hicks, Jr., managing director of the Paramount organization, last year's campaign was so successful as to enlist the active support of not only state and governmental officials but of every arm of the industry itself. Hundreds of theatres devoted all or a large portion of their time to the presentation of Paramount Pictures, tying up their programs with numerous contests and other advertising and exploitation mediums to acquaint the general public with the spirit back of the Greater Movie Season idea.

This year's campaign will be conducted on an even larger scale in which leading newspapers throughout Australia and New Zealand will be used extensively to interest the public in the good results to be obtained through a campaign of this sort.

Release Date Changed

So enthusiastic are officials of F. B. O. over "Drusilla With a Million," based on the novel of that title by Elizabeth Cooper and directed by Harmon Weight for Associated Arts, that they have decided to postpone the release date of the drama until next autumn. Insiders contend that "Drusilla With a Million," which features Mary Carr as the charity inmate of an old ladies' home, is of the same box-office power as "Over the Hill." In the meantime a national campaign of advertising and exploitation will be developed in behalf of the production, it is stated.

Storm to Direct Ray

Jerome Storm, who has directed more than twenty of Charles Ray's most successful productions, has been engaged by Chadwick Pictures Corporation to handle the megaphone on "Some Pumpkins," the first of a series that the star will make for that company. H. Van Loan.

Booked by Three Big Houses

Principal's "The Re-creation of Brian Kent" Gets Simultaneous Showings

The motion picture translation of Harold Bell Wright's "The Re-creation of Brian Kent" recently established a precedent in Boston, according to information received from Irving Lesser, vice president of Principal Pictures Corporation, producers of the Wright classic.

Jake Lourie, Boston showman, booked the production for his two houses, the Modern and Beacon, day and date. The contract was made with William D. Shapiro, Principal's Boston franchise holder, who screened the film the same day it arrived from the coast. The picture was booked on a percentage basis, and was later shown to the manager of the Fenway Theatre, a Famous Players' house, who pleased with the production called Harold Franklin, head of the Paramount theatres, on long-distance telephone. Franklin after viewing "Re-creation of Brian Kent" made arrangements with Shapiro to play the production in the Fenway day and date with the Beacon and Modern theatres.

Artclass Now Specializing in Action-Stunt Features

WITH sixteen five-reel action-stunt features, starring Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt, now released or in transit to the exchanges, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation announces that their schedule for the coming year will include no less than twenty-four attractions of the same type, as well as two other series of novel character, which with the specials they expect to handle during the next ten months will make a total of more than forty feature productions.

So successful have the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt features proved, that Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation have definitely decided to extend their activities in this field and to this end have contracted with Lester F. Scott, Jr., producer of the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt series, not only to make another series of eight five-reel stunt dramas with each of these popular stars, but also to produce for Weiss Brothers' release a third series of high class Western features with a brand new headliner.

This series, which will deal with a somewhat different type of a story, though in most essentials it will be much the same as the Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., pictures, which have gained such wide popularity, in each release will have a different woman lead of real screen prominence to play opposite the star.

In inaugurating the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt series last spring, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation determined to step away from the cut and dried type of Western, which had previously formed the bulk of this class of product on the market. Taking two promising riding boys, who had not yet achieved screen prominence, they determined to star them in clean, wholesome stories, calling for plenty of fast action, but with a logical and consistent plot, and see whether a demand could be created for this new type of picture among theatre-goers.

The first consideration involved was the elimination of the objectionable culgarisms an dlurid situations with which the so-called "Westerns" were commonly supposed to abound. The second was to develop two brand new screen personalities in a series of stories that thrilled, but which would not offend the most critical.

For the almost instant success of the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt action-dramas and the consistent growth in popularity of both among screen audiences have convinced Artclass officials that they have opened up a field in which the independent producer and distributor can find a most fertile opportunity for development, without undergoing the blasting competition of the big, nationally organized companies. So convinced of this have they become that they now plan to devote the major portion of their activities to the production and distribution of this type of picture.

Rayart Re-signs Howes

Following the success over the country of "Super Speed," the third release of the Reed Howes series of six, Producer Harry J. Brown and W. Ray Johnston, head of Rayart Pictures, have successfully concluded negotiations pending since Johnston's visit to Brown's studio in California, which gievs to the Rayart the Reed Howes pictures to be manufactured during the years 1925-1926. Under the terms of the contract just signed, a great deal more money will be expended in the building of young Howes, who is looked upon by Independent exchangemen as one of the greatest "finds" in recent years.

Weil Rejoins Arrow

W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow Pictures Corporation, announces the appointment of Richard Weil as head of the department of Publicity and advertising.

This is Mr. Weil's second affiliation with Arrow. In 1923 he was with the company in the capacity of advertising manager. He resigned to take up a similar position with Progress Pictures Company of Ohio.

"Quo Vadis" Opens in Chicago

First National's new screen version of "Quo Vadis," made in Rome, had its Chicago opening this week at the Roosevelt Theatre, where it is in for a run. This gives First National five big town runs on its two specials. "Quo Vadis" is in its third week at the Apollo Theatre, New York, to capacity business.

Production Work Starts on New Barthelmess Picture

"Soul-Fire" is the story of the wanderings of an American musician, Eric Fane, who, tried by fate, and after episodes in Paris, Rome and Port Said, finds the inspiration for his great symphony on a lonely South Sea island. Each of the three sequences calls for a leading woman.

Carlotta Monterey has been selected for the role of Rhea, the Romanoff princess of the Roman and Parisian sequences. The leading woman for the Port Said sequence has not yet been selected, but Bessie Love has been signed for the vivid role of Tieta, the half-caste South Sea girl in the last episode. Others having prominent roles are Effie Shannon, Gus Weinberg, Lee Baker, Percy Ames and Charles Esdale.

Director Robertson has been alternating between the two Tec-Art studios in East 48th and West 44th Streets, New York, in order to facilitate the filming of the big sets. Everett Shinn, the artist, is creating the "Soul-Fire" settings. The South Sea scenes will be filmed either in Florida or Cuba and Director Robertson will take his company on location next month.

Tellegen in Steiner Drama; New Type Western Coming

LOU TELLEGEN, known to the screen and stage as the perfect lover, is also one of the most perfect actors of today. He has an unusually good part in "Fair Play," in support of Edith Thornton, who is under the William Steiner banner. Others in the cast are David Dunbar, who was seen in "North Of 36," and other big productions. Gaston Glass has an excellent juvenile role, and Betty Francisco plays an important part in the story, now in production under the direction of Charles Hutchison in Hollywood.

In addition to the Thornton Productions, Leo Maloney, popular young Western star, has just completed "The Shield Of Silence," which was previewed at The Granada, Hollywood's most exclusive community theatre, and Manager Russell wired the Steiner office in New York that it is "a real knockout."

Ford Beebe, the popular Western author, has been writing a somewhat different type of Western story for Leo Maloney, not grim, matter-of-fact, cold-blooded affairs, but human beings, and stories with plenty of wholesome humor. Both Maloney and Beebe are native Western sons and have been pals for years. They roughed it together in every mining and cattle country of the West. Even now, Beebe figures that Hollywood is too crowded for him and lives on a ranch outside the city.

Joan (Pauline Starke) plays poker with Morgan (Wallace Beery) and Raff (Raymond Hatton) and wins Berande plantation and their sloop, in "Adventure," the Jack London story produced by Victor Fleming for Paramount Pictures.

Within the past week, Mr. Chadwick has started production on two of the remainiing pictures of the Chadwick Nine and two pictures of the 1925-26 series.

Hunt Stromberg has started work on "The Romance of an Actress," from the story by Langdon McCormack, author of "The Storm." This picture, which will be released by Chadwick as a Hunt Stromberg Special, has been exploited widely throughout the country by a national beauty contest recently completed. Winners of the contest are now in Los Angeles, where they will have an opportunity to appear in this picture. Harvey Gates, wrote the continuity.

Another Hunt Stromberg production recently started by Chadwick is "Sunshine of Paradise Alley," adapted by Harvey Gates from the play by Denman Thompson, author of "The Old Homestead." Edmund Lawrence is directing this picture under the personal supervision of Hunt Stromberg.

Charley Ray's first picture for Chadwick, "Some Pumpkins," is now in production. Jerome Storm is directing under the supervision of Joseph de Grasse. "Some Pumpkins," an original story, written especially for Ray, is typical of the rural comedies which established him among the leaders of the screen.

George Walsh, another of the new Chadwick stars, is at work on "American Pluck." This picture is the first of a series of six which Walsh will make for Chadwick this year.

Metro Buys "Lovey Mary"

Alice Hegan Rice's famous book, "Lovey Mary," has been bought by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. "Lovey Mary" is the most popular of all Alice Hegan Rice's successful books, even surpassing "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

MRS. GLORIA GOULD BISHOP

Youngest daughter of George J. and Edith Kingdon Gould, with Lightnin', the German police dog which she trained for "stunt" work in the movies, and which Jesse J. Goldburg, president of Independent Pictures, bought for his forthcoming features.

Goldburg Buys "Lightnin'"

But This is a German Police Dog; To Play in Independent Films

Jesse J. Goldburg, President of Independent Pictures Corporation, announces the purchase of Lightnin' half brother of Strongheart. Lightnin' was trained for "stunts" by Gloria Gould Bishop, youngest daughter of the late George J. Gould.

Lightnin' will play opposite Sally Rand, the new Independent Pictures star. Lightnin' is three years old. The story of his discovery and subsequent arrival into the ranks of motion picture stars is regarded as a romantic one. While enroute for his office one morning, Mr. Goldburg saw a woman training a large German police dog in Central Park. He was so interested he stopped his auto and made inquiries. The girl proved to be Gloria Gould Bishop, who in addition to teaching dancing at the Park Lane Hotel to the little daughters of the rich, had enlarged the scope of her work to include the training of dogs for film work. The upshot of the meeting was that Mr. Goldburg bought Lightnin' and insured the animal for $100,000.

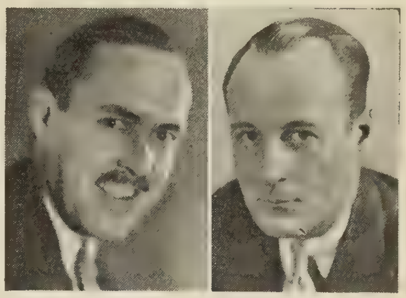
Wilson-Wetherald's 'White Mice' Has Cast of Prominent Players

THE demand for cleaner and better pictures has brought into industry two interesting personalities. They are Sering D. Wilson and Royal W. Wetherald.

A few years ago, Wilson went to Paris with his father, F. Vaux Wilson, a well-known illustrator and portrait painter. His intentions were to follow in the footsteps of his father and some day become an artist of note. While considering this, Wilson met some European film men. The interesting way in which they spoke of the film business soon knocked all thoughts of any other business from his mind and Wilson packed his grip and sailed for America to join up with one of the big producing companies. It did not take him long to find that it is a hard thing to get a start if one has not had experience in this business. After this unsuccessful first attempt, Wilson went back to Europe, and, still determined to get through the film game, started selling foreign pictures in the United States.

After a rather successful time with this line of business, Wilson started for the United States again.

On board ship, he met Royal W. Wetherald, of Boston and London, who had just finished service for the period of the war in the U. S. Naval Air Forces. Hitting off from the start, they had formed a partnership by the time their ship docked in the North River. Offices were established in London, Paris, Berlin and New York. The New York office is at 25 West 43rd street.



Royal W. Wetherald and Sering D. Wilson

Realizing the rich demand for color pictures, they handled the sales for a new process color, single emulsion stock. Reorganization gave Wilson and Wetherald complete rights on this color process and they made the first cartoons ever done in color. They now have the following short reel releases: "Redhead Comedies", drawn by Frank A. Nankivell, W. E. Stark and "Hutch," "Karlo Kolor Komics" featuring a laughable dog; "The Wonder Book" Series of twelve single reels showing art, beauty, fashion and home life; "Ebenezer Ebony" Comedies, portraying in single reel subjects the adventures of a comical colored boy; and "Color Shots," single reel studies of floral beauty, travel, scientific experiment work and various subjects that lend themselves to color photography.

Not satisfied with this line-up of production, Wilson and Wetherald went further. They wanted to get into the film game in a bigger way, and decided to produce full length productions. The first story selected was Richard Harding Davis' "The White Mice," and is now in production with a popular cast headed by Jacqueline Logan, William H. Powell and featuring Reginald Sheffield, Ernest Hilliard, Dick Lee and other well known characters of the screen.

Scores Hit at Capitol

Frank Borzage's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Daddy's Gone a-Hunting" has opened at the Capitol Theatre in New York to a unanimous chant of enthusiastic praise from the Manhattan critics. Kenneth B. Clarke adapted the Zoe Akins' stage success to the screen, and Alice Joyce and Percy Marmont have the featured roles.

Long to Support Dix

I. N. R. Prints Views of Coolidge Inaugural on Special Train

THE International News Reel Corporation wrote a new chapter in the history of news reel enterprise and service this week in connection with news pictures of the inauguration of President Coolidge. By the establishment of an International Newsreel—Pennsylvania Railroad special train, completely equipped with a film laboratory, developing rooms, cutting rooms, editing rooms and printing rooms, International News covered the distance between the Capital and New York in three hours and forty and one-half minutes.

The story of this enterprise reads like the story of a well planned battle. Step by step, the arrangements were planned, and step by step they clicked off according to schedule. By special arrangement with the Pennsylvania Railroad, the International News special train, of two cars, was planned well in advance, and dark rooms, with developing apparatus, washing arrangements, cutting tables, rewinding machines and other impedimenta necessary to the proper development of the negatives, were laid out and installed. At the same time, printing machines and print-developing apparatus also were installed.

With a full crew of International News laboratory and home office editors and title writers aboard, the International News special was backed up in the Union Station at Washington on the afternoon of March 4, with steam up and clear signals set to the northward.

In the meantime more than a dozen International News cameramen had been assigned to stations along the route of march.

From the moment the President left the White House until he delivered his inaugural address he was within the lens field of an International News camera. Immediately after he passed the various points where Intional Newsreel-Pennsylvania Railroad spetaken of him was rushed to the Union Station and put aboard the International Newsreel special train. When the Pennsylvania Station, New York City, was reached prints were ready for exhibition at all of New York's leading theatres.

The train laboratory force kept on working until enough prints were ready to supply all of International's first-run accounts in New York, which were served in time for the first night show. Other prints were speeded to Boston and to Chicago.

Pathe News Swift

Supplies New York Theatres Evening of Inauguration Day

People living in New York and probably other eastern cities were able for the first time in history to see motion pictures of the Presidential inauguration at Washington, D. C., on the same day that it happened and while the festivities following the inaugural ceremonies were still in progress at the Capitol. Fifteen cameramen, three airplanes and local laboratories at New York, Chicago and San Francisco participated in the Pathe News arrangement to cover the event.

As early as 8 a. m. on Wednesday Pathe News cameramen were on the job in Washington, D. C., gathering views of interesting sidelights of the inaugural preparations. These views were rushed to New York on early express trains. This early morning film was immediately developed and prints made and held in readiness for the last minute views. Immediately following the actual inaugural ceremony, the film taken of this particular event was rushed by car to the outskirts of Washington, where a fast plane waited to take the negative to the Jersey City laboratories of the Pathe News.

The airplane carrying the Pathe News views of the inaugural ceremony in front of the Capitol took the air for New York at 1:22 p. m. and arrived at West Side Park in Jersey City at 2:48 p. m. The negative was developed immediately and prints struck for distribution to theatres in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. Prints were also rushed by special messenger to Philadelphia. The Pathe News views were at the Broadway first run theatres as early as 6:35 p. m., bringing widespread approval for the efficient dispatch and handling of the news reel views of the Inaugural ceremonies.

A squad of sixteen camera men covered the presidential inauguration in Washington for Educational's news reel, Kinograms. Every point of interest and every possible news event connected with the inauguration was covered under the most carefully arranged plans laid out under the personal supervision of Captain George McL. Baynes, head of the Kinogram Publishing Corporation, who also took personal charge of the preparation of the reel in New York.

Two airplanes waited to carry the negative from Washington to Curtiss Field. One plane took the air immediately after President Coolidge took his oath of office, bringing negative covering the events of the day up to and including this climax of the ceremonies. The second plane waited to receive all other negative completing the story of the day's events and including the items of interest which followed the taking of the oath.

At Curtiss Field automobiles awaited the arrival of the Kinograms airplane and rushed the negative from that point to the Kinograms headquarters in the Times Square district, where the first prints were immediately prepared for the Broadway showings. These prints were in the theatres subscribing for Kinograms early in the evening.

Before midnight the entire issue of Kinograms had been printed and the prints had been mailed to every account in the country.

Exploiting Puzzle Films

Educational Formulates Plan to Advertise Its Brain Teaser Pictures

An exploitation plan, calculated to take advantage of the present cross-word puzzle craze, has been formulated by the advertising and publicity department of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in connection with Educational's series of Judge's Cross-Word Puzzle Motion Pictures.

The services of an expert puzzle-constructionist have been engaged and a series of small puzzles has been made for use by theatres in exploiting the novelty series. The campaign will consist of a supply of three puzzles weekly, furnished in mat form two of which are for use of the theatre in newspaper publicity and exploitation and one to be used as a give-away card.

The puzzles are small in size and contain words which are capable of a comedy definition. Each puzzle, will contain also the correct answer to the preceding puzzle.

It is planned to present each patron of the theatre where Educational's Cross-Word film is playing, a give-away card on which will be printed the information that the card containing the correct answers to the definitions will be given them on the date of the next showing of the cross-word film. The newspaper puzzles will be printed in the papers with the answers to the preceding puzzle. The papers will carry a credit line telling their readers where Educational's Cross-Word films can be seen.

No advertising matter of any nature will appear in the makeup of the puzzle but the whole scheme will be identified with the cross-word series being distributed by Educational.

Title Changed

The forthcoming Renaud Hoffman production adapted from one of George Patullo's Saturday Evening Post Stories, that was produced under the working title of "Crossed Words" has been changed to "Private Affairs." The picture will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation on April 20.

West Coast Showing of Fox's "Iron Horse" a Brilliant Affair

ALMOST coincident with the beginning of its eighth big month on Broadway, the William Fox production of "The Iron Horse" smashed through to success in Hollywood at the Egyptian theatre. In this home of super-hits, which has only housed four pictures since its opening, about three years ago, the John Ford picture overtopped all of its predecessors in receipts, not only on the opening night, but during the first week of what promises to be a remarkable run.

A unique and efficacious exploitation campaign preluded this brilliant start. The original Iron Horse, the C. P. Huntington, first engine of the Central Pacific made the trip from Sacramento to the arcade in front of the theatre. A band of fifty Indians encamped near the Egyptian and participated in the prologue.

Notwithstanding the great success of "The Iron Horse" in New York and Los Angeles. it will not be roadshowed. Mr. Fox has decided that the exhibitor shall get this great American epic at first hand.

On the night of the opening tickets were at a premium. The house had been sold out for more than a week and a great crowd assembled around the lobby in the hope of at least getting a glimpse at the film celebrities as they entered. For the edification of the multitude, Mr. Grauman provided an announcer who identified for the fans all the stars, directors and producers as they entered the theatre. This was attended by much applause and cheering.

Among those recognized in the first night audience were:

Alma Rubens, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lois Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Renaud Hoffman, Gertrude Short, Madge Bellamy. Shirley Mason, Katherine Perry, Owen Moore, Marian Harlan, Otis Harlan, Kathleen Clifford, Alice Calhoun, Ethel Clayton, Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Flynn, Elinor Fair.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Marmont, Mr. and Mrs. J. Farrell MacDonald, Anne Cornwall, Mr. and Mrs. Buck Jones, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Blystone, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Van Dyke, Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Rowland V. Lee, Dorothy Dwan, Larry Semon.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Torrence, Ruth Clifford, Anna Q. Nilson, Marion Nixon, Mr. and Mrs. Sol Lesser, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Coogan, Jackie Coogan, Lilyan Tashman, Edmund Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Rawlinson, Virginia Pearson, Sheldon Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Mulhall, Virginia Brown Faire, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Darnton.

William Fox, Mrs. Malvina Dunn, Mr. and Mrs. Sol Wurtzel, Jack Pickford, Mr. and Mrs. Will Walling, Mr. and Mrs. George Marshall, Earle Foxe, Maurice S. Revnes and others.

Edward David presided as master of ceremonies. Members of the cast of "The Iron Horse" were introduced, and each was greeted with a reception. Among those presented were George O'Brien, who plays Davy Brandon; Madge Bellamy, who is seen as Miriam; J. Farrell MacDonald, the Corporal Casey of the production; Will Walling, Cyril Chadwick, Fred Kohler; Judge Charles E. Bull of Reno, Nevada, who plays Abraham Lincoln and James Marcus, Mr. Davis also introduced to the audience Chief of Police Dan O'Brien of San Francisco, father of the young William Fox star and Sid Grauman.

At the behest of Mr. Grauman and Mr. David, William Fox made what was probably his first appearance before a motion picture audience. His introduction was a fitting climax to a long list of presentations attending one of his most notable cinematic achievements, "The Iron Horse."

In their reviews of the picture the Los Angeles critics were unanimous in their commendation.

Monroe Lathrop, of the L. A. Express, said: "Pictures born of artificial plots detailing the intrigues of tinseled nobodies and the emotions of flappers shrink to their puny unimportance beside this story of the spanning of the continent by rail. . . . . Nothing more truly dramatic than 'The Iron Horse' depicting this conquest of nature with blood and sweat and laughter has been put together for the screen. A big and enthralling screen narrative of American history."

Mary Philbin, the beautiful Universal star, will be seen in "The Phantom of the Opera," in the costumes shown above.

Reviewers Find "Lost World" Amazing and Thrilling Picture

FIRST NATIONAL'S big special, founded upon Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's romance of South American adventure, "The Lost World," now showing at the Tremont Temple Theatre in Boston and at the Astor Theatre in New York, had its third big opening last week at the Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, on Monday, February 23, for an indefinite run at advanced admission.

The North American Reviewer said: "The most fertile imagination run riot can scarcely conceive the weird monstrosities that people 'The Lost World.' The theatre last night was dense with suppressed tremors of wonder and fear. There is much of good comedy in the film and much of convincing imagination. An interesting love story is woven into a tale of weird adventure."

Philadelphia Record: "The amazement at the Aldine Theatre yesterday was attested by the tense interest which was manifested by the house-filling crowds. There was not only amazement, but amusement. The tragic and comic were blended in a most skillful manner. Only praise of the superlative sort can be accorded this masterly motion picture. Spectators sat enthralled."

Philadelphia Public Ledger: "In its very dissimilarity to any moving picture yet produced 'The Lost World' makes an interesting object for discussion. It is distinctly a novelty. The animals in motion and in combat with each other were the most real things in the picture. Two very fine scenes are the eruption of a volcano and a forest fire which follows the eruption. These are very realistic."

The Evening Ledger: "If for no other cause than its novelty, 'The Lost World' is worthy of the attention of every picture-goer. Like the pages of a fantastic legend or the wild ramblings of a grotesque dream, this tale is unfolded with a perfection and tenseness that caused it to be received with awe and a realization of the immensity of the undertaking. Acting honors go to the animals involved. The ease with which these prehistoric giants move and total lack of any actions which are mechanical, indicate the great amount of painstaking labor. At no period of the tale does the interest lag nor the tenseness lessen."

Cabinet Heads and Congressmen See "Man Without a Country"

"THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY," the new William Fox superfilm which, for the past month, has been packing the Central Theatre on Broadway, invaded Washington, February 28, where a preview was held for members of officialdom and society.

The preview was sponsored by the Junior League, whose membership is composed of several thousand socially registered young matrons and debutantes, and was one of the brilliant social affairs of the pre-inaugural season. It was held in the ballroom of the New Willard Hotel. Present were members of President Coolidge's cabinet, members of Congress, representatives of foreign governments and the flower of Washington society.

Among the cabinet members present were Secretary Hoover, Secretary Davis and Secretary Wilbur. Many celebrities attended as well as prominent exhibitors from the Washington territory, all of whom were the guests of Mr. Fox, who donated the use of the film to the League.

The preview afforded an opportunity for heads of national organizations in Washington to see the picture before it is released. Among those present were Mrs. John D. Sherman, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and Charles A. McMahon, director of the National Catholic Welfare Association.

Editing "Lying Wives"

Ivan Abramson's "Lying Wives" is undergoing necessary editing and titling, after six weeks of production activities.

Consider the case of Estelle Bradley, the Educational-Mermaid beauty. She was the victim of a cross-word malady and it went to her—knees!

Two Completed at Sennett's

Harry Langdon Working on New Screen Comedy; Del Lord Shooting

Two comedies on the Mack Sennett lot received their finishing touches this week and were shipped East to the Pathe home office. They are "Breaking the Ice" with Ralph Graves, and "Sneezing Beezers," a Del Lord thriller.

Directly following the completion of his picture Ralph Graves started to work on a new production in which the comic hero goes camping in the "great open spaces" where men are men and women are governors. Lloyd Bacon is directing this comedy.

One of the pictures completed last week was a two-reeler directed by Eddie Cline in which the story revolves around golf and immigrants.

On the other end of the big Mack Sennett lot Del Lord has started work on a comedy that is based on a race track situation. This picture will carry Billy Bevan, Andy Clyde, Sunshine Hart, Ruth Taylor and J. J. Richardson.

"The Outlaw"

New Starring Vehicle for Buck Jones, Fox Star, Goes Into Work

Production was started this week at the William Fox West Coast Studios on "The Outlaw," the latest starring vehicle announced for Buck Jones. This is one of the new Western stories by Jackson Gregory recently acquired by William Fox in his campaign to secure the best possible stories by recognized authors for his stars.

This will be the third story from the pen of Jackson Gregory in which Jones has been starred, the others being "Bells of San Juan" and "The Timber Wolf." In plot, character development and setting this story of "The Outlaw" is ideally suited for a Western actor of Jones' ability.

W. S. Van Dyke will direct the production with the scenario by John Stone. Several members of the supporting cast are to be named later. The players selected so far are Freeman Wood, J. Gordon Russell, Jean Lamott, Walt Robbins, Charles Eldridge and Robert Littlefield.

"Yellow Faces"

Charles Ray in "Percy" Heads Pathe List for Week March 15

THE week of March 15 marks the release of "Percy," the second feature prduction starring Charles Ray to be released by Pathe. In addition to this the week's program introduces the first two-reel comedy to be made, featuring Charley Chase, entitled "Hard Boiled."

Pre-view showings of the latest Charles Ray production have proved it to be one of the best productions ever turned out featuring this star. The story is a screen presentation of the famous William H. Hamby novel, "The Desert Fiddler," published by Grosset & Dunlap. The principal players of the picture are Barbara Bedford, Charlie Murray, Louise Dresser, Betty Blythe, Joseph Kilgour and Victor McLagen. The picture is directed by R. William Neill.

The week also serves to introduce Charley Chase in the field of two-reel comedies with the release of the Hal Roach subject, "Hard Boiled." For the past several years this screen comedy star has been featured in comedies of one-reel length. In his first two-reeler, which was directed by Leo McCarey, Chase is supported by a cast headed by James Finlayson, Noah Young, Katherine Grant and Florence Lee.

The thrills on the program for the week are supplied by the third chapter of the Pathe serial "Idaho," featuring Mahlon Hamilton Vivian Rich. The title of this chapter is "The Stampede."

Hal Roach has a second release on the Pathe program for the week. This picture is a one-reeler and also features Charley Chase. The title of the comedy is "Should Husbands Be Watched?" Katherine Grant and Olive Borden head the supporting cast of this comedy.

Another instalment of "The Secrets of Nature" represents the principal feature of the Pathe Review No. 11.

"Jungle Bike Riders" is the title of the Aesop's Film Fables. This picture shows just how funny a ten-day bicycle race in cartoon jungleland can be.

"Topics of the Day" No. 11 and Pathe News Nos. 24 and 25 complete the Pathe program of releases for the week.

First National Wants Pictures of Merit from Independents

"FIRST NATIONAL is eager to consider the output of all independent producers and ready to make releases for such products as are of genuine merit."

This was the statement of Richard A. Rowland, general manager, First National Pictures, Inc., shortly after his arrival in Hollywood from New York on his semi-annual business trip. Mr. Rowland was accompanied by Mrs. Rowland and James B. Clark of Pittsburgh, Pa. May Allison, screen star, also was a member of the party as a guest of Mrs. Rowland.

During his stay in Los Angeles Mr. Rowland is making his headquarters in the office of John E. McCormick, western representative of First National. Most of his time on the West Coast is being spent looking over the various production units of First National, as well as outlining and discussing future releasing projects.

"Stories which have been circulated that First National is not interested in the output of independent producers are entirely erroneous," Mr. Rowland said. "We are by no means confined to pictures made by our accepted units. Any picture of genuine merit will be seriously considered for release through First National."

Following a long conference with John E. McCormick, western representative, and June Mathis, scenario editor of First National's own western unit, Mr. Rowland stated that he expected to have an important statement within a few days concerning new plays and stories to be purchased by his organization and also the stars and players likely to be signed to appear in them. This announcement will cover First National's general plans concerning releases during 1925.

"WHO'S WHO" IN THE METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER SPECIAL, "BEN-HUR"

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Foolishness

Recently, in conference with an architect who plans many theatres, and who I think really has considerable appreciation of the importance of projection problems and the desire to do all he can to plan conditions which will enable high grade projection, the following statement was made by him:

> Richardson, you don't know what we, as architects, have to contend with. The owner or exhibitor wants SEATS, and that is the ONLY thing he can see or will ever try to see. There is one theatre near here which has the projection room correctly located. The exhibitor admits that the picture is perfect—a beauty, BUT he wants the projection room boosted "up and back," because he thinks its present correct location injures the looks of the theatre a little.

Let us examine into this IDIOTIC attitude. This exhibitor thinks the projection room does not look quite nice where it is, but the picture is perfect. HE WANTS TO HAVE A PERFECTLY BEAUTIFUL AUDITORIUM AND (PARDON THE CRUDENESS) TO H——L WITH THE PICTURE —the one thing he has to sell. He is entirely willing to injure the thing the audience buys, in order to secure just a little more of symmetrical beauty in the auditorium itself!

Can you imagine anything more insane than that? Injure the appearance, and therefore the salability of the one thing you have to sell, in order to enhance the beauty of the thing which is very, very secondary. And that it is secondary, or third or fourth, one immediately understands when one considers that it is not even visible, except very dimly, for more than perhaps five minutes out of each hour.

But the BIG mistake lies in the fact that exhibitors who take this stand are placed in the position of demanding an absolute maximum of possible seats, at the expense of setting up a condition which will automatically operate to keep a lot of those seats idle, except when there is some extra costly super-attraction on, or on Saturday or Sunday evenings, and maybe afternoons.

Go into any motion picture theatre running its regular program, any afternoon and many evenings, except Saturdays and Sundays, and will you find all the seats filled? You will NOT. In a very large percentage of them you will find only a scattering few seats sold at matinees. THE EXHIBITOR HAS SACRIFICED EVERYTHING TO GET EVERY POSSIBLE SEAT, and those extra seats he has got by sacrificing projection room location to the way-up and way-back, are only filled maybe four times a week—doubtful if it is even that many—and many of the others which would be filled were the projection conditions right, so that the productions would be put on at 100 per cent of their value, are empty because the picture is itself lacking in pleasingness.

True, the audience don't know there is anything wrong. They do know, however, that the show at that theatre is NOT sufficiently pleasing to pull them in when they are in doubt as to whether they want to go to the show or not, and that is the answer.

Such an attitude on the part of exhibitors is NOT to their credit. It proves that there is still something they do NOT understand when it comes to the selling of the motion picture to the public. Anything less than a condition which will permit of essentially a non-distorted screen image means LOST BUSINESS. Any projection condition which calls for an abnormally long projection distance means additional expense in electric power (waste) every minute projection is in progress, besides the inability of the projectionist to see the picture sharply, as he must in order to maintain the best possible conditions in the matter of picture definition.

The best possible condition is a projecton angle too small to produce appreciable distortion, and a projection distance not less than 75 or greater than 100 feet.

The right procedure, and the procedure which will be followed some day, is the planning of the projection installation FIRST, and then building the theatre to fit that condition. Some day an architect will be found who will be able to grasp this problem, and to solve it without appreciable sacrifice in the symmetry and looks of the theatre itself. May that day come soon.

Question No. 236—Name the various methods used for measuring film footage.

Question No. 237—What repairs do you consider it the duty of the projectionist to make on film?

Question No. 238—Give us your views as to the relationship between the theatre projectionist and the film exchange, insofar as has to do with inspection of and repairs to film. Don't merely tell us you hold such and such a view. We want to know WHY you hold that view.

Question No. 239—Tell us the various methods by which dry, brittle film may be remoistened.

Question No. 240—If you were called upon to clean some old, very dirty film, tell us how you would do it.

Foolish Practices

Thomas L. Jackson, President Joplin Dramatic Club, Joplin, Mo., which, according to its letterhead handles Comedy, Dramas, Musical Comedies, Vaudeville, Minstrel Choruses and Moving Pictures, says:

> Dear Friend Richardson: This is my first letter to you. I want to know why it is that the printers and typesetters don't change the copy on "Production Hints" submitted by Manager of Mark Strand. . . . You will find that the Mark Strand Manager recommends certain colored lights from the "Booth," to be handled by the "Operator."

The printer and typesetter have no right or authority to change anything. They set the copy received. I have not seen the recommendations you name, but have small doubt that when the matter is brought to the attention of the Mark Strand Manager that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, several states and about all the Canadian provinces have officially adopted the names Projectionist and projection room, he will himself use them.

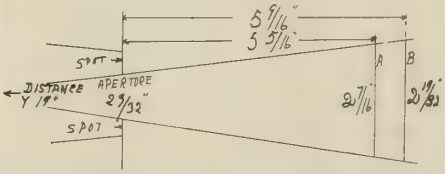
Optical Line-Up

Down Pennsylvania way a projectionist sends a money order and asks for a check-up on his optical line-up. Can use his letter in the department, so am sending the M. O. back, suppressing his name and location and putting it in the department. The data supplied are as follows: Projection lenses Gundlach-Manhattan, 7 1-8 inches E. F., 1 5-8 inches free opening. Condenser 6 1-2 meniscus and an 8 1-2 Bi-convex. Projection lens working distances respectively 5 5-16 and 5 9-16 inches. Crater distances both 3 1-2. Converging and collector lenses spaced 3-32 inches. Y distances both 19 inches. Crater 20-64 inch. Screen—meaning screen image I take it—14 feet 9 inches. No. one projector is 12 inches and No. two 35 inches from center line. Lenses 34 inches above screen center. He wants to know whether or no any improvement can be made.

I have laid the thing out roughly on paper. As you may see by the drawing, assuming the good brother to have measured the Y distance from the face of converging lens to aperture, using the wide dimension of the aperture, at the 5 5/16-inch working distance it would require a lens having a 2 5/8-inch free diameter to admit the entire light beam, while at 5 9/16-inch working distance the lens would have to be 2 19/32 inches free diameter.



Referred to Griffith

I shall refer this matter to Griffith for an opinion, but I think that while it is possible to admit the entire beam by getting the largest available free diameter Gundlach-Manhattan lens, using your present condenser lenses, still the Cinephor Parabolic condenser is the thing you need.

I believe you have as good a layout as you could get, except the Cinephor, with your present projection lenses.

After writing the foregoing I found additional data on back of the sheet which advised me that the bottom of the screen is ten feet from the floor (which seems rather high unless there is some good reason for it); that the first row of seats is 25 feet from the screen (which is good); that the free lens diameters given is the inside of the barrel (which makes it worse, since if that is true, then his actual lens free opening is only about 1½ inches); that he has the old Six B lamphouse (which might well be changed to Type E) and that the screen is white alabastine on muslin, and that the auditorium is fifty by 128 feet in size.

As to the screen, I would use paint prepared as per page 227 of the Bluebook of Projection. I would do this because you apparently have a rather long viewing distance from the rear seats, and while kalsomine is a most excellent diffusing surface, still it has a somewhat less reflection power and deteriorates more rapidly.

Can't Be Answered

From a small place in Washington comes this letter:

> Have been projecting pictures here for a little more than one year, in a small and very badly run down theatre. That constitutes my entire experience. I have faithfully studied your third edition handbook and the Bluebook; also, of late, the projection department, and whatever else I was able to get hold of. May say I have some ideas of my own, and that they do not always coincide with yours. However, I cannot be too grateful for your good work.
> I want to know what salary I could expect on a new job. The show here only runs a little more than one day a week. I have never as yet even considered joining the union, as don't think they would consider my application at all.
>
> Should I try to obtain a position as Assistant Projectionist, or do you think I might do better? I fondly hope I am not merely a machine attendant, as I try hard to do my best.
> What is the maximum permissible foot candles of screen brilliancy? Also why should a man use a 2-blade shutter when he knows three is better? Please send me a list of S. M. P. E. publications and their price.

Needs a Friend

This good brother wrote quite a bit more, but this much shows exactly where he is "at" and tells me that what he needs is to be talked to frankly and friendly, and that is exactly what I shall do.

One of the greatest dangers of the beginner who really has potential ability is that he is more than apt to think he knows a whole lot more than he really does. I remember when I first started riding a motorcycle, at the end of the six months I had studied my machine and fondly imagined I was able to tell those who made it quite some several things.

I was fired with the discovery that I had discovered improvements—which I later found out had long since been thoroughly tried out, and discarded long before I knew anything more about a motorcycle than that it had two wheels, some sort of an engine, and an ability to smear itself and its rider over quite some considerable territory upon rather slight provocation.

But I went through that period with nothing more than the loss of some wasted effort and money and found that while the novice might, of course, really hit upon something the men who made and studied the machines all the time, and expended tens of thousands of dollars a year in experiment, still it was extremely unlikely.

The Right Road

This good brother is on the right road. He is studying. By the by, he will, through wider experience, discover that while he does not always agree with what we old timers set forth, still we are pretty likely to be right just the same. The two wing shutter is often better than the three-winger, especially with increased projection speed.

Please understand that all that is NOT said critically, but in the most friendly spirit. Go to it, brother. Disagree all you want to. When you have finally found out the right and the wrong, you will NOT forget. It will be fixed in your mind so long as life shall last, and meanwhile you have made real progress, though perhaps mistaken in some of your ideas.

As to what you should do—well, who can say? You will probably find it will depend upon what you CAN do. You must remember that, while you have had a year of experience, of a sort, and have studied, and that while all that will have final large value to you, still you are going to discover that none of that is quite sufficiently complete to give you any considerable immediate aid. It will merely enable you to say to Mr. Manager that you have really had some experience in actual theatre projection, and thus will aid you in getting a position.

As to securing a position as projectionist, or assistant, you will do well to see what you CAN get, and when the opportunity for either comes, grab it by the neck and kiss it upon both cheeks. I want to warn you, however, that getting a job is not going to be a cinch. In union-controlled cities you can't work at all until you belong to the union. I would suggest that you put in an application to the union under the jurisdiction of which you now work, which I think is Aberdeen-Hoquiam. The address is J. E. Newell, Secretary Local Union 429, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., Box 778, Hoquiam, Washington. You will, I think find them to be a very decent bunch of fellows, but don't expect them to exactly fall on your neck and shed tears of joy. However, they will probably admit you, provided you can convince them that you are able to make good.

Get Out and Hustle

I'm sorry, Old Man, but that really is about the best I am able to do for you. You will have to do just as we all did—get out and hustle for what you want. Maybe you'll get it with little trouble—maybe you'll find getting it about as hard as pulling molars. Let us hope it is the former.

As to maximum screen brilliancy as measured in foot candles, there is no such thing, and never can be I think, because it would be largely dependent upon the contrast such foot candle illumination offered to the surroundings and the general auditorium lighting.

The shutter subject is entirely too big a thing to discuss here. The S. M. P. E. proceedings are now, if I rightly remember, two dollars a copy. Not sure, but think that is the figure. Address L. A. Jones, President Research Laboratories Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York, for full information.

Testing Surfaces

Some years ago the Eastman Company, through its most excellent engineering force, made practical tests of a number of surfaces then used for motion picture screens. This test was of immense value to those who were able and willing to apply it. It was incorporated into the Bluebook, pages 258-267 inclusive. It would have been very much more valuable had it been more complete as to the range of surfaces tested, and had it been consistently kept up to date.

I believe that if some entirely disinterested company of high standing, such as the Eastman Company, is willing to make such tests (and I think likely the Eastman Company would be willing to do it) NO SCREEN SURFACE SHOULD BE ACCORDED RECOGNITION OR PURCHASED UNTIL IT HAS FIRST SUBMITTED ITS SCREEN SURFACE TO TEST, and the results of those tests have been made available through proper publication in the accepted mediums.

Without such tests the purchaser is largely at the mercy of the screen salesman, who can, and very often does make statements concerning the adaptability of the surface to the individual auditorium which would not stand the light of twilight, much less the light of day.

But the projectionist and theatre manager is only able to check up such statements in a more or less unsatisfactory way. We have now arrived at the point where we are able to select a screen surface suitable to or for use in auditoriums of any given dimensions, PROVIDED WE HAVE RELIABLE DATA AS TO THE REFLECTIVE AND DIFFUSIVE POWERS OF THE VARIOUS SCREEN SURFACES, which is the only things it is proposed to submit to test.

Incidentally I would respectfully direct the attention of the Eastman Company to the fact that we have never had any official figures as to the reflective powers of two surfaces much used for screen purposes, viz, cloth and white plaster. Their diffusive power is of course high. We would also like to have a test on white cement, together with the Eastman engineer's opinion as to its efficiency as a screen surface for out-of-doors work.

Amusing

In that valuable department "Straight From the Shoulder Reports," presided over by Shiek Van Buren Powell, C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pa., in reporting on: "In the Palace of the King," remarks:

> Metro-Goldwyn has always given us poor prints, and this one ran true to form. There were one hundred and twenty seven splices in the last reel, which would mean more than 1,000 splices in the eight reels. Some print.

Splice Every Eight Feet

Presumably there were about 8,000 feet in the eight reels. That means a splice every eight feet, average. And that is what is handed the projectionist under the name of a production, and with that he is presumed to put on a show—which in the very nature of things must and will be what we call a "holy show."

Of course we grant that a splice every eight feet does not necessarily mean much. I COULD take a new film, cut it and make a splice every eight feet without appreciably damaging results on the screen. But in practice the film which has an average of a splice every eight feet, has splices in many places about every two feet, or even less, AND at a great majority of them from three or four frames to three feet of film has been amputated, so that the actor is, for instance, likely to step off the top step of the grand stairway, and without further ado or exertion walk calmly away from its bottom, or the heroine is apt to be engaged in changing her raiment in the privacy of her boudoir, and without warning, bing! just like that, be all mixed up with the Cow-Eye in a soul kiss (whatever that may be) out behind the lilac bush in the moonlit garden.

You see such things get the projectionist all fussed up. He don't like to yank the dear li'l starlet around like that. It ain't decent, and besides she might throw something at him, or sue him for taking such liberties with her high-priced "art."

Well, anyhow if it were not so serious a matter from the exhibition standpoint, it would be amusing to think of a film exchange having the GALL to call junk of that kind "film service," and charging and collecting rental therefor. "Cheap service," do you say? To which remark I would reply by saying that such junk is NOT "cheap" service. It is NOT SERVICE AT ALL. It is merely a plain, unvarnished outrage upon all concerned, including the motion picture industry. I make the unqualified assertion that FILMS IN GOOD MECHANICAL CONDITION, PROPERLY PROJECTED, WILL BRING IN A SUFFICIENTLY INCREASED INCOME AT ANY THEATRE BOX OFFICE TO JUSTIFY, and MORE THAN JUSTIFY THE ADDITIONAL COST INCIDENT. I hold this to be true in the village as well as in the city theatre, provided the exchange add to the cost of service ONLY the actual cost incident to perfection in mechanical condition of the films, AND provided the effect of the gain in film condition be not nullified by punkness in projection. THERE IS NO EARTHLY USE IN HAVING FILMS IN PERFECT MECHANICAL CONDITION IF THEY ARE TO BE PROJECTED TO THE SCREEN AS A DIM, SHADOWY, SHAKY THING WHICH HAS SLIGHT AMUSEMENT VALUE TO AN AUDIENCE. On the other hand it is impossible to put on a show having high grade amusement value, no matter how perfect the projection, if the films are themselves full of visible rain, with frequent ridiculous, disconcerting jumps in the action, due to cut-outs made in removing damaged film and splicing, and with probably badly worn, strained and distorted sprocket hole edges.

In other words, if a theatre is to present a consistently good show, having its full possible box office drawing power, two basically fundamental requirements MUST be present, viz, (a) Films free from visible "rain" and in otherwise reasonably good physical condition, and (b) a well illuminated, steady picture, projected at at least approximately correct speed.

THEATRE MANAGERS WHO DOUBT THE CORRECTNESS OF THAT LAST STATEMENT AND BELIEVE THAT POORLY PROJECTED, JUNK FILM IS REALLY CHEAP BECAUSE ITS RENTAL PRICE IS LOW, HAVE STILL MUCH TO LEARN ABOUT THE AMUSEMENT BUSINESS.

Machine Operators?

I am in receipt of a 76 page "program" of the second annual dance which was given by the motion picture projectionists of New Orleans, La. I note, however, that on the cover, and all the way through the booklet and its many pages of advertising, with the exception of two advertisers who followed up-to-date practice and nomenclature, the fact seems to be stressed that the New Orleans men are merely machine operators, hence, by inference at least, not projectionists.

I was, however, given a laugh, because on the eighth page and tenth page appears an article headed "Projection," which deals with and speaks of projection as a vital force in the motion picture industry.

Why not be consistent, gentlemen? To do that you should have headed the article "Operating," or "Machine Operating" and spoken of that as a vital force. WOULD HAVE LOOKED A BIT RIDICULOUS, WOULD IT NOT? Do you see the point?

In this same article you say "the men of the booth" and, further along say "without egotism and with a pardonable pride the men of New Orleans local 293 claim to be men of that calibre—skilled technicians who know their business."

Well, gentlemen, if that is true, then you know that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is the governing authority in motion picture nomenclature, and that it has condemned "Machine Operator" and "Booth," and has officially adopted other terms in their stead. Surely if you are "skilled technicians and know your business"——and mind you I am not saying, or intimating that you don't——then it is up to you to cut out the use of SILLY, inappropriate terms, and to follow the practice set up by the S. M. P. E., and accepted by all Canadian Provincial governments and many of our own States. Cease being a mere "machine operator" working in a "booth," and become a Motion Picture Projectionist, working in a projection room.

I hope you had a bully good time at your ball, and that local 293 Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. will continue to prosper. Also I trust it will follow the example already set by many progressive unions, climb into the band wagon of progress and not insist upon using silly, undignified and improper terms, merely because they were wished upon us in the early days of the industry.

In your program you say that you respect your business. Well, gentlemen and brothers, you are NOT showing it much respect by insisting that you are merely machine attendants who are content to work in a "booth," which Webster defines as "Temporary structure made of boughs; a shack." Wake up men! Get into the march of PROGRESS. The difference as between "Booth" and "Projection Room," and "Moving Picture Machine Operator" and "Motion Picture Projectionist" means a LOT to you. You of New Orleans evidently don't yet see the point, but many have seen it who laughed and sneered at first and many more are waking up every day. You will eventually see it too. Why not now?

Question No. 206—Name the glare spots most commonly found in theatres; also is there any real necessity for glare spots?

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; Ralph W. Boone, White Pigeon, Mich.; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H.; F. H. (Dinty) Moore, Taunton, Mass.; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; Allie Barron, Lodi, Calif.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; J. W. Rainwater, Albany, Ala.; Harold E. Hurlbutt, Oskosh, Wis.; Fred Allard, Salina, Kans., and one excellent, neatly typewritten answer without any name on it, all did fair to middlin' on this one.

WARNING: Always put your name on EVERY SHEET of your answer, AND your full address on the top of its front page.

The choice of best answers for publication fell, without question, between Hanover and Burnett, but I think Hanover has the best of it. He says:

> In many of the smaller, and in some large theatres, the most objectionable glare spot is a highly illuminated sheet of piano or organ music, often directly under the screen and directly facing the audience. This is, in extreme cases, literally an eye murderer. Very often glare spots are set up by light reflected from the sheet music in one or more of the orchestra music stands. A white-face clock on the front wall is often a glare spot, and pronouncedly so if it be near the screen. Wrongly made exit signs are, or may be glare spots. Very often balcony ceiling lights are annoying glare spots to that portion of the audience seated back of them on the main floor. "Side lights," when used for illuminating purposes, are almost always an annoying glare spot to a portion of the audience. Ceiling lights may be and often are glare spots either to all or to a portion of the audience seated in the balcony. The screen itself may be a glare spot if it be over-illuminated in a dimly lighted auditorium.
> There is no reason for or excuse for glare spots in a theatre, because they may be eliminated by careful, intelligent work. It is a part of the duty of the projectionist to direct the attention of the theatre management to any glare spots which may exist therein.

Question No. 207—Tell us how it is possible to place a clock on the front wall, and even near the screen, and thus enable the audience to tell the time of day, without creating a glare spot.

Every one except brother Baron, who only answered the single question of the entire list, came through, though I would not myself agree with friend Allard's plan, which I will however, print for your consideration.

Cooley says:

> Page 238-239 of Bluebook supplies full instructions for this, and the method there shown is, in my opinion, very effective and complete. I have no improvements to offer, and hardly think it necessary to merely copy the Bluebook instructions.

You are wrong there, Brother Cooley. Thousands of men who have no Bluebook are reading and more or less studying these answers, which they can get for nothing in the Boss' paper. True, they ought to have a Bluebook but the fact that they have none is no fault of mine, and if I can reach them and benefit them this way I am very willing to do it, and do it as completely as possible, too, for the benefit of the industry and the profession of projection.

The man whose name does not appear gave one of the clearest, most concise answers possible. He said:

> A clock may be placed on the front wall and illuminated without constituting a glare spot, merely by reversing the color scheme of the clock, and confining the light used to illuminate it to the face of the clock. To do this the face of the clock may be covered with a dull black material, and the figures painted on it with dull or "flat" white. The hands are then painted dull or "flat" white. When this is done, the only things about the clock which reflect much light are the hands and figures. An electric globe of low candle power may then be enclosed, and a round opening made in the enclosure through which the light is allowed to shine on the face of the clock only.

Bennewitz says:

> This may be done by obtaining from a photographer a piece of dull black paper, such as is wrapped around photographic plates. Cut this the same diameter as the clock face, and have a card writer paint white roman numerals, equally spaced as on the clock face. In the center of this cut a hole of sufficient diameter so that it will slip over the hand post without touching it. Remove the handle and glue the paper to the clock face so that it is absolutely flat. Paint the hands white and replace them.
> In placing a light on the clock, use a metal shade, cutting a piece of tin to cover the entire opening. In the center of this piece of tin cut an oblong opening of sufficient size so that it is possible to change the lamp when it is fitted to the shade. Make a sliding door for the oblong opening, and in the center of it cut a hole about the size of a quarter. Solder the tin to the shade so that it is light tight, and solder up any other places where it is necessary to exclude light rays. In mounting the light, place it so that the light from the small opening will illuminate the face of the clock only.
> Another method which I believe will work out satisfactorily, is to paint the face of the clock a dead (non-gloss) black, painting in the numerals with luminous paint. This will eliminate the necessity of a light of any kind, and I believe would give a very pleasing effect.

Which is all right, except that instead of removing the hands, one may cut the paper from circumference to center hole and then slip it under the hands, and if the hands are painted (the Bluebook suggests gluing white paper over them) water colors should be used, so that should the clock ever be used elsewhere the hands may just be washed off and are as good as ever. Undoubtedly the luminous paint will do nicely IF it is and remains sufficiently luminous—of which same I have serious doubts, Brother Bennewitz.

Question No. 208—Explain how exist signs may be made conspicuous, without being glare spots.

At first I thought you were all nutty, but afterward concluded it was merely that you had not made yourselves clear when you said "paint the letters 'EXIT' on ruby glass" (Rainwater says green, as they use green for exit signs in Alabama). Hanover says:

> Have a suitable receptacle made—built into the wall if practicable—with an open face, arranged to receive one or more sheets of ruby glass.
> Have a sign writer outline the letters EXIT in black on the ruby glass, said letters to be of whatever height local law requires, but in no event less than four inches. Then have him (the sign writer) paint all the rest of the glass, except the letters themselves, black, so that when the glass is slipped into place over the receptacle and the lamp therein is lighted, only the letters EXIT, in red (Green in Alabama.—Ed.) will be visible to the audience. The interior of the receptacle should be painted gloss white, and the lamp preferably be so placed that the audience cannot see it through the glass letters. The glass should be dark ruby. Such a sign is conspicuous, and has no glare at all if the illuminating lamp is properly located.

Cooley duplicated this instruction in a little different form. In part he says:

> I also find that by using a metal box, of proper proportions, with the letters EXIT cut out, and dark red (NOT painted) glass behind these letters, inside the box, makes a very effective and satisfactory non-glare exit sign.

Question No. 209—Is the fact that individuals of the audience do not enter complaint of glare spots prove that they are not objectionable?

Burnett, Cooley, Boone, Moore, Johnson, Hurlbutt, Man-without-a-name (who would get just no attention at all were not his answers so excellent), Rainwater, Bennewitz, Hanover and Allard all made good.

Mr. Man-without-a-name says:

> The fact that individuals of the audience do not enter complaint because of glare spots proves nothing. The average theatre patron does not know enough about the subject to trace annoyance from glare spots to its source. If their eyes ache, they blame the "pictures." In this theatre we have three blue lamps on each side, which give light during the show. These have been placed too low, and are not shielded. A person who has to look past one of these lamps is annoyed by it, but very few know that the lamp is the cause of their annoyance. If at the end of the show their eyes hurt (which they usually do), the pictures receive the blame. For this reason, little complaint about glare spots is heard. The remedy for this form of glare spot is to raise the lamps, and reflect their light to the ceiling, shielding all direct light from the audience.

Bennewitz says:

> The fact that individuals of the audience do not enter complaint of glare spots, is no proof that they are not objectionable. Patrons become interested in the photo-play, and do not try to analyze the cause of the heavy eye strain. They do not know what causes it, and have no desire to make a complaint to the manager without being able to give the cause. Their complaints are made to their friends when the question is raised, "what show shall we go to?" They usually decide on the theatre where there are no glare spots, where it is possible to view the photo play without eye strain.

Johnson says:

The following conversation between theatre going people who by the way, comprise about 95 per cent. of the total population of most places, is perhaps the best answer to this question.

"I don't go to the Blank Theatre any more unless it has something I especially want to see.

"Why? It's the most beautiful theatre in town and its orchestra is wonderful."

"Yes, I know, but all the same I go to the Restfull Theatre, because, I don't know why, but at the Blank the pictures hurt my eyes, and I almost always get a headache when I go there."

That is, I believe, in one form or another a typical conversation, which may be very often heard. The man who knows will instantly visualize the beautiful Blank Theatre, with its big, high class orchestra—and orchestra LIGHTS, its comfortable plush or leather seats AND glaring exit signs, clock and side lights, and know where the eyestrain and headaches come from.

The patrons themselves cannot tell you the source of their headaches, because THEY DON'T KNOW. It is always "the picture" they lay the blame on.

Of course an unsteady, flickery or otherwise poorly projected picture can and will set up eye strain, but one of the worst offenders is the musician who sits there blablahing away with a light, visible to the audience, reflected from his music so strong that the patrons in the rear row of seats can almost see the hairs in his eyebrows.

Allard makes an especially good reply. He says:

This is a subject which requires study and UNDERSTANDING. I doubt if it could be applied to all audiences in exactly the same way. However, the fact that individuals of the audience make no complaints to the theatre management concerning glare spots is no sign that such glare spots are not doing damage. This is because few individuals understand or know what the real cause of their discomfort in one theatre is, or why the discomfort is absent in another theatre. They simply know that such is the fact, hence go where they are most comfortable, except when the place where their eyes hurt has something they cannot see elsewhere.

A person goes to a theatre to relax and be amused. As a rule he or she will prefer to go to a place where, though the programme is not quite so good, still he or she is more comfortable without any aftermath of weary eyes or headache. He or she may not be quite so well satisfied with the program, but instead of weariness there is refreshment. This is not realized in one or two shows, perhaps, but eventually the regular theatre patron finds it out and just naturally gravities to the theatre having the more comfortable picture viewing conditions.

Question No. 210—Tell us what the various effects of glare spots are in the way of injury to the show.

Few seem to have got the idea, though I had to laugh at what Boone said:

This is a good one all right. The main injury is down in the box office, where receipts decrease, hence the wage of the projectionist is affected:

That's a hot one all right, and not so far from wrong, either.

Hurlbutt got the idea a little, though not very clearly. Cooley got it pretty well, too. Moore just grazed it. Bennewitz made good on it, though he did not elaborate on details much. Johnson did pretty good, though I don't know just how far his understanding of the concrete effect goes. Burnett made a good answer. Hanover, however, I think, set it all forth best. He says:

The general effect of glare spots upon the show as a whole is to injure it by setting up a condition which automatically operates to make the audience, or a portion thereof, uncomfortable, and when one is uncomfortable one is not in the best condition to enjoy a show.

The immediate effect upon the picture itself is to reduce the contrast of its highlights and shadows, because of the strain placed upon the eyes which are viewing it. One cannot see very clearly through watering eyes, or through eyes which are strained. This is proven, or may be proven by suddenly eliminating the glare spots, whereupon the picture instantly "stands out."

It is apparently more brilliant, and has far greater beauty and contrast.

Bennewitz says:

Glare spots impair the contrast and beauty of the picture. This is true even though they cast no light on the screen. They continually detract the eyes of the patrons from the screen, causing them to miss more or less of the story. Patrons are continually changing their position in their seats, trying to find a position where it is possible to view the picture and get away from the glare spots. This is a constant annoyance to other patrons seated behind them, often causing them to miss the key to the story. Patrons will often close their eyes to give them a rest from the glare spots, which gives them a more or less disconnected story.

Did My Part

As may be remembered, on the occasion of my visit to Washington last summer I personally took the matter of a really competent, semi close-up motion picture of the next presidential inauguration up with Secretary Slemp and with President Coolidge.

When the time for inauguration drew near I wrote Secretary Slemp, but he was away, in Florida. My letter reached Mr. E. T. Clark, acting secretary to the President, however, who replied very courteously.

It is one thing to lay matter personally before the man you seek to interest, and quite another to lay it before him by letter. Mr. Slemp I had interested to the extent that he took me in to President Coolidge, and afterward promised that when the time came he would again bring the matter to the attention of the President himself.

Mr. Clark, of course, had not had the matter laid forcefully before him, hence he very naturally was unable to see any reason why the President should be troubled with what was to him such a comparatively trivial matter. He, therefore, merely called the attention of the inaugural committee to the matter, and referred my letter to them.

Inaugural Committee

The inaugural committee, through its secretary, F. A. Fenning, wrote me very courteously saying that the committee had given my letter very careful consideration, but side-stepped on the grounds that the committee would have to employ cameramen, which it considered impracticable. (I had suggested that two high grade cameramen —government men presumably—be stationed so as to get a semi-close-up, positives from which should be supplied to any producers desiring them at absolute cost, the negatives to be stored by the government for the benefit of future generations).

I again wrote Acting Secretary Clark, asking that President Coolidge personally direct that something of the sort be done. Again Acting Secretary Clark replied saying: "Dear Mr. Richardson: I have your letter which I shall forward to Mr. Fenning. With full appreciation of your desire to record a close-up of the taking of the oath, I cannot agree with you that it is necessary to have a different view than that which is had by those actually in attendance."

Not Good Reasoning

This is, with all due deference to Mr. Clark, not very good reasoning. Those actually in attendance have had the pleasure of the trip, and visit to the capital. They saw the entire proceeding in full. They were COMPARATIVELY FEW IN NUMBER. Those who do not attend, and cannot attend, number tens upon tens of millions. They do not see the actual thing, but a motion picture of it only, hence might be excused for askingg for a comparative close-up. By this semi-close-up THE PRESIDENT WOULD IN EFFECT BE INAUGURATED IN EVERY CITY, VILLAGE AND HAMLET IN ALL THIS BROAD LAND, and it would be done very effectively, too. Moreover, future generations would be enabled to see the thing done—for I have faith to believe that means will be found, if not to perpetuate these negatives, at least to preserve them, either directly or by effective "duping" for many hundreds of years.

Well, anyway, I did all I could, and perhaps it had some effect. It is not altogether impossible that at the least, because of the importance of the thing being laid before them, the committee was inclined to allot better location to cameramen than they would otherwise have been able to get. This is written March Third; we have yet to learn how the camera boys were treated.

Gosh!

When the following letter came from R. T. Pennenoyer, American Falls, Idaho, I nearly fell off the stool. Friend Pennenoyer says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Am submitting answers to a number of Bluebook School questions. Have the Bluebook and consider it as having been a most excellent investment. Am projectionist in the Irene Theatre, a 400 seat house here.

Gosh! A theatre in American Falls! When I first saw that place in 1883 it consisted of a box-car depot, maybe half a dozen rough buildings and a few tents, plus a not high, but rather savage looking falls right smack under the Oregon Short Line (which we were then building, though it was then finished, in the rough, to Hailey, and a bit beyond Shoshone) railroad bridge.

Dad was engineer there then—first passenger engineer on the road. I went firing. "Fat Jack" then had an eating tent beside the track on the side of the river opposite from where the town now is. There was a many-verse doggeral song then going the rounds there, one verse of which went:

"Next morning with an empty belly and my blankets on my back
"I started for American Falls, and there I met Fat Jack.
"Fat Jack is gay and happy—you will always find him so:
" 'Twas the only square meal that I got awav out in Idaho."

The first bridge, since replaced and in a slightly different location I understand, was of wood, and many a man fell from it into the raging waters beneath to his death, the body never being recovered once it disappeared in the boiling vortex.

And now there's a town, with a theatre 'n everything. Well, well, well!

Gentlemen:

On Sunday Nov. 16th, I experienced the greatest thrill I have ever had on any organ bench. Our new "ROBERT MORTON" is the finest organ I have had the pleasure to play on.)

The splendid voicing and beautiful tone, the fastest action I have ever seen, the second touch in a class by itself AND construction, truly the "ROBERT MORTON" is a masterpiece.

I was somewhat skeptical due to unfair remarks of competitors. But, I now say with all sincerity, that my wildest dreams of a wonderful organ were more than realized.

Wishing that every organist had as wonderful an instrument as the "ROBERT MORTON", I am ,

Dear Sir:-

I just can't refrain from expressing my feelings, and voicing the sentiments of all my patrons regarding the new "Robert-Morton" Organ recently installed in my theatre.

It is not just another organ, but a work of ART. The material, design and workmanship, are the best I have ever seen; and as for tonal quality - well my box office speaks for that as I have broken my records twice in the two weeks it has been completed. I give the organ this credit, because the pictures were very ordinary, but the organ concert given on those day even brought people here in wheel chairs.

If any exhibitor doubts the superiority of the "Robert-Morton" Organ, tell him to arm himself with an unbiased organ builder and an organist, and he has my permission to put this instrument through the paces, and I am confident that he too will join me in pronouncing "The Robert-Morton" the finest theatre organ built.

With best wishes for your deserved success, I remain,

Very truly yours,

Earle J Johnson

Dear Mr. Levy:

Just a word about Century Comedies in general, the Wanda Wiley Series in particular.

I have been watching the progress of this young lady for the past few months, and she surely is coming to the front. This lady has great possibilities and is already a wonderful box-office bet in short reel subjects.

Being an exhibitor, I appreciate good comedies when I see them, and you will agree with me when I tell you good ones are few and far between, which accounts for my enthusiasm over the Wanda Wiley Series of Century Comedies.

If they get any better, I shall have to play them as feature pictures.

The Sensation of the Hour!

"THE THUNDERING HERD" is doing "Covered Wagon" business all over the country! In many places it's eclipsing the records set by "The Covered Wagon." Paramount has done the trick again! A great production plus the pulling power of Zane Grey's name is bringing them in in swarms. And read these reviews:

"There can be no contradiction. 'The Thundering Herd' is the perfect picture of its kind. It soars to heights even greater than 'The Covered Wagon.' It throbs with reality, with romance, with sweeping action and breathless adventures. The magnificent stampede of hundreds of charging, frenzied buffalo over the ice-covered prairie is one of the most awe-inspiring sights we have ever seen." —New York Mirror

"A stirring picture which in many ways has as much to recommend it as 'The Covered Wagon.'" —New York American

"'The Thundering Herd' is 'The Covered Wagon's' brother. It is much more interesting than 'The Covered Wagon' from the standpoint of human drama." —N. Y. Evening Post

"The most beautiful photoplay I ever say. In some respects it can hold its own with 'The Covered Wagon.' The buffalo stampede and the fight with the Indians are among the most thrilling things the movies have shown us in many a day. They don't make westerns any better than 'The Thundering Herd.'" —N. Y. News

"The 100% perfect picture. It ought to be billed as 'the picture with a thousand thrills.' There isn't a dull moment in it, and that is some achievement when you stop to consider the tremendous scope of the picture. It goes several steps beyond 'The Covered Wagon' in point of action. It is the last word in realism. No picture of its type could be better than 'The Thundering Herd.' We predict for it an extended engagement. You will be cheating yourself if you miss it." —N. Y. Graphic

"It is a work of art. It will make the blood of every American boy tingle, and men with young hearts will be carried back to the accounts of the daring deeds of the '70's. Horses and riders dash into the tops of covered wagons, Indians ride at terrific pace and clash with white men. Some of the scenes are reminiscent of Remington paintings." —N. Y. Times

Hollywood

Sure moving along. That Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer group. Have you noticed how they are hitting? How they have been? Right along. This season?

The chief topic of Hollywood. Where they watch picture making. Like nowhere else. And where they know. What's happening at the little old box-office. Despite that they pussyfoot about the Writers Club. And other places. And discuss Art. With a large and emphatic A.

Within a year, Metro has pushed way ahead. Until it occupies a tremendously forceful position. In the business. Due to what? Pictures. Nothing but. And being offered to exhibitors at attractive prices.

Some keenly posted sales folk. Say Metro has been "giving away" pictures. Perhaps. That's a new phase of things. In the picture business. Never heard of anyone giving anything away. In this business before. (Still, we're young and are learning something daily.)

However, be that as it may. (We're not interested in sales figures.) This

A Steady Stream of
With Money-Getting Metro-G
The Talk of

is sure: they have been turning out a lot of mighty good box-office bets. And it's the why and how of this. Which interests us a lot.

Back of the scenery you learn a lot. About this. You find Louis B. Mayer watching production. As a business man. Not interested in art pictures. Only interested in what the box-office wants. And doesn't hesitate to say so. He has box office record charts. Before him all the time. And keeps them there. The artistic scenarios and doodabs. He leaves to his aides. Gives Harry Rapf and Irving Thalberg full swing. The latter says: "Sometimes I think L. B is working for me; not me for him." Nothing describes the state of affairs better. And these production chiefs work day and night. Never quit. Studio all day. Preview at night. Something like 17 directors to provide material with. Considering they have Neilan and von Stroheim to handle. Count these as a few more. They need lots of attention.

But they are turning out mighty attractive pictures. And the result has inspired the entire organization. Even the big chiefs. Back in New York. Even Marcus Loew. So much so. That they are preparing for the coming season. With such vim; such enthusiasm. That a word of warning might be offered. To other concerns. Keep an eye on Metro. Better still. Keep two eyes on Metro.

"SALVATION HUNTERS"

A Josef von Sternberg Production

THIS is the most talked of, the most sensational production of the year. It has been universally praised and where it has been exploited it has broken no end of box-office records; in one case, records that have been standing seven years. "For entertainment value, sincere human interest and for actualities," the reviewer of the N. Y. Morning Telegraph says, "I have yet to see a greater production. It is the finest thing I have seen in pictures."

Why do you suppose grocery stores all carry Ivory Soap—Quaker Oats, Heinz's or Van Camp's beans and such other products?

Because every Grocer understands that those staple products not only bring profits but they also bring constant customers.

Take your theatre now for one moment.

It has been proven by a series of tests that news weeklies and novelties have the same staple drawing and selling quality in the theatre as Ivory, Quaker oats and Heinz's beans have in the grocery stores.

That's why we urge you to have a news weekly. That's why we urge you to show novelties regularly. They are the "Staples."

When your costly feature flops you can always depend on novelties, cartoons and news weeklies to give your patrons satisfactory entertainment.

With sure fire staples, you can never go wrong.

F. B. O. has now for some time been releasing THE SCREEN ALMANAC and the BRAY CARTOONS. Several thousand theatres are now using them regularly.

THE SCREEN ALMANAC is a box office novelty with a sure fire draw every week. It shows the Movie Stars at play. People are constantly attracted by scenes of movie stars off the screen.

THE BRAY CARTOONS with Dinky Doodle are fascinating and entertaining reels, new and snappy constantly.

You can insure your house a certain amount of business regularly every week by showing these novelties, and when your feature is weak depend on these twins of entertainment to save your performance.

THE BRAY CARTOONS are written and directed by Walter Lantz.

THE SCREEN ALMANAC is produced by E. V. Durling. Both are Standard Cinema Productions and two of the best consistent crowd bringers on the market.

in the

Aristocrat Series of the Year

Presented by B. BERGER

"TEN DAYS"
"GOING THE LIMIT"
"TOO MUCH YOUTH"
"THE KANSAS KISSER"

—Moving Picture World.

I predict that RICHARD HOLT will prove a sensation in a short time and he is one of the fast coming stars.

—Bill Edmunds, Progress Features, San Francisco.

RICHARD HOLT, in my opinion, will prove to be a big box-office asset and is very much superior in looks and acting ability in comparison to many of the so-called independent stars.

—Jack Bellman, Renown Pictures, New York.

RICHARD HOLT is the biggest and best find in years, so says Dave Mountain, Richmount Pictures, New York City. And so he bought the entire World's Foreign Rights of the entire series.

RICHARD HOLT is a good looking chap, athletic and energetic, plays the role of Dick Van Buren with just the requisite dash and ease necessary to put it over and can be listed as having "made good" in his first appearance as a star.

The Director–

THE trade have come to attach considerable importance to the name of the director of any photoplay production. There is a definite touch of complete understanding and artistry which distinguishes the work of one director from another.

The name of Harry Beaumont, director, on a photoplay stamps it as a product of quality. It is like the "Sterling" mark on silver.

"Beau Brummel," "Main Street," "Babbitt," "The Lover of Camille" and "A Lost Lady" constitute a record of directoral achievements for Mr. Beaumont which is rarely equalled for consistently splendid performance.

In "RECOMPENSE" Mr. Beaumont has done the best work of his career. It is filled with touches of real genius which have transferred the Keable story to the screen with a power that is tremendous.

At 3:55 the Coolidge inauguration was flashed upon Broadway screens—many hours before any other news reels were shown. "A picture not to be missed"

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune

Richard Barthelmess and Mary Hay at the Capitol.

Richard Barthelmess and Mary Hay appear at the Capitol Theater this week in "New Toys," one of the most irresistible comedies of married life which the screen has brought forward in many moons. It is one of those rare stories in which a false note is never struck. Besides that, it is flawlessly presented. Mary Hay's return to the screen in this picture brings back one of the most deft comediennes in pictures. Incidentally, Mr. Barthelmess deserted more serious fields to romp through this film with his talented wife.

The story has to do with a young couple who are settling down to a happy married life. They have each other, a tiny flat and an infant. But the wife, who was a dancer before her marriage, begins to tire of her new toys. The appearance of hubby's former fiancee and a former admirer of his wife brings matters to a sudden climax. With the fiasco of the wife's theatrical venture happiness returns to the pair.

In its presentation the comedy is neither over nor underdone. There are moments when it flirts with slapstick, but not enough so to destroy the artistic finish of the whole. The play never becomes actively serious, yet there are times when one has trouble with a suspicious lump in the throat. Mr. and Mrs. Barthelmess have been surrounded by a small and unusually competent cast. "New Toys" is a picture not to be missed.

WORLD

The Editor's Views

WE are presenting a new department to exhibitor readers this week and offering it with a full degree of confidence in the welcome that it will receive.

"THE FIRST RUN"—which makes its debut as a World feature on page 231 of this issue—is, as its name implies, designed to serve the man who needs something more than trade papers have to date supplied as regular weekly features. Presentations, prologues, music, these are the meat of which the department will consist.

There is a bright future before "The First Run."

Daily, sixteen-hundred-seat houses are rearing their giant proportions and earning fat profits in communities where six hundred seaters have previously barely existed.

And with the sixteen-hundred-seater is coming the necessity of providing more than a picture, of surrounding the screen entertainment with the factors that constitute a SHOW. The prologue is no longer an exclusive Broadway or Loop possession, the dancer or vocalist of quality no longer confined to metropolitan houses.

Here many exhibitors come face to face with a problem. They must approximate Broadway entertainment—without Broadway's facilities to engage creative talent and surround it with expensive aides.

Here we hope to find our department "The First Run" given its opportunity for service.

NECESSARILY, the first issue of a new department is not the complete expression of what it is expected to offer. Plans for definite, concrete, constructive service that are already well formulated will come into evidence in the pages of the department in succeeding weeks.

But at no time do we expect the physical department as it appears in Moving Picture World to express the full meed of "The First Run's" service.

For every item of service given in the department we expect, and are prepared, to render a hundred favors in direct mail contact, individual, personal aid to theatre men in solving their problems.

Under the direction of Colby Harriman, experts in every line of presentation work are at the call of our readers. Blue prints will be supplied, dollar and cents cost information available, knotty stage problems arising out of limited facilities solved.

It is true that there have been "efforts" towards this sort of service in the trade field. But, to our mind, these efforts have suffered through confusing what is inherently a "SHOW" problem with matters purely technical and architectural.

Service along presentation lines belongs "up front in the book" just as presentation work is rapidly forging its way to the front as a factor in picture theatre management.

NATURALLY, such a department as "The First Run" stands or falls as it is authoritative or otherwise.

Colby Harriman, who will conduct "The First Run," requires no introduction to the man in whose behalf he will be laboring. He is a lighting and technical expert whose work has carried him to all parts of the United States and whose associations abroad have been with the masters of stagecraft.

Seventeen years of association with Gordon Craig, "father of modern stagecraft;" Adolph Linnebach, of the Courth Theatre, Dresden, and such stars as Sir Forbes-Robertson, James K. Hackett, Lenore Ulrich have been supplemented by picture theatre work in many metropolitan palaces, and association with the Theatre Department of Famous Players-Lasky.

That's a hasty thumbnail sketch of the man on the job. And we need only add that the man on the job realizes that a large part of his success must come from the unselfish cooperation of the hundreds of able theatre workers throughout the country who are giving form to the new art of picture theatre presentation.

What Arbitration Is Doing

By
Tom Waller

BOARDS of Arbitration throughout the United States during 1924 disposed of 11,197 disputes, financially computed to represent a total of $2,119,622.56; dismissed 293 complaints for actions reaching $38,502.35; recorded withdrawal of 332 complaints totaling $132,115.48. The awards, totaling $1,077,968.99 were made to 4,875 persons. These figures and many accompanying detail tabulations were made public in a compiled report today, March 12, by Attorney Charles Pettijohn at the Hays Office. The report, according to Pettijohn, is the first complete one of its kind in the film industry, meaning that for the first time since their inception in filmdom the boards have actively functioned from a January to a December.

Arbitration was described by Will Hays, in an address to newspapermen at the New York headquarters made brief by an urgent trip to Albany, as "the last word in the whole development of jurisprudence. The formula is perfect. It is the last word in business development between men."

As to the practicality of the arbitrary medium, Pettijohn, who is known to have covered nearly every territory in the country in the promotion for the successful establishing of these boards, points to the number of disputes and then compares that total to the summary of contracts during 1924 which he estimates to have been nothing less than 500,000.

The thirty-two units throughout the United States are so located that the greatest distance an aggrieved exhibitor would have to travel to present his case would not exceed 100 miles, the Hays' lawyer declared.

Pettijohn is of the opinion that the distributors, as a majority, make better members on an arbitration board than exhibitors as a whole. He qualified this expression by stating such seemed to be the case from a survey of the national situation. The distributor, he said, rotates more than the exhibitor in most instances, especially in cities where much of a showman's time is occupied with running his theatre.

Huge Saving to Industry

The amount of money arbitration saves by preventing the vast majority of disputes from materializing into actual litigation is so enormous that almost any huge estimate would not be too great to present, Pettijohn remarked in saying there was no actual method of even approaching an accurate calculation.

As to the expense the Hays Office has undergone to leave not a single stone unturned in stressing the importance of arbitration, Pettijohn cited an instance where he said about sixty-five dollars was spent in letters and stamps to bring about an adjudication of a three dollar claim. This case, however, it was gathered from his general remarks, is an exception and should not be construed as bearing in any way upon "costliness" to carry on this work.

"Arbitration encourages buyers and sellers who have disputes with one another to sit down and talk it over," he said in explaining that the arbitrary environment is so far reaching as to remove the necessity for many such disputes even reaching the boards, not overlooking the courts.

Pettijohn voiced the opinion that if the 11,000 disputes had been taken to court at least over 100 of the litigants would have been dissatisfied with the decisions and would now be soaring about with appeals from hill to mountain of expensive litigation. He mentioned this in connection with the fact that the decision of an arbitration board is final. The finality of such arbitrary judgment is arrived at only after every preliminary privilege has been granted an aggieved party, he emphasized.

Each of the thirty-two arbitration boards are individual units with individual power, declared Pettijohn in maintaining that the M. P. P. D. A. has no authority over them whatsoever except to act in an advisory capacity when such is acceptable. About one-half of these units are incorporated, he said.

Totals of Tabulated Report

"Arbitration," said Pettijohn, "is the most satisfactory thing I have seen come into the motion picture industry."

The summaries for the 1924 report, the majority of which are published earlier in this story, also show: that twenty-one complaints were made to the Hays Office by distributors protesting against decisions of boards of arbitration and seventeen complaints in the same respect were filed by exhibitors: that the Hays Office has adjusted thirty-four of these complaints and now has four pending; that arbitration boards had pending at the opening of 1925, 520 disputes involving $140,234.04.

In addition to the summaries the outstanding points in the 1924 report are that only one dispute was litigated before arbitration; four after arbitration; fifteen disputes necessitated the presence of a seventh arbitrator and 5,697 disputes involving moneys reaching $871,035.74 were disposed of without submission to the arbitration boards.

The only case on record in the country in this respect which resorted to the courts before seeking adjustment by the arbitration board, according to the report, was in Minneapolis. The cases where litigation was entered after the arbitration board had handed down its ruling were in Buffalo, Detroit, and Minneapolis.

Of the total of disputes disposed of during 1924 New York leads with 4,692 cases while Portland, Ore., is lowest with 27 cases.

Europe Is Building Theatres At Last!

By
W. Stephen Bush

CONTINENTAL Europe is showing a distinct increase in the number of motion picture theatres. With the sole exception of France, where confiscatory taxation still chokes the progress of the industry, the growth of motion picture theatres amounts to probably 25 per cent. at a conservative estimate. In every key city of Continental Europe, such places as Berlin, Vienna, Rome, Prague, new large houses have been opened to the public in spite of the heavy cost of building materials and labor. The proposition holds true not only of Germany and Italy but likewise of Spain, Holland, Belgium, Czechoslovakia and all the Balkan states including Greece.

European cities are at last getting the better kind of motion picture houses—where such have been practically non-existent.

Germany, Italy, France and other countries are waking up to the value of proper edifices for motion picture entertainment.

Producers are building theatres.

The revenue is helping to improve studios.

Mr. Bush, in this interesting article tells, among other things, how this awakening has come about.

The desire for entertainment travels in the wake of the longing for peace. To some extent therefore this renewed activity in film circles must be considered as a symptom of economic recovery, but the many new houses cannot be explained on that theory alone. In Germany the cause may be found in a revival of the producing branch of the industry. Increased production and improved advertising methods have stimulated public interest and created a new demand and a new clientele.

Results of American Competition

It should be understood that this revival was largely brought about by the formidable Amercan competition and cannot by any stretch of the imagination be attributed to a German effort to invade the American market. Such an effort may in a purely incidental way have resulted from new ambitions and new investments but primarily the effort was due to the workings of the law of self-preservation, for the American films were crowding the native product from too many screens in Germany. It was not a question of invading the American market but a question of saving themselves in their own country.

Producers Buying Theatres

The big producers in Germany have been buying new theatres, always the best located in the principal towns and the money coming into the box offices of these houses has gone into new productions and considerable improvements in their studios. I am the last man to underestimate the dangers of foreign competition and I do not want to say that it may not eventually prove serious. Just at present, however, there is not the slightest occasion for alarm. The high brows may "rave" about the exotic and burn incense to their own greatness as they fondly dwell on their qualifications as critics, but the final verdict is never delivered by them but always by the plain but very numerous folks who buy their tickets at the box office at the regular prices.

The American public has no prejudice against foreign pictures as such but our psychology and our views of life and our traditions and our technical equipment and our plays and artists are so diametrically different from what Europe offers that many years will pass into the River of Time before the European production will make much noise in the States. The importance the foreign films possessed as a factor in our market fifteen years ago will never return. The very best studios in Europe, the so-called show places, are not a whit better than the old Lubin studio in Philadelphia ten years ago.

Conditions Alike in France and Germany

There is a distinct revival of production in France. Here, too, the strength of the American competition has been the great stimulus. The thought that American producers have made a highly successful film dealing with the French Revolution and that this film is making new records in French theatres has very naturally fired the ambition of French producers who, like all their nation, are intensely patriotic. The parallel with conditions in Germany goes a step further. In France the big producers are increasing their theatre holdings constantly and the money that comes in increasing volume as a response of native appreciation of native talent goes into studio improvements. In France, Italy and Germany there has been something of an alarm in certain big American exchanges at the renewed activities of the native producers. A little gathering of the head salesmen of one of the biggest companies doing business in Continental Europe was considering this problem in a Paris office recently.

"Do you know," said one of the Americans, "that the first-class film of German origin will do more business in Germany than one of our first-class films?" The observation was echoed by the French and the Italian representative. It seems to me that there is nothing either very startling or very alarming in such a state of affairs, granting it to exist for the sake of argument. If there were a large number of these really first-class native films the situation might be somewhat different, but no careful and impartial observer will make any such claim. The fact that the American picture is still both the standard of production and the measure of success is eloquent enough. So far, i. e., ever since the war, the European producing countries have been taking our competition laying down. It is altogether normal when they now decide to struggle and fight a bit.

Second Biggest Theatre Opened

In Italy production is still at a low ebb both as to quantity and quality. It is scarcely conceivable that a nation like the Italians, whose artistic power and genius has filled the pages of history for two thousand years still continues to be barren in the field of screen craft. Curiously enough it is Italy which shows the proportionately greatest increase in motion picture houses. The country had until last year been one of the most backward in the size and quality of its motion picture theatres but it is catching up rapidly now. Typical of this condition is the opening of the Supercinema in Rome which I attended recently. This house is next to the old Gaumont Palace in Paris the biggest motion picture theatre in Continental Europe, containing close to three thousand seats. It was built by local capital. Here, as in France, there is a strong nationalistic movement which favors the domestic product. In consequence, the house was opened with the best Italian picture available, which I must add most regretfully was far below American standards and cannot possibly be regarded as serious competition even in Italy.

In this picture, called "Via del Peccato"—"The Way of Sin"—all the glaring faults of European production are most apparent—the fond but painfully unnecessary lingering over details, the tiresome overworking of pretty sets, the halting pace of the action, the undue accentuation of trifles and the exaggerated style of acting. I am mentioning only a few of the defects—the list might be prolonged. I mentioned these particular shortcomings because they are quite characteristic of European films and seem incorrigible.

European Notes

The film industry of Austria, modest enough in its output of marketable films, has gained a lot of unenviable notoriety through exposure of graft in some of the biggest studios in Vienna. In spite of these revelations Vienna seems to be favored by the French and Italian producers as a likely place for good attractive settings and atmosphere. An Italian director is engaged in making a film in Vienna, while the big sets in a proposed revival of "The Last Days of Pompeii" are being finished in Italy. There is a persistent rumor in Vienna that one of the bankrupt native producing companies is to be taken in hand by British capital and is then to undergo a complete re-organization.

The French are taking their motion picture music very seriously. Several well-known composers have recently prepared scores for outstanding features. A recent French release called "La Briere," directed by Leon Poirier, has received its musical dress at the hands of M. Paul Ladmirault, whose opera, "Pa Prêtresse de Keridwen," has lately been accepted by the Paris Grand Opera.

Immigrant Boy Now Exhibitor, Merchant, Real Estate Dealer, Father, Sophomore

AN IMMIGRANT boy from Rumania at the age of 6 and now at 35 a prosperous theatre owner, real estate dealer, successful merchant, father of a happy family and a sophomore at college!

Now you have the whole story of Nathan Hoffman of Boston, Brookline and Somerville—all in Massachusetts, of course.

Mr. Hoffman is the owner of the Broadway and Orpheum theatres in Somerville and the Regent theatre in Arlington. This enterprising young exhibitor resides in Brookline, and besides his wife their home is occupied by two daughters, Helen, 8 years old, and Edith, a little more than a year old.

Manager Hoffman enlisted in 1908 to fight in the impending war with Mexico, but was detailed to Fort Warren where he remained until he received his honorable discharge three years later. After trying a number of different jobs, Mr. Hoffman entered a school for motion picture projectionists in Boston. Six weeks later he went to work as assistant projectionist at the Park theatre, Boston. That was in 1915 and during the same year he married Miss Lillian Shenberg of Boston. A small theatre in Malden was offered to him for $200. He bought it and left his work at the Park theatre. Business, however, was so bad that he was obliged to go back to the Park's booth. But he continued to operate the Malden theatre, opening it on three nights each week with the aid of an assistant. Manager Hoffman did the janitor work, sold tickets, took tickets and ran the machine. When it was time to start the show he went up into the booth and his assistant took over the duties at the front of the house.

Later when Mr. Hoffman found that the business was beginning to net him a profit, he watched for a more favorable opportunity—a better theatre. This finally came when he inspected the Orpheum theatre on Cross Street in Somerville. Apparently this house could not do any business. It had changed hands several times. Game to take a chance, Mr. Hoffman invested all his savings and as much money as his bank would loan him and took over the Orpheum.

At first Mr. Hoffman found the business hard to get and he found his debts growing. Then it improved.

Later Mr. Hoffman acquired an interest in the Broadway theatre, Somerville. Now he is the sole owner. During all this time he had sold the small house in Malden, but had bought a larger theatre in Everett and then he took over the Regent in Arlington. He sold the Everett theatre last September.

Mr. Hoffman found it a rather difficult matter to rent the stores' space in the Orpheum Theatre Building, so he stocked a store with men's and women's clothing and shoes and opened this as another enterprise for himself.

When he was 32 years of age Mr. Hoffman set out to acquire what he had not been able to have when he was younger. That was an education. He became a student at the preparatory school of Northeastern University and in two and one-half years succeeded in completing the four-year course. Last May he received his diploma. During the past year Mr. Hoffman also attended evening courses at Boston University so that he would be enabled to enroll as a regular sophomore in the day division of the university last September. He has a full quota of courses, including Spanish, French, psychology, accounting and principles of economics. He attended classes for two hours each morning and two hours on Tuesday and Friday evenings.

Mr. Hoffman keeps himself in top notch physical condition, as he walks from his home to his classes at Boston University and also attends a Y. M. C. A. gymnasium.

Mr. Hoffman sums up the secret of his success by saying: "With my marriage came new ambition, a desire for success that spurred me on as nothing had done before."

What About Mr. Exhibitors' Children?

By Tom Waller

"THE industry is in its infancy"—a phrase that has gotten to be a figure of speech among film men which may be construed to excuse this or refer to the magnanimity of the future—is ripening for something far greater and impressive.

As Sydney Cohen views it, the industry is now passing out of the adolescent stage. Its clay is hardening and it will not be so long before maturity will shapen the mould which it will retain during the best years of its life. When the clay does become unalterable the features will be beautiful and symmetrical or puny and distorted.

This metaphorical language simply introduces a forceful declaration by Cohen that every day counts and that the near future holds for the survival only of the fittest. It is directed particularly to the independent producer, distributor and exhibitor. Because many have and are now enjoying a comfortable profit does not mean that they will continue to do so for all times.

Uphold Scout Tradition

Quite to the contrary. Cohen brands the comparatively latest "innovation" in this industry—the producer-distributor exhibitor—as the factor which, in individual power will spell annihilation for the unsuspecting and the unprepared.

Exhibitors should do the theatre building and not the producers, Cohen maintains, in order to sustain a healthy and normal condition in the industry. The exhibitor should not be also a producer and the producer should not attempt to be a theatre owner because with the combination of both the open judgment and fairness of selection which is brought about only through neutrality is lost, Cohen declares.

With the absence of such neutrality the happy medium vested in the power of selection is lost. Such loss, Cohen points out, will develop into a certain eventuality resultant in the general decline of the motion picture as a means of public entertainment.

"This situation could easily be averted and producers would find it unnecessary to visit Wall Street if each man would stick to his own department and yet co-operate with the other departments of the industry."

Progeny of present theatre owners who decide to follow Dad's footsteps will find that in order to be an exhibitor they will have to be a producer as well. More emphatically. Sydney S. Cohen puts it, the next crop of film men will find such a thing as booking, whether by the block or otherwise, as obsolete as the tintype, unless cognizance is taken of these facts in the form of action.

Established Integrity

For business acumen and an eye to decipher the future trends the motion picture industry will take in its labyrinth course, Sydney S. Cohen's position in this respect is conceded to be unique. During the years he headed and fortified the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America he made certain prophecies. As to their outcome he points to the present date, speaks of yesterday when some called him a "radical" and when he was practically alone in his views, again of today and the fact that he has plenty of company.

Occasionally, Cohen has issued statements. His latest on panicky booking, independent co-operation and giving all meritorious product a fair break, caused Moving Picture World to seek an amplification of some of the channels the M. P. T. O. A. official touched upon, and some constructive comment on things of the moment to the industry. A resume of his suggestions for the future maintenance and prosperity of filmdom is included in a ruled space on this page.

Sydney S. Cohen Says:

It is an abnormal situation which permits a producer and distributor of motion picture films to also operate theatres in competition with his own customers.

Quality pictures with entertainment and box office value, adequately exploited and intelligently merchandised, are the answer to the cross-word puzzle of this Industry.

The season of 1925-1926 will be the most keenly competitive in the history of the Industry along sales lines, as there will be more quality pictures produced and offered than ever before, affording theatre owners who have heretofore been unable to get the pictures produced by the producer-distributor-exhibitor combines, a chance to get pictures of equal or superior merit.

Many a theatre owner is held back in building a new theatre in his town or locality, because of the unfair business methods imposed on the business by the producer-distributor-exhibitor and the compulsory block booking menace.

For the coming season YOU do a little of the talking and "sell" the salesman some of your play dates.

When an independent producer of a high quality picture is unable to get a satisfactory "downtown" run, then substitute for this "downtown" run, "downtown" exploitation through the newspapers, etc., which will be just as helpful and then develop simultaneous runs in zone houses, close to the "downtown" runs with the leading theatres in each zone and arrange a co-operative advertising campaign.

Distributors who are making meritorious quality pictures must not penalize theatre owners by compelling them to take inferior product in order to obtain their good product.

There are more seats today but less theatres.

Theatre owners must improve conditions among themselves before they can control outside evil or destructive influences.

"Downtown" exploitation, properly projected, should solve some of the most serious problems today confronting exhibitors and independent producers, in the opinion of Cohen. Downtown exploitation has some features, he points out, which cause it to excel the benefit derived by some pictures getting downtown runs.

For instance, if a meritorious independent picture which cannot get a Times Square-Broadway zone showing because of the producer-distributor-theatre-owned situation, then apply the downtown exploitation treatment, get the same publicity space in the newspapers, and at this, the crucial time, release it simultaneously to leading theatres in the territorial zones. This gives a number of exhibitors the opportunity of obtaining real first runs, the independent producer a chance for a fair break, and the public a chance to pass upon the merits of the picture at a regular admis-

PRESENTATIONS — PROLOGUES — MUSIC

Introducing a New Service

By

Colby Harriman

EVERY man has a creed, whether he admits it or not. A positive affirmation of what he believes, what he has faith in, based upon "I do," rather than, "Thou shalt not." Platforms, the epitomized consensus of opinion of a mass or party of men, are basically unsound. They suffice for a present status, but, like cameleons, change complexion as the next condition demands. Creeds are different. Perhaps this may be attributed to the fact that idealism enters into the framework, the ideal being welded to the workable idea, resulting in a firmly structured product.

This issue is an introductory one, prefacing the work we will do in the regular weekly editions of this publication. We are sounding a new call, based on our creed, which we believe reflects the serious thoughts of the leading theatre managers and producers interested in this particular form of production work.

We believe in the Prologue and the Presentation as an aid to the feature motion picture, as a means of exploitation, and mark of distinction to the motion picture theatre.

We believe in the ability of such features to attract at the box office, to link themselves with the picture as a "co-earner."

We believe in the advancement of good music in the theatre, in the development of themes, the introduction of valued compositions, enabling the particular theatre to more effectively combat mediocre competition.

We believe in the frank and constant interchange of ideas among producers, that by a dissemination of "all the truth," whether grief or achievement, progression will be more rapid.

We believe in the maintenance of individuality, of giving credit where credit is due, of assisting our co-workers with authoritative information when we possess it, and not fearing to say, "I don't know," and at all times operating on the plane of sincerity, where criticism is constructive, and praise is genuine.

The tocsin has been sounded! The call given!

"Forward, March!"

That is the command to progress, to advance. Never was it more applicable to an organized soldiery than to the producers of today. To march ahead, keeping step with the demands of Public Opinion is a difficult thing to do, but the wise man heeds the signals, and proceeds accordingly.

Prologues! Presentations! Music!

Those are things to reckon with. Their development has been phenomenal, but the opportunity to progress is greater. Without an organization, without an established routine, or set of rules, these added features to the regular picture program have been growing steadily. Now they are trees capable of bearing fruit. The harvest is promising.

We may compare this particular period of prologue and presentation production work to a "commencement day," the day in which are gathered together the strings to many activities, binding them in a single cord, and starting towards Achievement, confident in our ability to attain and hold. Having been tutored in the age-old school kept by Experience, having felt the lash of Mistakes, the pangs of Failure, we stand on the threshold of a new birth, the chains of conceit having been torn from us. We are more capable on this day—the present. More tolerant of the lay mind, more in tune with the artistic scheme of things as reflected in the advanced theatre, and more sensitive to public opinion, which after all, is the only thing we cater to.

To succeed it is necessary to have a complete co-operation. So much time is usually wasted in pursuing the ideal, or the new idea, that we lose our position at the head of the column and become only "luke-warm trailers."

Two men, in fabled lore, started out to find happiness and success. They left very habitable and comfortable surroundings to pursue the intangible. After a long, tedious journey, exhausted to the limit of their endurance, they returned to their own door-step, and to the astonishment of both men, they found the opportunity awaiting them which they had tried so hard to overtake.

It is easy to derive the moral. The quest for that variable stuff with which to weave the fabric of our theatrical dreams often leads us amiss. When we permit an interchange of thought with others engaged in a similar endeavor, we will find our problems reaching a more satisfactory solution. Keeping things religiously to ourselves, jealously guarding our experiences, never benefited anyone. Subject matter is common property, as pigments or colors. It is the treatment that counts, that which bears the distinctive mark of the producer's individuality and personality. That element can never be copied or taken from its owner. Nothing is lost in the exchange of experiences.

Benjamin Franklin wrote:

"If two men each have a dollar and they exchange, each still has a dollar. But if two men each have an idea and they exchange, then each has two ideas."

This is a plea for co-operation to the highest degree. To further this, it will be the policy of this particular page to act as the mirror in which will be reflected the various opinions and production generalities gleaned from among all those who are striving to attain the artistic, and more advanced ideas in proper prologues and presentations.

A Special Adaptation
OSCAR WILDE'S
Short Story Masterpiece
"THE YOUNG KING"
A "Moving Picture World" Presentation
Arranged by Colby Harriman

THE presentation offered herewith is a specially arranged version of Oscar Wilde's story entitled "The Young King." This entrancing narrative has been dramatized to meet the requirements of an effective presentation. Two versions have been arranged, one permitting an elaborate mounting for the de-luxe theatre, and the other to meet the mechanical limitations of the smaller theatre.

The presentation is given a colorful musical background, while the "recitative" is rendered by a player shrouded in a heavy robe and secluded in a shadowy background. The action is pantomimed.

The little feature can be developed and exploited to prove as proportionately popular as "The Miracle," which has served as the pattern for the construction of this presentation.

The settings are simple, but with the scheduled lighting effects will result in a beautiful scene. Five or more people can properly carry the action. The cost of the production is moderate.

Here is novelty, beauty, a charming musical and scenic background, and something that is a "little different."

The Story

The action of the presentation concerns itself with a certain youthful King, a lad of sixteen. It is the night before the day of his coronation, and he is seen, alone, in his beautiful chamber, reclining on the soft cushions of his richly canopied couch. Rare and costly jewels and fabrics fascinate him, and on this night he muses over the gorgeous beauty of his new robe of tissued gold, his ruby-studded crown, and the sceptre of pearls, which are to be given him the next day.

Across the room, through the open window, the towers of the city can be seen in the moonlight, rising out of a treetop bower. Distant music from the court-yard is wafted upwards. A distant bell tolls the hour, then the young King falls asleep. As he sleeps he dreams a dream.

The large bronze doors in the center of his chamber seem to disappear and the young Kng finds himself standing in a dimly lighted attic, where a gaunt weaver and a haggard woman are toiling over a loom upon which is seen the robe of tissued gold. They derisively point their fingers at him, and as he turns away in horror, he finds himself on a section of the deck of a slave ship. A turbaned galley master, lash in hand, is whipping the divers as they disappear and appear from the water, bringing pearls. Finally, one diver appears on deck, and after handing a large pearl to the master, falls exhausted on the deck. The master laughs as he holds the pearl aloft and says that it shall be for the King's sceptre, suddenly turns around and with a sweeping gesture starts to bring his sword down upon the prostrate slave. The King cries in terror. The scene changes, and he dreams that he is on the edge of a large forest near a quarry where the sounds of men picking and digging can be heard. Death and Avarice barter for the lives of the workers in their struggle to find rubies for the King's crown. A Pilgrim appears and tells the King that he will show him the monarch who is causing the tragedies. Holding a mirror before him, the young King sees that he, himself, is the guilty one. He awakes with a start, and finds that morning has come.

Summoning his page, the young King orders his fine robe to be replaced with those worn by a peasant, a flowered wreath to serve as his crown, and a wooden staff to be his sceptre. Clad in the humble clothes he appears at the window to greet the clamorous subjects in the court-yard. When they see him, the cries are hushed. There is a silence, then a groan of disapproval. The young King leaves the window and goes to the large doorway. As they open, the guard endeavors to prevent him from entering, but the young King orders him away. Through the doorway, an altar surmounted with a large crucifix, lighted candles, and backed by a beautiful window, is seen. The Bishop is amazed when he sees the young King in the dress of the peasantry. He remonstrates with him to wear the golden robe and precious jewels, but the King tells him that Sorrow, Pain, Death and Anguish have made them, and sweeping the Bishop aside he proceeds to the altar, where he kneels.

The tumult outside increases. Suddenly, a nobleman and two soldiers rush in with drawn swords threatening to kill the young King for bringing disgrace on the State by appearing in a peasant's costume on his coronation day. They start towards the altar; the King rises. Presently, a strange light breaks through the window and envelops him. The peasant costume becomes a mass of glittering jewels, and from the background, the altar opens, revealing dazzling jewels. The mighty organ mingles with the chimes of the tower, and the nobles and Bishop fall in adoration before the radiant figure of the young King, who slowly ascends and appears over them.

Variations

New Music Notes

JOSEPH CARL BREIL, well known light opera composer, has been selected by the Universal Pictures Corporation to write the film score for their forthcoming production of "The Phantom of the Opera." Mr. Breil has written the musical scores for many of the long-run pictures.

Paintings inspired by songs have been given an impetus by ARTHUR HILL GILBERT, one of the leading western artists, who has painted three American Desert pictures which were inspired by the music and the lyrics of "Three Desert Songs," written by GERTRUDE ROSS. The pictures, which are now on view at the Biltmore Salon, Los Angeles, and are attracting special attention, particularly "Night in the Desert." The three songs, which are published, are: "Sunset in the Desert, "Night in the Desert," and "Dawn in the Desert." Using the paintings as a suggestion for art backgrounds an effective musical number can be arranged for a presentation feature.

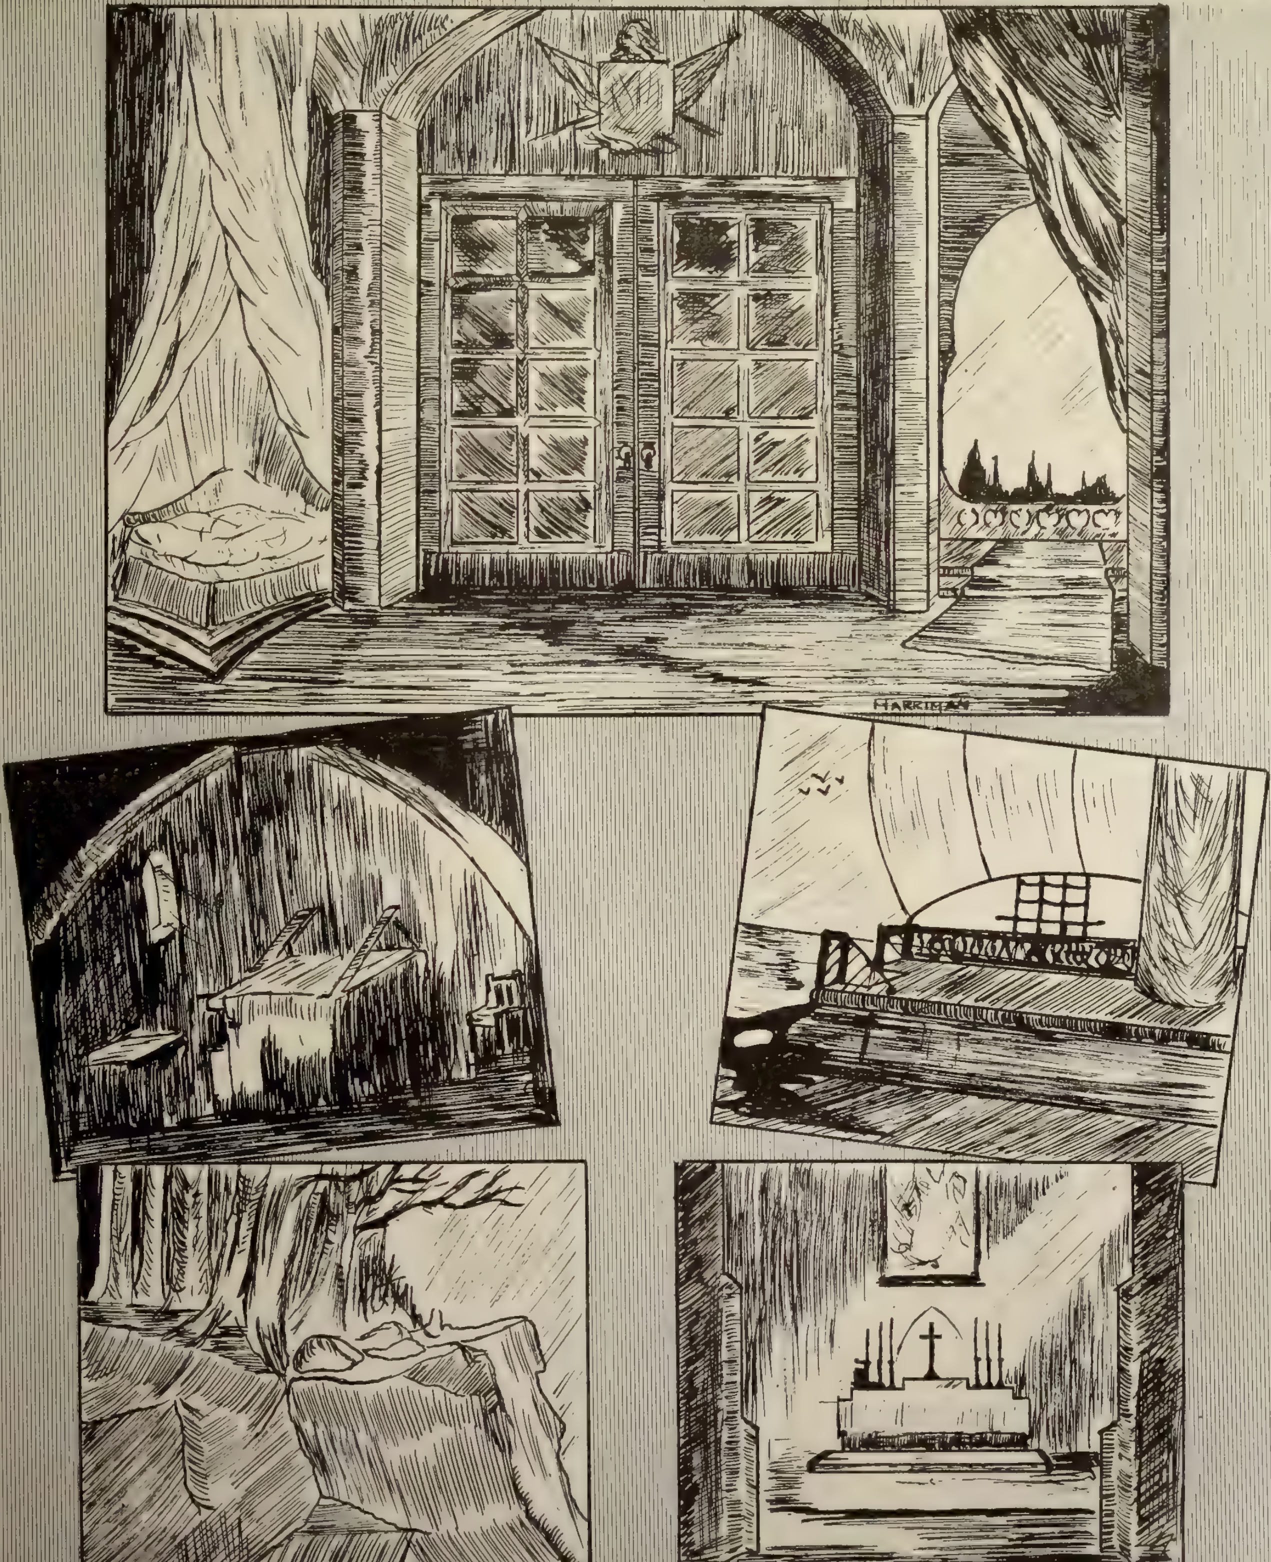
Word has been received from ERNO RAPEE, managing director of the Fox Theatre, Philadelphia, and well known conductor, of his arrival in Budapest, Hungary. Mr. Rapee has had the honor to be invited to conduct the Philharmonic Orchestras in Budapest, Berlin, Vienna, Paris and London on his return route to America.

It is being predicated in mid-west musical circles that sooner or later the Chicago Theatre will become the home of opera in English. While this is a remote possibility, the managing directors of the house, BALABAN and KATZ, have given some thought to the idea of using the house at intervals for the rendition of opera in the vernacular. The various opera selections and adaptations used in this house in the course of the extensive presentation program, have proved tremendously popular.

Sunday morning the Chicago was filled to capacity when La Traviata was given in concert form with a very good cast by the Chicago Theatre Symphony Orchestra. NATHANIAL FINSTON again proved his worth as an opera conductor, as he has as a symphony leader. The principals received hearty commendation for the manner in which they enunciated English, making the text well understandable.

Suggested Settings for this Presentation

Working plans, complete in every detail, are available on the presentation suggested on the opposite page, and illustrated below. Blueprints have been prepared, with a view to aiding showmen who may desire to avail themselves of the Colby Harriman suggestions. Music cue sheets, color diagrams and costume plates are included.



At top—A section of the chamber of the Young King. The large bronze doors in the center are made of scrim on frame work, the doors operating on a track. Left, center—The attic where the weavers labor. A tab drop hung back of the bronze doors at center. Right, center—The deck of the pearl ship (hung back of attic drop). Lower left—The wood on the edge of the cliff (hung back of ship drop). Lower right—The altar of the private chapel. A set piece placed back of drops. This is seen when the large doors at center swing open.

Capitol Theatre

New York City

Special Engagement of Charles Wakefield Cadman

S. L. Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol, is to be commended for the highly artistic manner in which he presents Charles Wakefield Cadman in a cycle of his own compositions. There is continuity of action, which, augmented by a splendid scenic background, sweeps on towards a well conceived climax. Three scenes comprise the presentation.

The first scene depicts a Rocky Mountain pass high-lighted with the early flush of morning. Set rocks and rock rows are placed right and left of the stage and have been painted to give excellent perspective. The back drop is a sky, streaked with cloud formations. In the centre is a set rock which is used to hold the two singers, and back of this can be seen the dim outlines of a canyon. Two singers, Gladys Rice and John Wetzel, clad in roughing clothes, render "At Dawning."

The lighting on the foreground is kept in combinations of green, which merges artistically with the dark amber high-lights on the set rocks right of centre, the rocks on the left contrasting effectively in deep shadows. The colorful part of the lighting scheme is achieved on the back drop. Deep red at the base is tinted into pink, light green and green at overhead. The gray clouds silhouetted against the sky emphasize the lighting scheme. The singers are given a side light from left stage with light purple and pink. When the number has ended the curtains are drawn. To permit the change the Capitol Grand Orchestra render "To a Comedian," orchestrated by Modest Altschuler.

The second scene presents Mr. Cadman seated at a large grand piano. He accompanies Princess Tsianina singing "Nuwana's Love Song" from "Thunderbird Suite," and the popular "Canoe Song." The setting is simple, a black spangle on net drop. The Princess appears in an Indian costume of white, heavily beaded. A white spot is used on the singer, an amber spot being thrown on the piano. Another close-in occurs, during which the distant beating of Indian drums punctuates a subdued characteristic theme.

The third scene is another exterior. A cut wood drop, impressionistic birch tree design is backed by the blue sky and sea drop. A canoe is up stage on the right, and down left is a tepee, in front of which a camp fire burns. Orange amber lights the foreground, and back of the drop, a water ripple plays on deep blue base which is gradually tinted up towards a light blue. Ominous flashes of red are seen at irregular intervals at the top of the back drop, giving the effect of heat lightning. Two dancers, Doris Niles and Frank Moulan, garbed in typical Indian costume, do the spirited "Wolf Dance" from the "Thunderbird Suite." The spirited action of the dance, and the weird haunting music of this composition bring the presentation to excellent climax.

Capitol Ballet Corps

Mlle. Gambarelli, and six members of the corps, present the "Festival Dance" from "Coppelia" by Delibes. A black spangled net drop is used for the setting, and is an ideal background for the dancers. At the opening of the number, the six dancers enter dressed in pink ballet dresses which are a trifle longer than the average costume of this type and after the introduction, Gambarelli enters, dressed in a white ballet costume which is edged with tinsel. The lighting scheme of the presentation consists of green thrown from right and left on the upper half of the back drop, with purple being used to tint the lower half. White flood is thrown on the dancers.

A Neapolitan Impression

A beautiful Italian exterior. The scene represents the veranda of a villa overlooking a distant city situated at the base of two volcanic mountains, with an adjacent harbor. Two columns surmounted by a heavy panelled beam serve as a frame for the scene depicted in the background. A large table is placed right, around which four men are grouped. At left, small table with a chair on either side. Bay trees, vines, and shrubbery are brought into the decorative scheme of the foreground. The back drop is very artistic. The volcanic peaks a little right of centre are silhouetted in a green-blue haze of the sky. At the base can be seen the dim lights in the windows of indistinguishable houses, and left a blue stretch of water, occasionally caught with ripples, merges into a darker blue horizon. A tree in the foreground at extreme right of the drop is also in silhouette. The foreground is lighted with orange amber. Marjorie Harcum and Ave Bombarger, assisted by the Capitol Male Quartette, sing two compositions by O. Langey viz "O Sole Mio" and "Santa Lucia." They are dressed in the conventional Neapolitan costumes, which lend a colorful contrast to the soft, subdued effect of the setting. Particular note is made of the excellent reflection achieved by the artist and given a good lighting treatment in casting the shadows of the mountin in the uneven surface of the water.

The Mark Strand

New York City

"Song and Ballet Pictures"

An interesting and highly colorful group of songs and dances have been arranged by Mr. Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand, and given a setting which is a distinct novelty. A miniature revolving stage set in a drapery combination of black and carrying enough scenic and property investure to create the necessary atmosphere.

The first scene reveals Judson House seated in a gilt, tapestry upholstered chair beside a large gilt table, surmounted with a bronze mantle-ship. He sings a number entitled "Kiss Me Again in My Dreams."

Following this song, the stage revolves, and Emily Day, coloratura soprano, appears, seated on a marble garden bench, renders "Villanelle," by Dell' Acqua. A futuristic tree painted in green and with pink flowers is back of the singer.

The stage revolves again, and a Russian scene, done in the modern Russian art type, is offered. Amund Sjovik, basso, dressed in a Russian costume, red blouse and dark blue boot clothes, sings "Flower of the Snow," by Gruenberg-Brown. He is accompanied by an accordian player. Three people, dressed in native Russian costume are seated before the singer, their backs to the audience. After the number, the group leave the revolving stage and come down front where Mlle. Klemova, M. Bourman and Daks dance to "O! Katharina."

The final revolution of the stage in the action brings six members of the ballet dressed as peasant girls.

The finale is the dance, which is very spirited and elicits much enthusiasm. For the call, the ensemble are seen on the revolving stage and disappear as it turns away and the curtains close-in.

"At the Fireside"

Rivoli Theatre

New York City

"When You and I Were Young, Maggie"

A simple, but effective, setting is used as a background for the Rivoli Quartette, consisting of Mariam Lax, soprano; Beatrice Wightwick, contralto; Adrian da Silva, tenor and August Werner, baritone.

The scene is an interior, composed of drapes. An oval-topped window with leaded outlines and bearing two coat-of-arms, is up centre. This is backed with a deep blue sky drop. Down at right of centre is an old harpsichord, behind which is seating one of the singers, facing the audience. Behind him, to extreme right, stands another member of the quartette. At left is a gilt settee, upon which is seated an old woman, and standing back of her is a character old man. Up stage at extreme left is a fireplace, with heavy vases on the mantle. The singers are dressed in costumes of the early "eighties." The lighting is effective. Candelabra torcheres are placed right and left of the window up stage. Amber spots from the side high-light the various characters, touching edges of the settee, vases on the fireplace and folds of the drapes. A crystal chandelier hangs from center, the top being toned with green and the base tinged with amber.

well done, the setting being subdued and atmospheric to the degree of restfulness.

The setting for a cleverly arranged group of dances by Paul Oscard and LaTorrecilla consists of a transparent drop, in white and blue-gray strips. The white suggesting columns, and the blue sections in between as a high-light. Through the drop can be seen the backing, done in a fantastic flowered design with reds and blues predominating. Two large vases right and left back of the transparency are seen in outline. The crystal chandelier is used again in this number, the base being in rose and the top toned with blue. Amber spots on the dancers.

Musical Selections at Broadway Theatres

(Week Beginning March 8).

CAPITOL THEATRE

THE MARK STRAND THEATRE

Overture, "Sakuntala," by Goldmark, effectively played by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra with Carl Edouarde conducting.

PICCADILLY THEATRE

Prologue Song to "The Isle of Vanishing Men"

This theatre has again demonstrated that an effective setting can be devised for mounting on a small stage.

The scene used for the musical number represents a South Sea island beach. Palm trees, right and left, form an arched border with their interlacing fronds, beyond which can be seen a stretch of sandy beach, with a wide sea. A surf line, painted in art-design does not detract from the scheme of realism suggested in the body of the setting. A yellowish-green moon is at left over the water area, while on the deep blue base of water a ripple effect is used. Pink and ambers tint the foreground.

The song, "Far Across the Desert Sands" by A. W. Finden, is sung by Harold Kravitt, basso. He is dressed in a white blouse, breeches, dark puttees and a tropic helmet. An amber spot is thrown on him from right stage.

At the conclusion of the number, the lights dim, and the screen is used to close-in. The song is picked up again, and as the titles continue the song dies away.

Question Box

Inquiries Answered

A. C. D., Kansas City, Mo.: Kindly give data to test polarity of wires, when a compass or polarity indicator are not available."

A simple method to follow is to run a tap line from one wire into an ordinary glass tumbler partly filled with water. From the other wire run a tap to an incandescent lamp and from the lamp run the wire to the same glass of water. Be careful to keep the ends of the wires separated. The bubbles given off at one tap will show that it is connected to the negative wire. Using the incandescent lamp is important as resistence, avoiding a short circuit.

E. R. L., Boston, Mass.: "What formula would you suggest to mix a fireproofing paint for wood, especially for set framework."

The following formula may be prepared at your local paint shops or through a drug store. It will cost less than fireproofing paint previously mixed and offered for sale—Mix twenty-five parts of barium sulphate (also known as heavy spar or barites) with one part of zinc oxide, one part silicate of soda and twenty parts of water. The mixture makes a white paint which needs to be stirred often to keep the heavier ingredients from settling. Apply the paint with a brush, repeating every fifteen minutes, and in damp weather every half hour, until the coat no longer soaks in rapidly.

S. McG., Philadelphia, Pa.: "Am trying to get a good rain effect to use in a garden set."

A very effective rain effect is accomplished by constructing a trip-box, about six inches square, and as long as required. Bore two or three lines of one-eighth or quarter-inch holes about three inches apart. Fill the box with rice. When the effect is to be used, trip the box, and the rice will fall. The falling rice can be high-lighted with spots placed right and left. The rice takes the light.

Two N. Y. Towns Put Sunday Question to Voters Soon

A spirited contest over the question of permitting Sunday motion pictures in Waterloo, N. Y., is indicated for the annual charter election on March 17, when a proposition will be submitted to the voters authorizing the board of trustees to adopt an ordinance permitting their showing. A resolution adopted by the Waterloo Ministerial Association urges the voters to vote "No" on the proposition. It will not be a one-sided battle, however, as those who favor the proposal are putting forth every effort in its behalf.

The contention is held that Geneva, Seneca Falls and Auburn have legalized Sunday moving pictures and that all three places are drawing good Sunday crowds from Waterloo.

Westfield, N. Y., will hold an election on the same proposition March 17. There has been much agitation on the subject in this town and those who want to see their favorite screen stars on Sunday have been obliged to go to Dunkirk, where there is no restriction. The theatres of the town are putting out propaganda in which work they are being aided by officers of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of New York.

S. R. O. for Milwaukee Convention, Letters Now Indicate

"The National Headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in New York City is literally deluged with mail from every independent element in the business expressing approval of the plan to have the Milwaukee convention a great mobilization point for those opposed to trust processes, and in many instances offering suggestions for forms of affiliation which will bring about a greater degree of mutuality in the business." The official statement released this week also says:

"Definite reports now at hand show that several special cars of Theatre Owners will come from New York City alone, while the Upstate contingent will require a special train.

"President Joseph Seider and other officials of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey arranged at a recent meeting of the State Executive Board, to bring a large Jersey delegation. Pennsylvania will be finely represented, and an unusually large delegation will come from the New England States.

"Michael White, president of the New Hampshire Theatre Owners Organization; Nathan Yamins, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts; E. M. Fay for Rhode Island; Joseph Walsh for Connecticut, and other officers for Maine and Vermont give assurances that New England's place at Milwaukee will be big.

"Frank Durkee of Baltimore and others there are enthusiastic in arranging for a big Maryland contingent; Jake Wells of Richmond, promises real cooperation in the Virginias and so down the Southern line.

"Letters from Arkansas, Nebraska and other states show keen interest there in the convention, while in the Northwest and on the Pacific Coast, arrangements have already been definitely made for large representation and hotel and other reservations secured."

M. P. T. O. K. and M. in Drive for City Associations

"A city association in every city of consequential size in Western Missouri."

That is the slogan of the M. P. T. O. Kansas and Missouri. As a result of this policy, C. E. Cook, business manager, left Monday for St. Joseph, Springfield, Moberly and Joplin, where city organizations will be perfected. At St. Joseph, where the formation of the city unit already is under way, officers will be elected this week, to be followed by the organization of city bodies in the above named cities.

The city units will function individually as chapters of the M. P. T. O. K. and M. According to present plans advertising contracts will be furnished the city bodies by the M. P. T. O. K. and M., in order that revenue may be derived to finance the chapters. Dues to the interstate organization will be paid individually by members of the city units, the same as is done now, but the financial problems of the city organizations will be handled within themselves. As Kansas already is well organized, the plan applies only to Missouri.

"In combating city ordinances and legislation on Sunday closing, billboards and other problems, the exhibitors of respective cities, along with the aid of the M.P.T.O.K. and M., are in better position to fight such battles," said Cook. "Under such a plan we can keep in much closer touch with activities in Western Missouri. The financial phase of such city bodies will be very small. The exhibitors will meet twice a month and thereby keep in much closer touch with the parent organization."

TO DISCUSS UNIFORM CONTRACTS

The uniform contract will be thoroughly discussed and suggestions for its improvement will be made at a meeting of exhibitor heads and film executives in the M. P. T. D. A. headquarters scheduled to take place late this month.

Balaban-Katz Radio Dept.

THE BALABAN AND KATZ circuit recognizes radio as a means of securing much valuable publicity for the attractions put on by the big organization and a new department has been created at the main offices of the company on State street, Chicago, that will be known as the radio department. Charles Raymond has been made director of the air programs.

Balaban and Katz broadcast through four of the principal stations maintained by the newspapers of the city securing an editorial tieup that is hard to beat. At the Chicago theatre Jesse Crawford plays the big organ from 6 to 6:30 each night for the WMAQ station maintained by the Daily News and every Saturday night a special radio review is put on from nine to ten through the same station.

The Sunday morning concerts from 11:45 to 12:45 are sent over the radio waves by station WGN maintained by the Chicago Tribune. The Chicago American broadcasts a midnight show from the McVickers theatre every Wednesday and Friday night through station KYW, while from the Riveria, the big north side house of the circuit station WEBH of the Evening Post takes the air four nights a week with a thirty minute program from that house.

No programs are broadcast at the present from the Tivoli theatre, their big south side house, or from the Roosevelt theatre in the loop. In building up a radio program the orchestra and organ programs of the various houses are used to a great extent as they seem to please the radio public more than any other form of entertainment put on the air.

"Blue" Indictments Go "Blooey" in N. J.; Jury Acquits First of 5 Men

May Quash Charges Against Other Defendants—M. P. T. O. Head Hears from Legislators, Legal Status Unchanged by Verdict

By TOM WALLER

DESPITE the fact that he did not take the stand and presented only two character witnesses, William P. Stein, the first of five Elizabeth exhibitors to be tried on an indictment based on an ancient New Jersey law, was acquitted this week. The Union County Court jury, after deliberating for three hours during which it was twice deadlocked and twice sought the advice of Judge Stern who informed the impaneled men they would be closeted all night unless they arrived at a conclusion, weathered the complex on Puritanism with eleven men, the twelfth having become suddenly afflicted with a serious illness just before the retreat to seclusion. It was said after the verdict had been rendered that four of the eleven had stood fast for conviction.

No dates were set for the trials of the other four defendants, Henry P. Nelson, William O'Day, Raymond Connor and Saritos Concalis. It is confidently expected, however, that the acquittal of a second defendant will result in the dismissal of the remaining indictments.

Although the acquittal of Stein would make it appear that it is not a crime to operate a picture theatre on Sunday in New Jersey, the law on the statute books which describes such an activity as then constituting a "disorderly house" is in force and may be rigidly enforced by the authorities until revised or repealed by the legislature. Thus under its provisions Stein may be immediately re-indicted if he operates on Sunday, despite the present acquittal on the same accusation.

President Joseph Seider of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey announces that he has received letters from several legislators. These, he states, concede the writers' approval of the acquittal. Seider believes they also manifest the attitude of offering the people of the state some relief from this iron-clad law.

Geographical conditions in New Jersey, however, seem to be prohibitive to immediate relief in this respect. Students of the situation are of the opinion that a difficult fight confronts those who would erase the law or lessen to any reasonable extent its present tremenduous power. They cite the twenty-one counties comprising New Jersey; that one senator represents each county. Thus the vote of a representative with a following of 1000 has just as much weight in the say-so of state policy as the man representing a county of 1,000,000 people. The smaller counties, many of which are understood to be influenced by their churches, thus are in the majority.

Judge Stern's charge to the jury in the Stein case was particularly interesting. He pointed out that if the jury was satisfied Stein was conducting his theatre on Sunday and was on the premises the law should be observed by a conviction. The substance of some of the Judge's leading points are:

If these defendants are found by you to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and this law is unpopular, you have at least, to the Court's way of thinking, assisted in bringing to the fore by enforcement an unpopular law which will, and ultimately if it is unpopular and if it is not sanctioned by a majority of the people, lead to its repeal.

But no obnoxious law will be repealed through non-enforcement. Never! Neither will an obnoxious law lose any of its sanctity according to the maxims and principles on which our country is founded by winking at it.

Before the trial, circulars bearing the heading "Oppose the Blue Laws" were said to have been handed many persons entering the court house. In his charge Judge Stern told the jury to ignore these phamplets since the lawyers were not responsible for their distribution.

UNIVERSAL ENTERTAINS

Universal was host at a studio party on March 3 at the Fox studios in New York in honor of Glenn Hunter and Edna Murphy, the leads in "Once a Pedlar," the first Universal feature to be made in the East in eight years. The occasion offered an opportunity for Miss Lily J. Shadur, business manager of the eastern production unit, who recently came from Los Angeles, to become acquainted with "the gang." The party was thoroughly enjoyable, beginning with luncheon at a restaurant and continuing afterwards on the set. About fifty newspaper, fan magazine, trade paper and motion picture people attended. They voted Miss Shadur the perfect combination of cordiality and efficiency.

REAL FIRE EXPLOITS FILM

While the picture, "Through the Flames," was holding the attention of the audience, a real blaze broke out in the basement of the Crystal Theatre in Milwaukee several days ago, sending patrons scampering for the exits and threatening for a few minutes to result in a panic. Cool headed work by a police sergeant, who summoned the fire apparatus and then stood upon a seat directing the exit of the audience, averted what otherwise might have developed into a serious situation.

Silliman-Grauman $650,000 Deal

Acquisition of four neighborhood theatres in Milwaukee and erection of a fifth, in a deal involving $650,000 has been announced by J. H. Silliman and Jack Grauman. The houses acquired include the State, Riviera, Fern and Kosciousko and were bought from the Rice and Cohen interest.

The new house will be a 1,200 seat structure at Teutonia Avenue and Twentieth Street.

Silliman, veteran showman, already controls five other houses in one of which Grauman also is interested. Silliman besides is president of the newly formed Badger Theatres Corporation, a film buying combine. The new houses give the Silliman chain the greatest number of theatres of any circuit in Milwaukee.

Grauman is head of the Celebrated Players' Exchange.

Three Spokane Houses Merge Into Large Corporation

The motion picture interests of the Liberty, Casino and Class A Theatres, Spokane, Wash., have been merged into a $300,000 corporation to be known as the Spokane Theatres, Inc., according to an announcement by Ray Grombacher, president of the Liberty Amusement Company, and R. E. Neal, president and treasurer of Neal & Allender, Inc. Mr. Grombacher will be president and managing director, and Mr. Neal will continue to manage the Casino and Class A theatres.

The present contracts of the three houses include First National, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn, Fox, United Artists and Chadwick pictures.

Mr. Grombacher entered the Spokane theatrical world six years ago when he took over the Liberty. He had previously been in the exchange end of the business in Seattle. Mr. Neal, before buying an interest in the Stillwell Theatres about a year ago, owned and operated the Rex. He sold this and with J. W. Allender bought the Casino and Class A. Mr. Neal and his brother, T. H. Neal, bought out Mr. Allender's interest a few weeks ago.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS DEVELOPS

The council announces that committees dealing with various branches of the work have been formed.

Report Truce Between Badger Corp. and Many Big Wisconsin Exchanges

Wiesner Sees Only Success for New Booking Combine—Paramount Outside—Opponents Say Badger Made Serious Concessions

By JACK M. STENBUCK

"THE Badger Theatres Corporation is here to stay. Its success is assured."

Announcing that Metro-Goldwyn and First National have joined the ranks of exchanges with whom his organization is doing business, Max Wiesner, general manager of Wisconsin's new booking combine, in his first detailed statement since taking office, hurled the above defi at those who have been predicting a rocky road for Badger.

The unexpected turn of events during the last few days which has resulted in Metro and First National coming into the fold, has left Paramount as the only barrier to absolute harmony, according to Wiesner's claims.

Picketing Decision

The Supreme Court of Washington this week reversed a decision of the King County Superior Court, declaring that picketing in front of the John Danz picture theatres in Seattle is illegal, even though carried on under the title of "observing."

"There is no such thing as 'peaceful picketing,'" the court held. Musicians and theatre employes' unions have been waging a long battle to force the Danz interests to sign their working agreements and have picketed the company's theatres for years.

Just what effect the new developments will have on Paramount remains to be seen, since G. A. Smith, branch manager, refused to discuss Badger in any form.

It has been definitely learned, however, that an attempt to bring Paramount and Badger together on a peaceful basis was made several days ago, but resulted unsuccessfully. Wiesner claims that Paramount made the first move towards opening the negotiations, but this is unofficially denied by certain persons close to the exchange.

Wiesner's statement that Badger never intended to demand screening of all releases is regarded with great significance by followers of the situation.

Certain it is that individual members of Badger as well as exchanges, had held the impression that screening would be demanded in all cases. As a matter of fact, it was only after such statements had been made by members themselves that it became apparent that a fight was imminent by exchanges who have been accustomed to selling blocks long before many of the pictures were even in completed form.

Certain exchange men declare Badger abandoned the intention to screen and rate all pictures for the guidance of its members because it feared to fight it out to a showdown.

To this Wiesner replies:

"It never was our intention to screen and rate all pictures. To do so would demand that our committee do nothing else all year round. Further, it is apparent at once to anyone versed in film buying that a picture rated as 'A' in one community, may flop in another and be unworthy of a 'C' rating."

Although the talk still persists in certain quarters that Jack Grauman, of the Celebrated Players office in Milwaukee, is the power behind the throne in the Badger, Wiesner and other officials attack these claims as being inspired for the purpose of discrediting the organization.

"I wish it said without qualification that Grauman is absolutely not connected with Badger in any way and never intends to be," Wiesner declared.

The reports concerning Grauman had arisen mainly because Wiesner for several years had been his right hand man in the Celebrated office and because Grauman is associated with J. H. Sillman, president of Badger, in the conduct of the Juneau Theatre.

"Just because I worked for Grauman, why should that indicate that he is behind the Badger," Wiesner demanded. "Hadn't I previously been connected with First National and Universal? Why wouldn't it be just as fair to suppose that those companies were sponsoring the Badger. It certainly would be no farther from the truth than reports linking Grauman with our operations."

Statements Conflict

The matter of the organization's strength is also giving rise to conflicting statements. While the Badger, through Wiesner, declares that it has already added between 15 and 20 members to the original role of fifty, certain film salesmen returning to Milwaukee report that upstate members are bolting the ranks and are continuing to buy pictures as individuals, instead of making purchases through the Milwaukee headquarters.

The same salesmen express the conviction that the strength of Badger upstate is questionable and declare that, as far as they have been able to learn, the organization has failed to obtain a foothold in any of the important key centers outside of Milwaukee.

In Milwaukee, they concede that Badger has between twenty and twenty-five houses, but point out that there still is no first run downtown house in its ranks, which they term a serious handicap.

To all of which Wiesner replies:

"Our membership has grown at an unexpectedly rapid rate since our organization. Whereas we started with approximately fifty theatres, we now have an additional fifteen or twenty and almost daily are turning down new applicants whom we do not consider fit for membership."

Despite Wiesner's claim of victory in his first skirmish, opponents of the Badger are asserting that the decision of Metro and First National to deal with the booking combine is really a serious defeat for Badger, since they contend that important concessions had to be made by Wiesner before the breakers were removed.

Out of the entire situation has come a maze of conflicting claims from the opposing camps.

While Wiesner contends that he had no difficulty with any of the exchanges with whom he has done business, those on the opposite side of the fence declare they have learned that Badger has been forced to do an about face on the issue of screening releases.

Wiesner, in answer to this claim, declares that it was never the intention of his organization to demand a preview of all pictures by a screening and rating committee, as had been previously announced by certain members and that anyone holding that impression was suffering from a delusion. Instead, he says, it was merely the intention to reserve the right for a screening of so-called specials.

"We have already consummated deals involving thousands of dollars," Wiesner declared in his statement. "So far we have dealt with all the exchanges except Paramount and both sides are expressing entire satisfaction with the results. The exchanges are glad to get our business.

"As for Paramount, I refuse to say that we are at outs. Rather, it is a situation governed by demand. We have had no calls for Paramount product from any members, so how can I say what Paramount's attitude will be.

"Of course, I realize that reports have had it that Paramount is preparing to fight us. In answer, let me say that we are not especially worried. When the time is ripe and when our members can place Paramount, we will attempt to talk business on the same basis as we are doing business with the others.

"We are making no unreasonable demands. We are not attempting to revolutionize the methods of buying. Why, then, should it be necessary for anyone to fight us?

"Talk that the deals so far consummated with other companies are mere dribbles is unfounded. We are operating on an extensive basis and dealing with virtually every exchange. Producers Distributing Corporation, Universal, Pathe, First National, Educational, Metro-Goldwyn and others are all sharing in the business without discrimination."

Another Northwest Booking Combine Will Be Formed, Steffes Announces

200 Exhibitors to Constitute Initial Roster—Expect Others and May Expand—Will Function After Minneapolis Session

TWO hundred exhibitors will form a booking combination during the convention of the Northwest Exhibitors Association in Minneapolis on March 24 and 25, W. A. Steffes, president of the organization, announced today, March 10.

The booking combination, according to Steffes, will be the culmination of a series of conferences in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and will become effective after the convention.

In announcing plans for the future booking of pictures, Steffes charges that the exhibitors were forced to act as a matter of "self-defense." He added that such steps were made necessary by the actions of Finkelstein and Ruben and other large theatre concerns.

"Today it is practically impossible for the suburban or the small town exhibitor to get what he wants in pictures," Steffes said. "He has been forced to take what he could get."

Announcement of the plan came as a sequel to the recent visit of Steffes at Milwaukee. While in the Wisconsin city he studied the exhibitors' booking combination there and will incorporate some of his plans in the northwest organization.

Steffes said he will propose to the convention that the theatre owners put on free shows themselves as competition to the outdoor programs which will be given under the auspices of merchants. He will put this proposal up to the exhibitors' convention.

Returning to the subject of a booking combination, Steffes forecasts that the northwest group of exhibitors will increase from two hundred to four hundred and maybe more after the booking arrangement begins to function. He intimated, too, that the plan may be carried to other sections of the country.

Steffes declined to comment on what distributors the new booking combine would align with but indicated that plans had already been worked out and when the organization starts functioning plenty of pictures will be available.

"I have always advocated centralized distribution of pictures," Steffes continued. "This plan to a measure will be the realization of my hopes. Under existing conditions there has been too much duplication of efforts in the distribution of pictures and the exhibitors have paid much of the overhead.

"The matter has been under discussion for some time and representative exhibitors of the territory have given their unqualified endorsement. I am sure that the association will go on record as favoring immediate organization of the plan."

Coupled with the booking plan Steffes spoke of the "seriousness of the free show evil." He said that the free show situation is alarming and that something definite must be done to stamp it out.

"Six hundred theatres in these three northwest states will close the coming summer unless something is done," Steffes said. "In twelve months' time I predict the problem will become a national one if we do not go after it right here."

Bank Book Saves Money and Life

Tony Bilek, owner of the Radio Theatre in Milwaukee, is alive today because he makes a habit of carrying his bank book in his vest pocket.

Held up by an armed bandit while he was returning to his home with his Saturday night receipts, Bilek, instead of complying with a demand that he "stick 'em up," screamed at the top of his lungs and the result was a bullet directed at him.

The bullet struck the bank book, however, and was deflected. Bilek escaped injury and the bandit fled.

Albany Reports 12 New Incorporations

There was much activity in the way of companies incorporating and entering the motion picture business in New York state during the past week. Twelve companies were chartered by the Secretary of State and these showed a substantial amount of capitalization. The companies, with the names of the directors, and the amount of capitalization, when stated, were as follows:

Tribune Amusement Corporation, $75,000, D. C. Michaels, H. J. Brown, C. McCoy, New York city; Limaer Feature Films, Inc., $100,000, Fred Livermore, G. D. Erskine, Samuel Marks, New York city; Scarab Productions, Incorporated, $10,000, Joseph A. Corr, Bertha D. Vinegrad, Sidney Harris, New York; Gate Cinema Corporation, $20,000, J. G. Cohen, A. Stimmel, S. C. Seltzer, New York; Ellis Properties, $500, D. M. Rosenbaum, L. E. Inkeles, M. Siegel, New York city; Williamsburg Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Max Kipperman, B. Schnitzman, J. Stern, Brooklyn; Brady and Wiman, Inc., J. F. Wharton, O. Gustafsen, M. A. Pollard, New York; Glens Falls Amusement Co., Albany, $1,000, C. H. and M. E. Buckley, L. F. O'Neill, Albany; Gilt Edge Pictures, Inc., Pete Feinberg, I. Stern, S. Eisenberg, New York; Cinema Service Corporation, C. Berg, E. J. Clarke, J. R. Fagan, New York.

ROCHESTER CLUB HEARS KELLY

Millions of people today are being introduced to the influence of good music through the medium of the motion picture theatre of the type of the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, Arthur P. Kelly, director of publicity for that house told more than a hundred women of the Professional Women's club in the Women's City club, recently. "The greatest advances which have been made in the field of motion pictures in the last few years have been in the mode of presentation, in the musical accompaniments which are woven into the picture and in the musical acts which surround the principal film," Kelly said.

Kansas City Women Oppose Political Censorship

The Women's City Club of Kansas City, through its motion picture committee, took a "dig" at reformers who are sponsoring the censorship bill, now in the hands of a committee. At a special meeting the following resolution was adopted.

"Be it resolved that the motion picture committee of the Women's City Club of Kansas City go on record as being opposed to political censorship in the state of Missouri."

Senator A. O. Pickett of Trenton, Mo., who introduced the bill, has succeeded in having it referred to a committee of which he is a member—the committee on criminal jurisprudence. The bill has been in committee more than two weeks now and exhibitors are beginning to display some anxiety as to the forthcoming action on it. Through President R. R. Biechele of the M. P. T. O. Kansas and Missouri, exhibitors of Missouri have been urged to write their respective senators and representatives in the legislature concerning the measure, which is Senate Bill No. 341. A similar urgent appeal is being sent out by President Biechele in conjunction with the standing room bill, No. 50 House Bill, and its sister bill, Senate Bill No. 342.

At the Kansas capitol last week exhibitors won their second victory of the present session of the legislature when a sister bill to the measure on theatre ventilation was killed by a committee in the senate, the house bill having been killed the week before. The bills would have required all theatres to be equipped to supply 30 cubic feet of air per person per minute.

ALBANY THIEF GETS 5 YEARS

Thomas Ross received a sentence of five years at Dannemora Prison, after being convicted of grand larceny in stealing a woman's purse at the Mark Strand, Albany, on November 26. Ross was apprehended through clever work on the part of Herman Vineberg, manager of the theatre.

Al Lichtman Is Suing Koplar in St. Louis for $75,000

WITH the filing of two damage suits involving $75,000 in the St. Louis Circuit Court, March 5, by Al L. Lichtman against Harry B. Koplar, 5596 Pershing avenue, St. Louis, the negotiations under way for the lease of the new St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard at Morgan street, to the Orpheum Amusement Company, were brought into the open.

Lichtman in his petition in one suit alleges that he was employed by Koplar to conduct the negotiations between the Orpheum Amusement Company and the Metropolitan Theatre Corporation, which is building the Grand avenue amusement palace. In this connection he asks that he be paid $50,000 by Koplar and the Metropolitan Theatre Corporation for leasing the new house to the Orpheum circuit. He alleges that the lease has been consummtaed.

In his other suit, directed against Koplar alone, he asks $25,000 for his services in finding a purchaser for Koplar's half interest in the St. Louis Amusement Company, which owns some fourteen neighborhood theatres in St. Louis and University City, Mo.

He avers that he was employed by Koplar on October 15, 1924, to find a buyer for his stock in the St. Louis Amusement Company for $400,000. Later the price for the stock was reduced to $350,000, the petition sets forth, and Lichtman found a buyer at that figure. However, Koplar refused to go through with the sale.

In the suit involving the lease of the St. Louis Theatre to the Orpheum Amusement Company, Lichtman was instructed, his petition indicates, to lease the theatre at an annual rental of $100,000 a year for a period of ten years, plus 50 per cent. of the net profits of the theatre over the period.

Pursuant to his employment he claims that he entered into the negotiations with the Orpheum organization and the lease was entered into between the Metropolitan Theatre Corporation and the Orpheum Amusement Company. For his services Lichtman places a valuation of $50,000 and his suit asks for damages to that amount.

Harry Koplar has declined to comment at length on Lichtman's suits, saying "Anybody can file suits, and until I have had an opportunity of reading the papers in these cases I have nothing to say."

David Sommers, president of the Metropolitan Theatre Corporation and one of the principal owners of the stock of that company, denied that Lichtman had been employed by that company to negotiate the lease with the Orpheum organization. He stated that negotiations were under way to lease the theatre to the Orpheum people and that several conferences had been held, but that final papers had not been signed. He indicated that his company was not interested in Lichtman's suits against Koplar.

Lichtman was out of St. Louis for several days and could not be reached for a statement concerning his side of the controversy.

Orpheum vaudeville is now shown in the Orpheum, Grand Opera House and Rialto theatres in St. Louis. It is understood that when the new St. Louis theatre opens the Rialto on Grand boulevard, south of Olive street, will become a picture house.

Kissinger Bill Meets Defeat; Indiana Minister Led Attack

THE much-discussed "blue Sunday" bill, which has been pending in the Indiana general assembly for the last six or eight weeks, succumbed to a fiery oratorical attack on the floor of the house of representatives Friday and was sent to the legislative graveyard.

With the legislature due to adjourn sine die this week, the passing of the Kissinger bill to make the blue laws bluer means that Indiana motion picture exhibitors will escape any radical legislation for another two years. Censorship bills that were introduced earlier in the session were short-lived and the one remaining "blue Sunday" measure has not yet passed the senate and has no change of getting to the house.

The death of the Kissinger bill came at the close of a lively session which was marked by "testimonials" from practically every member of the house. After much wrangling and after exhausting practically all known rules of procedure the representatives postponed the bill indefinitely. Supporters of the measure failed twice on roll call votes to stem the opposition to the bill.

In a wave of oratory, Representative Willis E. Gill, of Putnam and Owen counties, a minister, led the attack against the bill, asserting that he was opposed to any legislation that sought to compel Sunday observance. He said nowhere in the New Testament was there a single word which compels a person to observe any day. It was his belief that men should be persuaded, not compelled to observe Sunday, he said.

Chicago Ruling on Film Gunplay O.K.

Regulation by Chicago ordinances of the showing of motion pictures featuring murderous gunplay has been upheld in a decision handed down by the Illinois Appellate Court against the Fox Film Corporation.

The decision grows out of litigation over the motion picture entitled "The Deadwood Coach," owned by the film corporation. The company made written application to Chief of Police Collins through the board of censorship for permission to have the picture displayed in Chicago. The board refused to issue the permit, asserting that the promiscuous shooting shown in the picture made it objectionable according to the terms of the ordinance. The Fox company promptly obtained a temporary injunction against the city and appealed the ruling.

Montreal's Unique Announcement of Censor Ruling

An unusual thing was done at Montreal, Quebec, just recently when a well-known current production was screened before a large and representative audience in the ball room of the Mount Royal Hotel for the purpose of making the official announcement that the release which had just been viewed had been condemned by the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors. The special private screening was practically carried out in defiance of the Censor Board which had prohibited its presentation in the Province of Quebec and, incidentally, an appeal was made along patriotic lines for the interest of the people in the matter.

The feature in question was "Chu Chin Chow," which, it was announced by W. E. Lester of the United Amusement, Limited, Montreal, had been passed in all other Canadian provinces and had been generally approved by all theatre patrons, yet it had been banned by the Quebec censors on the ground of "nudity." There was general astonishment among the people in the ball room when the announcement was made after the picture had been shown. These people included socially prominent persons, clergymen of both Protestant and Catholic faiths and business leaders of the city. A special play was made of the fact that the production was of English manufacture.

One of the special speakers was E. J. Adams, representing F. W. Field of Montreal, His Majesty's Senior Trade Commissioner in Canada. Mr. Adams asked for popular and material support for English productions and designated "Chu Chin Chow" as an example of English film artistry. Then came the explosion in the announcement by Lester that the production had been condemned by the Quebec Board.

It was reported, in passing, that the Quebec Board of Censors has passed "The Queen of Sheba," in which Betty Blythe was the star, as in "Chu Chin Chow." It was pointed out that Betty wore far fewer clothes in "Sheba" than in the later picture, yet the censors had banned the picture because of alleged nudity.

"Times Square runs," says Cohen, "don't mean as much as they used to because of so many inferior runs shown in producer-distributor-exhibitor houses, thus denying the public the right to see in this area many fine independent pictures.

"One of the serious disadvantages of producer-distributor-exhibitors making as many as 80 pictures in a season is readily deduced from the reason which I have cited. Through their centrally owned theatres they virtually compel the public to pay and see many inferior and mediocre pictures which are thus unfit to be exhibited in such important territories.

"Never before in the history of the industry have selling campaigns commenced as early as for the ensuing season. The gilt does not bring in the 'gelt,'" Cohen reminds exhibitors in advising them not to be mislead by the "first gilded exploitation book that comes along."

EXCHANGES WOULD DEFRAY 80%

Negotiations are pending between the Theatre Owners' organization and the Film Board of Trade for the expenses of theatre owners coming into Oklahoma City to sit on arbitration cases, the exchanges to pay 80 per cent and the theatre owners 20 per cent.

Freiberg Bill Hearing Frost Because of Clerk's Mistake

WITH Jules H. Michaels, of Buffalo, and Uly S. Hill, of Albany, the only exhibitors present, aside from Senator Leonard Lipowicz, of Buffalo, by reason of the fact that arrangements had been badly jumbled, an unadvertised hearing on the Freiberg bill relating to the admission of unaccompaniel children to motion picture theatres in New York State, attracted but little attention in the legislative excitement which now prevails at the State Capitol in Albany, with adjournment two weeks distant.

When the Assemblyman left for his home in Buffalo last week he instructed his clerk to arrange for a public hearing on the bill for Tuesday afternoon, March 10. The clerk apparently forgot his instructions with the result that the legislative index carried no mention of the hearing.

Meanwhile Assemblyman Freiberg, back in his home city of Buffalo, for the week end, informed Jules Michaels, of that city, a member of the legislative committee of the New York M. P. T. O., that there would be a public hearing on the bill on Tuesday. Accordingly, Michaels wired the state headquarters of the M. P. T. O., in Albany, with the result that twenty-five or more telegrams were sent out on Saturday to as many exhibitors in all sections of the state, requesting their presence at the Capitol on Tuesday afternoon.

When the legislative index appeared on Monday, without any mention of the hearing, inquiry on the part of Uly S. Hill, at the State Capitol, led to an assertion from Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton, chairman of the cities committee, that no hearing had been arranged for, and that none would be held. Some twenty-five or more telegrams were then sent from the State M. P. T. O. headquarters, advising the recipients of the previous wires, that no hearing was scheduled.

On Tuesday morning, Jules Michaels shows up in Albany from Buffalo, gets in touch with Hill, who inquired if he had not received his wire. Michaels replied that he had not, informing Hill that he had word personally from Freiberg that the hearing was to be held. Every effort was made to gather exhibitors but at 1:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon the only ones at the Capitol were Michaels, Hill, Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, and Joseph Braff, of Albany.

From 1:30 until 5 o'clock, Hill and Michaels sat in the Assembly Chamber, listening to the long harangue on this or that bill, Mr. Buettner and Mr. Braff having meanwhile departed.

At 5:30, with the assistance of Assemblyman Freiberg and Senator Lipowicz, the merits of the bill were finally presented to the cities committee, which incidentally has for its chairman Assemblyman Clayton, the introducer of the bill in New York State, which resulted in censorship becoming a law.

Addressing the committee, Michaels, briefly outlined the provisions of the bill, and then read from a number of letters endorsing the measure, and which he left with the committee.

A letter from Mayor Francis X. Schwab, of Buffalo, said: "This amendment expresses exactly the position I have always taken to children attending the motion picture theatres in the afternoon. It has always been my sentiment that the clean, wholesome motion picture entertainments, is more beneficial and far safer for children than running about the streets. I have always found motion picture theatre owners zealous to surround children attending their theatres with every safeguard for their protection and this amendment will afford supervision for the children and shows that the owners have been thinking along these lines. The bill provides for the sort of legislation long desired."

Other letters endorsing the bill were presented by Michaels.

Minnesota Exhibitors Concerned Over Sunday Bill

Minnesota exhibitors are concerned over a Sunday closing bill now pending in the House of Representatives which apparently has the support of many church and reform interests throughout the state.

It is the strongest of its kind ever introduced here and seems to be sponsored largely by Lutheran ministers.

The bill not only provides for the closing of theatres on Sundays but would put a stop to any such work that does not come under the heading of charity or necessity on the Sabbath.

Fox Will Produce Wells' "Marriage"

H. G. WELLS has capitulated to the lure of the screen at last to the extent of granting permission for the filming of one of his famous novels for the first time. It has remained for Fox Film Corporation to win over this irreconcilable among literary giants, and, as a promising consequence, the picturegoers will be given an opportunity to see a photoplay version of "Marriage" which, since the day of its initial publication in 1912, has been one of the most consistent of best sellers throughout the world.

As is well known, Wells is one of the first of modern critics of the marriage institution and this particular novel started most of the present-day discussion, acrimonious and otherwise, of the various phases of matrimony.

According to the announcement production work on this story will be started immediately. One of the foremost screen writers will adapt it and the cast and director will be selected with infinite care.

William Fox says he considers "Marriage" one of the most absorbing of human plots and he plans an elaborate production such as will insure it of being classified as one of the really important specials of the 1925-26 season.

Samuel Goldwyn Finds American Productions Dominating Europe

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, who arrived recently on the S. S. Olympic, after a three-month survey of film conditions in England, France, Germany, Austria and other important centers, finds that American-made pictures and American stars dominate the foreign field.

"I have found," said Mr. Goldwyn, "that with the possible exception of Germany, where American pictures are making steady headway, the situation is such that motion picture patrons are demanding American pictures, knowing them to have cosmopolitan flavor minus provincial ideas.

"The situation for American pictures in Germany is very bright, and it will not be long before they will be showing as many American-made pictures in that country as are now being exhibited in England.

"In every city on the continent that I visited I saw American stars displayed on posters in front of theatres, which also indicates how American poster art is catching on abroad.

"I have also found that Europe is tired of spectacles and the blood-curdling melodramas which have had a vogue in Germany due to the aftermath of the war. The old-fashioned love stories, simple and direct in their appeal to the heart, are catching the public, and producers are being guided accordingly. This is the tendency in every production center that I visited.

"Everyone overseas is predicting that American fashions are becoming so popular, due to their wide dissemination on the screen, that it will not be long before America will be the leading nation for fashion creation in the world.

"As regards my future activities, I expect to launch a larger production schedule than I have attempted as an independent producer. Preparations are now being made for the start of three productions simultaneously, all of which should be released some time in the Fall."

Censorship Totters

That the walls of censorship are tottering is well indicated by what has just happened in Kansas. The Governor of that "Blue" state has just affixed his signature to a "white" bill and now the law in Kansas is that news weeklies need not be subject to censors' shears. This information reached the Hays office in a telegraphic dispatch dated March 11 from R. R. Biechle, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Western Missouri. This repeal is considered by many who know the Kansas situation to predict that within two years the continuance of quality pictures will make censorship an acknowledged drain on the State coffers.

WISCONSIN EXHIBITORS FIGHT STATE-WIDE CENSORSHIP

Preparations to fight the statewide censorship bill, when it comes up for hearing before a committee of the legislature shortly, are being made by the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin.

Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O., a member of the legislature, has been assured that the president and secretary of the Milwaukee motion picture commission will attend the hearing to argue against statewide censorship. They will take the stand, he has been told, that local commissions, serving gratis like the one in Milwaukee, are just as effective as paid commissions, and eliminate the possibilities of graft which paid boards present.

LESSER OPENS GREAT NECK THEATRE

Irving Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures, opened his Great Neck Playhouse Thursday evening, March 5, with rain on the outside and celebrities on the inside.

The elite of Long Island, the county officials of Great and Little Neck, stage and screen stars, wires from every star in the film firmament, all aided in making a splendid theatre opening.

The picture which opened the Playhouse was Norma Talmadge's "The Lady." The theatre has 1,250 seats and is said to cost nearly $450,000. Mr. Lesser's policy is the playing of the finest Broadway productions direct from their New York presentations.

DISCUSS CLEVELAND ZONING

Word comes from Cleveland that owing to dissatisfaction over the present zoning system, the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association and the Film Board of Trade are seriously considering changes, a joint committee now being at work on the matter. Under the arrangement which has been in operation for the past eight months the basis is the geographical location of each house, the capacity thereof, and finally, the admission price. In Cleveland Zone A a theatre is given 21 days' protection over the last play date. The plan embraces three major zones in the city, and 49 minor zones. B. Z. Levine, P. E. Essick, M. B. Horwitz, A. E. Ptak, John Kalafat and Henry H. Lustig are representing the exhibitors.

SAYS SHOWS DELETE CONGREGATION

"The Sunday motion picture show and Sunday labor are the causes of a great many persons staying away from church services, "Dr. James E. Congdon, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Kansas City, told a meeting of the visitation committee, composed of 120 workers of six denominations in Kansas City Sunday.

The workers have spent a week in Kansas City, making a pre-Easter canvass, interviewing persons and asking them why they do not attend church.

Miller Bill Amends N. Y. Law on Film of Hazardous Nature

SPONSORED by Assemblyman C. P. Miller, a bill has just been introduced in the New York State Legislature to amend the general business law as it relates to the regulation of the manufacture, sale and use of film of a nitro-cellulose or similarly hazardous base, and removing existing restrictions on the manufacture, sale and use of film of an acetate of cellulose or similarly non-hazardous base. The bill has been referred to one of the committees. A companion bill will be introduced at once on the Senate side.

The bill starts out by stating that no person or concern in New York state shall project or allow the projection of a film of a nitro-cellulose base in other than a machine of a type that conforms to regulations adopted by "the proper local officials." Continuing the bill provides that this same "proper local official" shall issue a license for the manufacture, sale or use of nitro-cellulose film a fee of five dollars being required annually for such a license. The bill further provides that all manufacture, sale and use of such film shall be recorded, the records being open for inspection, in New York city, the fire commissioner or his duly authorized agent being charged with making such inspection of records.

The bill also goes on and states that film of a nitro-cellulose base shall have the word "nitrate" marked along its edge at intervals not exceeding two feet and that on all film of an acetate of cellulose base, the word "safety" shall appear at such intervals. It is provided that all film manufactured prior to June 30 next, shall be exempt from such requirements.

The bill makes a violation punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment, or both. If the bill passes and is signed it will become effective on June 30 next.

ADMISSION TAX OFF 65 PER CENT

The Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C., has compiled figures which, covering a period of six months, show the results of the exemption from taxation of admissions not exceeding 50 cents. The decrease in collections averages 65 per cent for the whole country, as compared with the same period last year, and varies according to locality from 35 to 75 per cent.

Mr. Schiller declares business is good in the South.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Watching for Chances Got a Big Window For Harry Storin of the Leroy Theatre

THIS week the star boarder is Harry Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., who offers an example of what you can get if you keep your eyes open and your brain awake. He got a window display that sold the house as well as his immediate attractions, and to sell the house does more permanent good than to put over some transient star.

It came about through a campaign launched to sell the idea of better lighting for store windows. The sales manager of the public utilities company erected a shadow box in the window of the electric light company and in this he gave a demonstration of window lighting with floods and spots, changing the merchandise each week to show that all sorts of merchandise could profit by better displays.

Storin Horned In

Storin did not belong to any part of this display. He knew he did not, but he figured that if the lighting company could give a display to the shoe man and the dry goods merchant, he could profit as well as they if he could get in. He argued that it would not hurt to try, so he went after it.

To the sales manager he was only a large consumer of current, but to the higher-ups he was the man who had done them courtesies on various occasions, so he went to a man he felt would be appreciative, and asked for his turn at the window.

And he got it.

An Educational Exhibit

And after he got it, he was not quite certain what he could do with it. He knew that unusual interest was being shown in these displays. He knew if he made an ordinary display he would not get full value from his opportunity. He could get window displays all along the street, any old time. This was something different, and to get full value he had to make a display that would be impressive and interesting.

He didn't sleep very well for a couple of nights, but then he slept better than ever, for he had his plan worked out.

He had his scenic artist make a reproduction of the interior of the Leroy from the front row of seats to the screen on the stage. There was the orchestra rail, an organist at the console, a fully dressed stage and an advertisement on the screen starting off with: "Presenting The Leroy, a perfect production."

A Perfect Copy

The stage setting was a perfect copy of one used in the house and the proscenium was also a reproduction. The backs of the front row of seats was shown in silhouette, with several occupants, and on the seat backs was painted "2700 seats."

To the right was an announcement for his next big attraction and on the left was the original sketch of the dome; not the working plan but the colored detail sketch.

In front of the seats were a row of doilies on each of which rested a prism from the chandelier, a brick, a piece of rolled steel, a miniature switchboard, a small lamp, and other articles, each with an appropriate card, such as "2,000,000 brick," "700 tons of steel," "25,000 lamps" and similar legends.

Hooked the Newspaper

Immediately in front of the box is a stereotype matrix of the opening advertisement of the Leroy. After this page had been cast, the publisher had the mat gilded and presented it to Storin. A card told about this, and the stunt landed an extra story in the newspaper; a better story than the paper would have run on a general display.

The other photographs down front are architects sketches of various details of the theatre.

The whole made a display that really was interesting. People came to a full halt, attracted by the miniature. They were curious about the matrix, and from their attention went to the architectural drawings. The average stay was from two to five minutes, and when you can stop a pedestrian even for two minutes you stand a pretty good chance of selling him something.

And it all came from keeping an eye out for the unexpected chances. That's the moral of this tale.

International Idea Helps E. B. Roberts

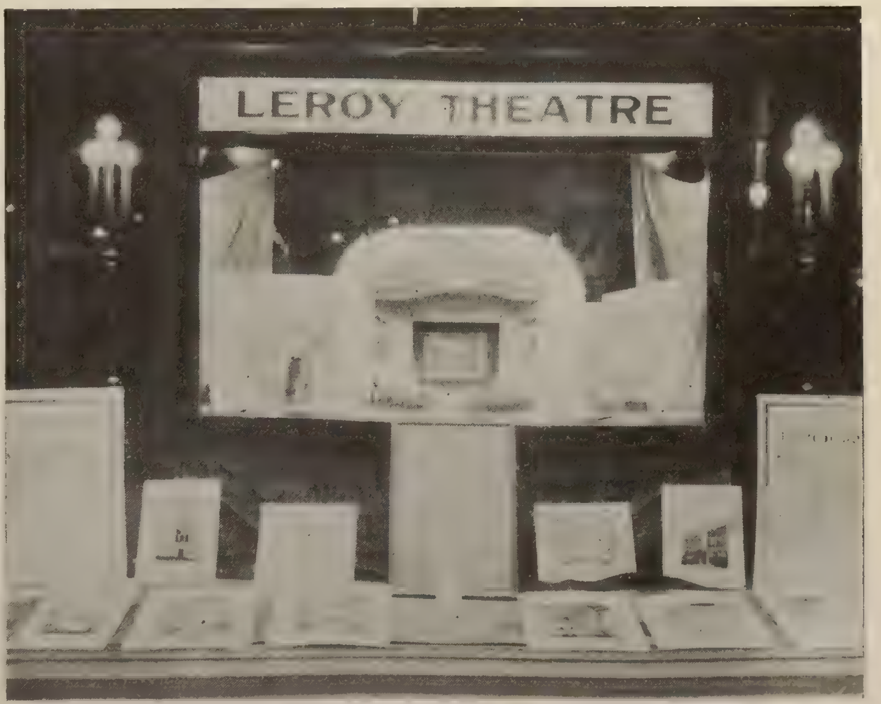
Because E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, is a personal friend of F. Simonds, of the Plaza Hotel, Havana, he got a stunt that had all of Texas interested in the Majestic, and he swung it at very little cost.

Mr. Simonds overheard a party of guests discussing the native state of a well known film star and they finaly agreed that she was from Texas. This gave him the idea of inviting a typical Texas beauty to be the guest of the hotel and to represent her state at the Cuban carnival in Havana. He threw in an invitation to Miss Dorrace Ferguson, daughter of Texas' woman governor, and that got an official proclamation from the executive.

Twenty of the leading social organizations of Austin each named a representative from its ranks, and each of these was given a screen test, the results being thrown upon the screen during the running of The Golden Bed.

Ballots were cast for the various contestants and the winner selected. During the run each of the contestants was given a box for a theatre party, and the President of Cuba, who was in town, also entertained them.

The result was presswork by the column and page and an enormous immediate business for the theatre.



AN EDUCATIONAL DISPLAY ON THE LEROY THEATRE

This electric light company's window was being used to demonstrate to Pawtucket, R. I., the advantages of better window lighting. Harry Storin did not belong in the window, but he got in and made the finest display of them all.

Paramount Named on Victor Record

Plugger songs have been used on records and piano rolls these many years, but Paramount is the first to get credit on a regular "blue seal" release of a phonograph record, as shown in this label.

A Paramount Release

FOR MONS. BEAUCAIRE

The Red Red Rose composed by Fred Rath, of the advertising department and Mel Shauer, of the ad-sales department, serves as a theme for Monsieur Beaucaire. As record 45481 it appears in the March Victor Catalogue with the underline, "Love theme in the motion picture production Monsieur Beaucaire."

It comes too late to do the exhibitor much good. In that aspect it is not interesting, but Rath and Shauer have broken ground and have left a precedent which they and others may avail themselves of in subsequent productions. Other plays have been mentioned on subsidized records, but this is apparently the first instance of use on a regular record.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

TSCHAIKOWSKY'S "1812" Overture, an especially staged ballet number, a duet from "Cavalleria Rusticana," a lyric soprano solo, and a male pianist made up the musical presentations on the program with "A Thief in Paradise." These musical incidents took up 31 minutes, the Topical Review required its accustomed 8 minutes and the feature photoplay unreeler itself for 1 hour and 21 minutes, bringing the whole show up to the even 2 hours.

The "1812" Overture has been done here before and is one of the best received of the standard compositions. The lighting was as follows: foots and borders of large stage in blue, augmented by one blue Mestrum flood and magenta Mestrum flood on the archestra from the dome; 4 color blend arch spots hitting the pleats of the gold draw-curtains which were closed across the production stage. With the final measure of the overture, all lighting dimmed up to a pure white. Eight minutes for this overture.

The ballet presentation was "Czardas," from L. Grossman's Opera "Der Guist des Wojewodin" (The Spirit of the Duke). The locale is Hungarian, the setting representing a gypsy camp. For this a woodland back drop was used, with a set tree left stage and a gypsy tent tripod and fire on the other side. A cloud machine from the side put a cloud effect on the sky of the back drop. The orchestration was made especially for this theatre, as this was the first time it has been put on in Brooklyn. It was danced by premiere danseuse and members of Mark Strand Ballet Corp. Four minutes for this presentation.

A new idea was used in offering the duet "No, Turriddu," from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." Instead of using the orthodox street exterior showing the church, a neutral blue black drop was used, in the centre of which was a huge colored glass church window lighted from behind. Vari-colored lights were used on this window to give the effect of the sun shining through a huge cathedral window. First the orchestra played an interlude from the opera, after which the silver draw-curtains of the production stage were opened, disclosing a soprano and a tenor standing beneath the window. Both were in operatic costume. Open box lamps of blue directed from either side of the stage hit the neutral back drop on either side of the window. Overhead spots of light blue picked out the soloists. The large stage had purple foots and borders and the orchestra was lighted by 2 light blue floods from the dome. This duet required 5 minutes.

Eldora Stanford, lyric soprano, appeared on the apron of the orchestra stage for 2 ballads. The first was "Wake Up," by Phillips, and the second was "Absent," by Metcalfe. The lighting was as follows: Four arch spots of color blend were focused on the silver beaded draw-curtains closed across the small stage; a light pink spot from the dome hit the singer; lights on the large stage were pink foots and borders; 2 medium blue floods from the booth on the musicians. Four minutes for this number.

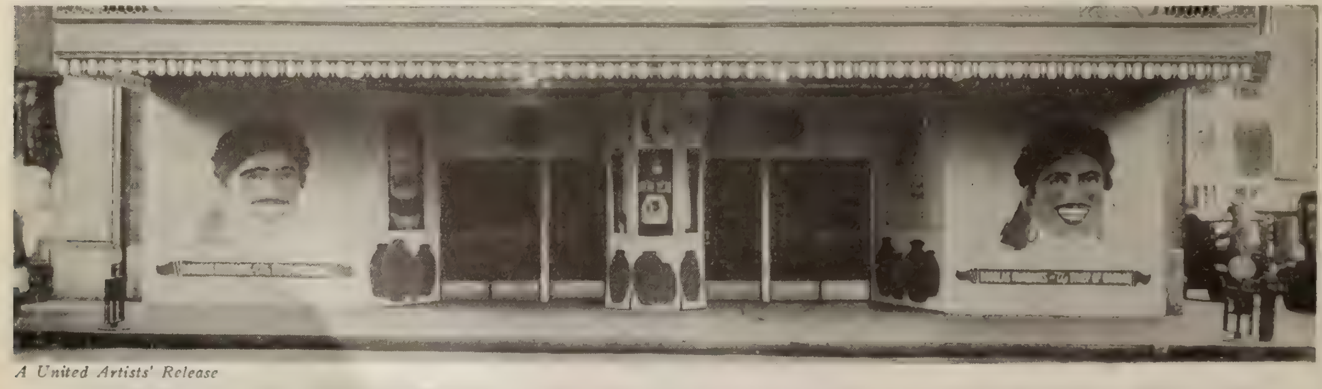
Frank Banta, the well-known recording pianist, appeared for 9 minutes in a piano number on the presentation stage. For a back drop, the big Spanish shawl was used as a transparency, permitting the ballet to take part in one of the piano numbers. At opening Banta played "Preluding on the piano, with apologies to Rachmaninoff." Next came the "Meditation" from "Thais," and as he worked into this, the lights came up behind the Spanish shawl disclosing a staircase, down which came members of the ballet for a dance. They made their exit up the staircase at the finish of the number as the lights on the transparency dimmed out. The third number was a medley of popular musical comedy hits, which Banta has arranged personally. The lights included 2 overhead light amber spots focused on the piano and Banta. The front stage had green foots and borders with spotlights of the same color crossing on the ceiling drapes.

Advertised Bally in the Newspaper

Advertising a ballyhoo, which in itself is an advertisement, is the idea of the Metropolitan Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va. This took the form of a three twos which was headed "Stop! Look! Listen!" and advised the public that "At the corner of High and Walnut streets, today at noon, something unusual is going to occur."

Of course this was sufficient in a place that size to get the crowd. What they saw was two boys in clown dress slapping each other. Every few moments they would stop and hand out heralds and get back to the more important business of explaining "He Who Gets Slapped." They distributed 2,000 heralds, which will give you some idea of the crowd they attracted.

The Metropolitan also used the "memory test" stunt from the press book with good results.



A United Artists' Release

A SIMPLE AND YET VERY EFFECTIVE DISPLAY ON THE THIEF OF BAGDAD FROM LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Made of a single piece of compo board, the design is partly cut out and raised, then coated with plaster and gilded, getting the effect of modeling without the cost of sculpture. Done by the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Knocking Connie Got Her Business

It takes a man like George Schade to work the stunt he pulled on Constance Talmadge for Her Night of Romance. It takes a manager who is enough of a figure in his home town to be important, and Schade is one of the Sandusky leading lights quite apart from his theatrical connection.

So it was that he gave an interview to one of the newspapers in which he handed Connie some dirty knocks. He told how poor a couple of her pictures had been and regretted the passing of a once popular star.

Got Quick Action

It was a morning paper and he was stopped several times on his way downtown to listen to the kick of some Talmadge adherent, but that was nothing to the telephone calls he had to answer in person after he got to the theatre. Along in the afternoon he commenced to get letters and after school the kids came around to defend their favorite. Schade grinned but he stuck to his story and he let the kettle boil for another day before he came out with a second interview.

In this he frankly admitted that he had been wrong in his belief that Connie was through. He told that he had seen the screening of Her Night of Romance and he was very glad to admit that he was dead wrong, since he had the picture booked.

Of course he might have flopped on the idea, but he felt pretty certain that he was working on the right lines and that an attack would do a lot toward arousing the contrariness of the dear public and pave the way to a strong endorsement of one of the best things Connie has done in a long time. Now she is twice as popular as she was before and he got more money than even he thought he could pull in with the stunt.

Changed His Hour

Midnight was His Hour when the Glyn show came to the Queen theatre, Austin, Texas. R. L. Guyer put it on at midnight and played it up strong, with a newly formed University Orchestra to coax the student trade. He used the clock stunt, too, but the verbal and other advertising of the midnight show was responsible for the bulk of his extra business.

Gets Relief Work From Compo Board

Getting relief work with compo board is a trick shown by the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, in its display on The Golden Bed. The cutout was mounted on compo board and where the modeling of the bed shows strongly the lines indicate where the design has been partly cut out and the portions thrust slightly upward. These sections are then coated with plaster of paris, and very little skill is required to get the effect of relief moulding.

Give Modeled Effect

After the plaster dried it was gilded, throwing the colors of the figure and draperies into high relief.

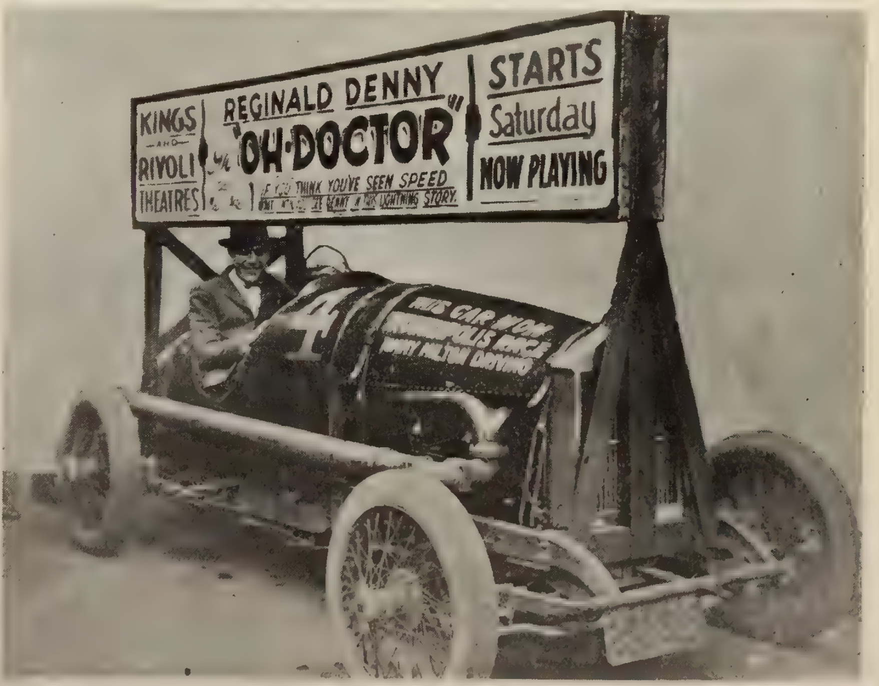
This offers something new in displays, and while it is particularly good on this title, the idea can be adapted for almost any good cutout. A little care in raising the cut portions does the modeling and permits the application of a straight coat, which is more easily applied than where the contours are to be formed with the fast hardening plaster.

Save the Surface

Dave Morrison, of the Rex Theatre, Greely, Col., sends in one of the nicest little self-sellers you can ask for about this time of year. He sold the paint store on a couple of cards for Ramshackle House.

One was a straight window card for the Compson play. The other urged you not to let yours become a ramshackle house for the want of a little paint. Between the two was a miniature house that was very sadly in need of a painting.

All you have to do is talk to the hardware man. He'll be more than glad to co-operate with you. You're doing him a favor.



A Universal Release

USED A RACE WINNER TO SUGGEST THE SPEED OF OH, DOCTOR!

"If you think you've seen speed, wait until you see Denny in this lightning picture," is the way the Universal man hooked the picture to the Kings and Rivoli Theatres, St. Louis. It's not an automobile story, but that doesn't matter. It's fast.

A New Display Idea on The Golden Bed

Most of the managers who have exploited The Golden Bed have used the famous couch which gives the play its title. D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala., got his idea from the candy ball, and made a giant candy cane his signpost.

But he did more than this. He evolved a display box that will show ten stills and repeat, getting the crowd to stick around, which is the best form of appeal.

A Good Display Idea

The photograph is rather dim, but you can see that the box is deep. This houses a bicycle wheel, to the rim of which is attached ten stills. Gearing down, the wheel moves so slowly that each may clearly be seen in its journey past the window. A strong light inside of the box provides the proper illumination. The motor is placed at the bottom of the box.

This can be used for the display of stills or a band can be put on the wheel and lettered, along the lines of a creeper leader, where it is desired to make a talk to the patrons.

The main point is that people not only stop but stand around, and this builds up the crowd. Bring two people to a standstill and you'll have a crowd in no time at all, and this will get the necessary first two as soon as the motor is started. Mr. Faunce has made a real contribution.

Candy Stunts

Copying from the picture, Charles E. Sasseen, of the Criterion Theatre, Enid, Okla., persuaded the leading candy store to make a window display for The Golden Bed. This was the bed itself with canopy and dais all made from real candy. The store further cooperated by supplying candy for patrons at a specified matinee.

An old bed, gilded, was placed in the window of a furniture store. The spread carried a cross-word puzzle and prizes were offered the early solvers. This was a real novelty and can be adapted to any title within reason. The bed shows the design with the definitions on cards on either side.

THE CANDY CANE IS AS GOOD AS A COUCH FOR THE BED

D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., tied in to the candy kid where most others went in for golden beds. But he made the stunt carry weight through the use of a new display idea for the showing of the stills.

Hooked Carnival Through Election

When a midwinter carnival was announced in Augusta, Maine, J. M. Edgar Hart was not taking a nap. Instead he hustled to get in on the stunt through offering the lobby of the Opera House for a polling place, giving one vote with each ticket purchased. Boxes were provided for each of the seven candidates.

On the next move he arranged to have the seven candidates make personal appearances on the stage of the Opera House, two each of the first three nights and the seventh on the fourth night. The first three days one candidate appeared at the first night show and the other at the second. Naturally the adherents of each were out in force at that particular show, the appearances being advertised in the house newspaper space. As this was live local news, the paper also gave considerable mention to these appearances and each morning ran the pictures of the two candidates who were to appear that evening, in addition to giving more than half a column a day to the general story, in which the theatre could not well be left out.

It cost little or nothing, brought large extra sales, and put the Opera House to the front as a place where things of interest happen. It often happens that the best publicity costs the least in money, though not always the least in effort.

Timely

Jack Edwards, a Universal exploiteer, ran across a cartoon showing a man hunched over a radio set and titled "The Hunchback of the Neutrodyne." He put it into the window of a radio shop in Galesburg, Ill., with the suggestion that the hunchback straighten up long enough to go see the real Hunchback at the West Theatre. It worked. Lots of them did.

A LONG-SHOT AND A CLOSE-UP ON THE THIEF OF BAGDAD AT THE QUEEN, HOUSTON

Harry Van Denmark used a compoboard front with Doug scaling the wall with the magic rope on one side and looking up at the princess on the other. On the marquise he used two large head cutouts, but tilting them at different angles made them look like a pair instead of a repeat. Backing this with a big campaign, he put the picture over to second best business.

THIS RURAL GALLEASS FEELS THE EFFECT OF H. FORD

Made by T. E. Jasper, of the Kentucky Theatre, Somerset, Ky., to advertise The Sea Hawk, it is a blend of Michigan and Morocco, but it's a nice piece of enterprise for a town of 8,000 and Mr. Jasper made the extra business he deserved.

Made a New Craft for The Sea Hawk

Somerset, Ky., is only an 8,000 town, but it has a big time manager in T. S. Jasper, Sr., of the Kentucky theatre. He knows that exploitation draws business and he knows that exploitation pays best on the big pictures, so when he had The Sea Hawk he crossed the galleass design with a Ford chassis and evolved something that looks like a submarine chaser at a masquerade party.

He dressed it up with pirate flags and particolored sails and with a driver hidden in the cabin he sent the ship on a cruise all over the surrounding sections. Of course people knew where the driver was, but the effect was odd, and it got attention that helped sell an extra lot of tickets for the Hawk, and people who liked the Hawk came back again sooner than they would have returned on an inferior picture.

That's one of the by-products of good exploitation. If you get them in and please them after they are in, you'll sell them more tickets without having to work so hard.

Put Over Classmates On Four Days' Notice

Because of switched bookings, Jack Rowley, of Laredo, had only four days in which to work on Classmates. He was told on Friday that the picture would open for him Tuesday. It looked as though some tall hustling would be required—so he hustled.

Naturally a slide was the first thought, and that was run at the Friday matinee. Saturday he got the paper and posted that, but meanwhile he had arranged for the cadet corps of a local school to parade on Monday afternoon to tell of the story, selecting the cadets because of their uniforms and because they had a three-piece drum corps.

With boys on either side of the street shooting throwaways, he managed to land most of the town, and the rest read about it in the newspaper. A story was run announcing the parade and another told all about it.

The commandant of Fort McIntosh loaned a bugler and two men for a prologue and Rowley and his leader worked out appropriate music for the stunt. The stage action called for the sounding of reveille while a flag was run up the staff and then, after a musical interlude, the flag was run down again while the national anthem was played and the audience stood at attention. There was nothing very elaborate to the presentation, but it gave atmosphere, and helped to start the picture.

Because of intensive effort, he sold the Barthelmess to better than usual business.

A Sound Effect

Guy Kenimer gave an extra punch to East of Suez with a sound effect. It opens with a scene in the temple in which a huge gong is struck. Kenimer had a metal bar off stage and striking this in time with the pictured action gave a surprisingly good effect. He further helped with a prologue in which a priest knelt before a head of the Buddha while a girl softly sang a Chinese lullaby. The picture was put over before it was shown, and the patrons went out and told others.

A Spare Box Office Makes Show Window

Joseph Hanley, of the Kingsway theatre, Brooklyn, is making regular and effective use of his spare box office as a show window for his midweek attraction.

This box office, which stands upon the side of the lobby usually devoted to exit, is seldom used, so it is possible to make it into a tiny proscenium with lighting effects and a depth of stage not possible in the average shadow box.

A recent display for A Sainted Devil showed a cutout from a one sheet, with a red draping and red lights. It stood out like a beacon and everyone simply had to see it, with a beneficial result at the open window across the lobby when the play came along.

The effect is so good that we believe it would pay to break a hole in the lobby wall where it is practical, to make a special display box where there is no second window.

A Sign of Merit

To give some extra distinction to Peter Pan, Bill McWilliams, of the Madison Theatre, Madison, Wis., put up a storm awning, such as they use for weddings. Now he plans to stretch this across the sidewalk each time it is a really big play. And he will not use it any other time. It's something like Hewitt's trick automobile. If you see it, you go.

By the way, what's become of Joe Hewitt?

Double Use

After dressing his lobby with the Hot Water balloons, Harry Hardy took them down and gave them to youngsters under seven who attended a special matinee. He went away over the usual business.

THE ROYAL VICTORIA LOBBY, VICTORIA, ON THE SEA HAWK

The photograph only imperfectly shows the effect, which is that of the bridge and deck of an old-fashioned ship. It is more elaborate than Cliff Denham's usual displays, and it helped to break the Covered Wagon record at this house.

Back Number Rubes Helped Sell So Big

About the best stunt in the campaign on So Big at Loew's Warfield theatre, San Francisco, was the street work of two girls from a musical attraction, who rubed the streets dressed in the fashions of the early period of the play. They did not work as a team, as shown in the picture, but singly, to cover more ground.

They went into stores, where they made small purchases and handed out heralds while waiting for their change, they had a terrible time finding their way about, and questioned the traffic cops at length and generally they acted in a manner to get the most attention in a given time. Chorus girls were selected because it was felt that they would carry off the stunt with greater assurance than girls not used to public appearances, and the success of the idea demonstrated the correctness of the theory.

Trick Twenty-fours

Trick block letter 24-sheets were used for the boards. The first strip, in the centre, carried only the title. A few days later the top strip was posed reading "Edna Ferber's" while six days before the opening the star's name was added at the bottom and a special three sheet was posted at the side.

There were plenty of hook-ups, particularly with the line of toilet articles carrying Colleen Moore's name.

Got a Double

Merely giving the advertising manager of the local paper 24 pair passes got C. I. Curson a double truck on Abraham Lincoln for the Alhambra Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind.

With the passes as an inducement, the advertising man sold off twelve spaces without particular effort, and gave the house the central columns for the house announcement. Each space carried two names and the merchants were given the passes for the persons whose name appeared in their particular space.

The names were taken from the local directory.

A First National Release

TWO SELINAS RUBED THE SAN FRANCISCO STREETS

They were chorus girls from a local show and they went on shopping tours, passing out heralds to the other interested shoppers, while they never lost a chance to question traffic cops. They worked separately and not as a duo.

Teaser 24-s

As part of an elaborate campaign on Frivolous Sal at the California theatre, Los Angeles, one hundred 24-sheets were posted carrying merely the title. These rode for the week ahead of the opening and then fifty were stripped with additional data. The other fifty were not altered, and these materially aided in getting attention for the others.

It worked two ways. Some people thought that a mistake had been made in not covering the unchanged boards. Others paid attention to the stripped sheets to see what the others meant. In either case they had the title soaked in.

A purely local stunt was an entry in the Pasadena Rose Festival. A girl rode a high school horse, the latter wearing a floral collar and a blanket of roses into which had been worked the title of the play. The entry won first prize in its class, and that made for extra attention.

AN EFFECTIVE TWO-PLANE POSTER ON FRIVOLOUS SAL

This is from the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon, and while it is not stated that the fighting men in the bucket is animated, we gather that this traveled across the face of the banner, since it stands out from the flat surface.

Telephone Stunt Terrified Town

When he got ready to advertise The Tornado at the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, J. M. Edgar Hart put on an extra girl to ring up the telephone subscribers with "The Tornado will reach Augusta Monday. Be prepared." Then she hung up.

Pretty soon the telephone company got Edgar on the wire and begged him to revise the message, for about half of those called got the chief operator and wanted to know how she knew that the tornado was coming and all about it.

The obliging Edgar—not wishing to lose his phone—changed the idea by having the girl add after a moment's pause: "—to see a good movie at the Opera House." That gave the wires a chance to cool down, and even the Portland papers carried mention of the stunt.

Right after the recent solar eclipse Edgar located a local picture of the eclipse. He sold the Kenebeck Journal on a five column cut of the picture, with a seven inch story starting off with the local picture and winding up with the statement that the Pathe News, to be shown at the Opera House, had a very complete showing of the eclipse.

Another recent stunt was a distribution of 100 copies of the Photoplay mazagine to women patrons at a matinee. The copies were old issues supplied gratis by the publishers. It carried an insert naming the chief films underlined. It helped offset The Thief of Bagdad and a local High School show.

It is not only the "reckless" titles that can use wrecked cars. In Pueblo, Col., Damon G. Moore, assistant manager of the Rialto, had a busted car dragged around by the wrecking wagon with the legend "The driver of this care tried to take Forty Winks while driving."

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

The Chicago Draws 140,000 During Its Syncopation Week

The sixth edition of Syncopation Week at the Chicago Theatre brought more than 140,000 patrons to the big house last week and sent that many boosters away for the Balaban & Katz form of entertainment. Many times during the week the announcers in front of the theatre had to tell prospective ticket buyers that no seats were to be had until the next show. The bill was made up of old-time minstrel entertainment, old-time songs and dances and the latest in jazz and syncopation. The same show will be put on at the Tivoli this week and an extra show added to the daily program of that beautiful theatre in an attempt to take care of the crowds that want to see the big bill.

The main offices of Balaban & Katz in the Chicago Theatre Building are being rearranged and several new offices created to take care of the new departments that have been added recently. A department of interior decoration has been added under the management of M. Beverly. The new radio department under the direction of Charles Raymond, a department for the purchasing of general supplies for all the theatres, as well as a construction and maintenance department, are being organized and when all the changes are completed Balaban & Katz will be the last word in theatre efficiency and management.

An attempt to rob Herman Saperstein, manager of the Lexington Theatre at 715 South Crawford avenue, was frustrated when the police came on the attempted hold-up and opening fire wounded one of the robbers and captured Edward Fey, 25 years old and a manual training teacher in the public schools. They charge him with robbery.

Fred Schaefer of the Crystal Theatre, who is making a tour of the world, is in Canada where he postcards his friends the beer is 16 per cent.

The board of directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners met at Ridge Hall, Chicago, on March 4 and passed on many questions of interest.

Maurice Choynski of the Newberry Theatre and William Hirshberg have gone to Hot Springs for a few weeks' vacation.

James Salter is now manager of the Park Theatre at Evanston, Ill.

Work on the S. J. Gregory Company's new theatre at 35th and Archer avenue is progressing rapidly and it is expected to be completed by early fall. This is a 3,000-seat house.

J. R. Moss, former manager of the Logan Square Theatre and last summer at the Orchestra Hall for L. & T., has been made purchasing agent of Lubliner & Trinz.

Simon Simansky, of the Lynch Theatres, Inc., has left for Hot Springs, Ark., for a few weeks' rest.

The Forest Park Amusement Company of Forest Park, Ill., has surrendered its charter and retired from business.

Simon H. Alster, Benjamin Rothbaum and C. R. Golder have organized the Kwality Amusements, Inc., with offices at 29 South LaSalle street and a capital of $20,000 to operate theatres and other amusements.

The Orpheum Theatre Circuit has declared dividends in advance until July of this year, all payable monthly to stockholders of the twentieth of the month preceding the payment of the dividend. The management reports the largest business in the history of the organization.

George Madison, formerly manager of the Kozy Theatre on Clark street, is back in the city after a trip around the circuit. George may get back into the business soon, as the call, he says, is pretty strong.

The first step has been taken in the change of management of the new Diversey Theatre of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer chain. The Diversey Theatre Company has been organized with headquarters at 190 North State by G. Fried, C. Sommer and H. D. Faulkner. The company has a capital stock of 300 shares of no par value and will manage the house for the Orpheum circuit when they take the structure over from builders.

Billy Singer has resigned as house manager of the Orpheum Theatre at Quincy, Ill., and gone to St. Louis to make a new connection.

The Lawyer Theatre has been sold by A. B. Lawyer at Industry, Ill., to W. P. Kniss.

The Liberty Theatre at Waukegan, Ill., has been bought by Stanley O. Blen, formerly of the Rex Theatre, from I. Wiselamn.

Abe Cohen, manager of the Monroe Theatre at 57 West Monroe, was held up last Sunday evening as he was taking the day's receipts to the office of the theatre, two doors away. He was accompanied by the cashier of the house. A couple of detectives pursued the two thieves but they got away with the money despite several shots fired at them.

Guy Wampler could not stay out of the theatre business very long, as he has repurchased the Royal Theatre at Palestine, Ill., from Hawkins and Saulsberry, who recently bought the house from him.

Another new movie theatre will be opened soon at Wheaton, Ill., by Dernbach and Deis, as they have a force of workmen rushing the completion of a 750-seat house for an early spring opening.

His Greatest Thrill (What Was Yours?)

Only Four of Town's Population Failed to Attend

Editor, Exhibitors' News and Views:

The Pillsbury Theatre was opening in the Yosemite National Park. The theatre has 360 people in the town to draw from in winter; during the summer we have a tourist draw that runs into thousands, which accounts for the fact that we put in 366 seats instead of just enough for our regulars.

Well, as I say, we were opening the house last January 5.

Clink went the money into the ticket window. Tramp, tramp went the people through the large studio which is the lobby of the theatre.

Then came the thrill!

I counted up—out of our population of 360 we had 356 attending that opening.

Why not a full 100 per cent?

Well, the telephone operator had to stick by the wires; and the night watchman couldn't get away from his job; one lady was having a baby at the time; that also kept the doctor away.

But we did pretty well, at that!

ARTHUR C. PILLSBURY.

Spends $10,000 on Small Town Theatre

FEW towns with less than 900 population boast of a $10,000 theatre. It was with a firm belief that his community would support the project that C. L. Higginbotham built the Colonial Theatre in Seneca, Mo., the theatre having been completed recently.

The theatre is so constructed that it would do justice to a town five or six times the size of Seneca. The seating capacity, which includes a balcony, is 400—almost half the population of the town. The building is 30 by 100 feet, with a stage 16 by 30 feet. The front of the structure is divided into three equal parts, there being storerooms of 10 by 20 feet dimension on either side of a 10-foot lobby. The projection room is equipped with two Simplex Power-Drive machines.

All woodwork, both in the interior and lobby, is of walnut, the walls being plastered and the ceiling of metal. Thus far the theatre has done a good business, the policy being one show each night.

"Spending $10,000 on a theatre in a town of 900 population looked like a foolish venture to many of my friends," Mr. Higginbotham said, "but in my opinion it is the showman who knows his community that succeeds. People in this community want entertainment and always have wanted it, so I am showing the best possible pictures at 25 cents and I am convinced that my investment will prove a good one."

The building proper is constructed of tile and lockbond, the sides being tile and the front lockbond.

Chicago

A. H. Woods was in the city last week and the theatre brokers report another theatre is being projected for the Tribune Square on Michigan boulevard. This makes about four houses projected for that district during the past two months.

Milo Harte, one of the foremost of motion picture organists, was engaged by Ascher Brothers for their Frolic Theatre for the week beginning March 9. Mr. Harte created world-wide attention during 1922 and 1923 when he toured Europe as a concert organist, appearing at the big European theatres and before the crowned heads of Europe and South America. It was during this European tour that he was given a contract as the feature organist for Newman's Royal Million Dollar Theatre, Kansas City, where he became very popular with his novel interpretations of musical settings with the motion picture. Mr. Harte will appear both afternoon and evening and will give special attention to musical requests.

Henry Goldson, former manager of the Julian Theatre, has purchased half interest in the Kenwood on East 47th street.

The Tivoli put on the fourth anniversary gala week program and reported capacity business.

The film exchanges of Chicago found out last week that the amendment to the city ordinance granting film permits that had been passed by the city council recently put them to more expense than the old ordinance that charged them $3 a reel for censoring original prints and $1 for every reel thereafter. The new ruling they secured last August. The cost was $3 for each original picture and $1 for copies. Under the new bill the old cost was restored and it will cost the exchanges many thousands of dollars for censorship in the future.

The many friends of Jimmy Coston, president of the Chicago Theatres Corporation, hope that he will be able to get back on the job soon. He recently returned to the hospital.

Louis Brecka, owner of the Homan Theatre on the West Side, will rebuild the house at an early date. The theatre was destroyed by fire last month.

The Calo Theatre Building, under lease to the Ascher circuit, has been sold by Bert Schriver to O. C. Kramer for $350,000, subject to a mortgage of $245,000.

The contract for the construction of the new Marks Theatre, office and apartment building, to be erected at Sheridan and Devon avenue, has been let to the Longacre Engineering Company. The house will seat 3,000.

The many friends of John Siepker, well known theatre manager, are extending congratulations to him and his bride, who was Miss Marian Bickelhaupt of St. Louis, Mo. They were married at Miami and are now on their honeymoon through the South.

Arkansas

The Fitten interests have purchased the Pastime Theatre at Malvern, Ark., and have annexed the property to their chain of houses.

E. O. Smith has purchased the Lyric Theatre at Charleston.

W. W. Grist, Jr., has been named manager of the Capitol Theatre at Little Rock.

Minneapolis

Ball room dancing, which has been successfully carried on in conjunction with pictures at the Lyceum, Minneapolis, has spread to Duluth. Clinton & Meyers, operators of the Lyceum in Minneapolis, have installed a ball room in their theatre at Duluth. The Garrick, Finkelstein & Ruben House, also is giving their Duluth patrons dancing in conjunction with pictures.

W. A. Steffes, president of the Northwest exhibitor unit, has announced March 24 and 25 as the dates for the annual exhibitors' convention here. The free show menace will furnish the chief topic of discussion during the convention.

Spirited competition is on in Minneapolis between the Lyceum, Clinton & Meyers house, and State, Finkelstein & Ruben theatre. It is beginning to show in advertising copy. Just recently the "F-R" house advertised a "Take-a-Chance Week." The Lyceum followed the announcement with "You Never Take a Chance at the Lyceum."

Billy B. Watson, one of the Northwest's veteran showmen, has been named manager of the Colonial at Watertown, S. D. This house is owned by W. A. Steffes of Minneapolis. Watson recently managed the Sherman at St. Cloud, Minn.

"Take-a-Chance Week" proved to be a great box office attraction at the State, Minneapolis, last week. The idea and advertising campaign was carried out by Harold Finkelstein of the Finkelstein-Ruben organization. The name of the picture and other entertainment features were withheld in all advertising. Some clever advertising was done.

Harry Wilkenson, well known in Minneapolis picture circles, has become manager of the Strand at Marshalltown, Iowa. The Strand is an A. H. Blank house.

Two theatre fires occurred in Minneapolis last week. An explosion in the booth of Pantages did slight damage, and the Dewey, a Loop landmark, was damaged by a blaze which destroyed an adjoining building.

Four reels of film were burned in a fire in the booth of the Savoy Theatre at New Prague, Minn. The fire started when the machine jammed. No one was injured.

Finkelstein & Ruben are planning to enter Rochester, Minn., with a 2,000-seat house, according to a rumor. Rochester, home of the Mayo Brothers, is considered a good transient show town.

Cincinnati Theatre Territory Notes Many Changes, New Faces

Among the recent activities in the Cincinnati territory are noted the following: L. Peterson has purchased the Savoy Theatre, West Alexandria, from I. A. Myers. The Opera House at Prospect, Ohio, until recently under control of Helen Fleak, has been purchased by Arthur A. Grill, who is taking his first fling at the picture game. McMahon and Todd have opened a new picture house at Willoughby, Ohio, which is known as the McTodd Theatre. The Aris Amusement Company, Mansfield, Ohio, is reported to be considering the erection of a new house in that city, to be ready early in the fall. Tim Roberts, who operates the White Way and Park theatres, is said to be the prime mover in the project. Harry Feigenbaum, Cleveland, is having plans developed for a new theatre to occupy the ground floor of an apartment building; estimated cost, $250,000. A new house to be opened in the downtown district of Akron, Ohio, is under consideration by Knead and Francis. At Lakewood, Ohio, Harry Robbins will erect a theatre and office building, to cost around $250,000.

Recent Ohio incorporations include: The Collins Theatre Company, Toledo, by E. Mandelbaum, Oscar J. Smith and others; the Cherry Hill Amusement Company, Sycamore, by Mildred Kelly, Ida Nason and others; Knickerbocker Amusement Company, Columbus, $100,000, by Max H. Gumble, Edwin F. Hoover, et al.

G. L. Law, manager of the Eastland Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, has begun work on a new combination vaudeville and picture house seating 1,000.

Cleveland, Ohio, is henceforth to be on its good behavior, Safety Director Edwin D. Barry having ruled that all theatres must positively close at midnight. The order affects six all-night picture houses.

Fred E. Waters, for some time manager of the new Falls Theatre, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, has been promoted to director of publicity of the company, which operates a chain of houses in Cleveland and contiguous territory. E. E. Bair, who managed the State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio, has been appointed to succeed Waters.

George M. Fenberg, for many years manager of the Auditorium Theatre, Newark, Ohio, has leased the Mystic Theatre, Utica, Ohio, and will assume charge at once. The house is to be closed at once for renovation and repairs.

The Union Opera House, New Philadelphia, Ohio, one of the oldest theatres in that section of the state, has been sold to Skirboll Brothers of Cleveland. A. A. Bowers retires as manager, but his son, Forney L. Bowers, will remain as resident manager. The new firm will be known as the Union Opera House, Inc. Plans call for extensive alterations this summer.

With the purchase of the old Seasongood homestead, located at the corner of Gilbert avenue and Beecher street, Walnut Hills, one of the suburbs of Cincinnati, it became known that plans are being drawn for a picture theatre for the site.

Norma Talmadge in "The Lady" at the Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, has been so successful that Managing Director I. Libson is holding the picture over a second week.

Montana

Butte has another theatre open on Broadway. The old Liberty has come back in a fresh coat of paint and the interior completely renovated. The doors of this old landmark have been closed for three years, so that its opening is hailed with much pleasure. The Western Amusement Company opened the theatre and placed Mr. Gavin in charge. He needs no introduction to Butte, as he has been associated with W. J. Sullivan in the management of the Rialto for some years, and his appointment to the managerial position assures Butte of a fine class of shows. The programs are to be motion pictures and vaudeville.

Ed Combs has opened a new theatre at Sidney, Montana, under the name of the Isis. This makes two first-class houses for Sidney. Carl Bratten, who has the Princess, has been in Sidney as the only theatre man for a long time. Sidney is enjoying quite a boom these days. It is situated in the heart of the big sugar beet interests and with the $1,500,000 sugar beet factory in Sidney under erection it means prosperity for that section.

Lloyd Burley, at one time a resident of Tacoma, Wash., has arrived in Bainville and opened the theatre under the name of the Bluebird. This was formerly operated by Mr. Baine, sheriff of the town.

Rex Flint, one time manager and owner of the Rex at Terry, has returned to re-enter the theatre game. He has consolidated the Rex with the American Legion Hall and instead of running two houses will confine all his extra time on the new Rex. He reports that he is having record-breaking crowds at every performance.

Sam Dupon is at Glendive, Montana, and has opened the Rex Theatre. He has booked some fine programs for the theatre and is optimistic.

Mary McAllister, who plays the flapper role in "The Boomerang," B. P. Schulberg's picturization of David Belasco's famous stage success.

Pittsburgh

Through the consummation of one of the largest real estate deals ever determined in Greensburg, Pa., M. Manos has come into possession of property upon which he will erect a new 1-884-seat theatre which will house both road shows and photoplays. The entire proposition will approximate $450,000. The property already contains Manos' Strand and Rialto theatres. With the erection of the new theatre, the present Rialto will be eliminated and the Strand with its 1,187 seats will be devoted to photoplays exclusively.

Joseph Price has sold his Atlas Theatre, Perrysville avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh, to F. E. Kane, a newcomer to the theatre business. The new owner plans to shortly remodel and redecorate the house.

M. A. Rosenberg, of the American Theatre, Fifth avenue, uptown Pittsburgh, says he is beating the Lenten slump by putting on a single act every evening in addition to his picture program.

H. A. Seitz, who has been an exhibitor in Freeport, Pa., for twenty years, where he operated the Seitz Theatre, has sold out to John Wiseman, former owner of the Iris at Vandergrift.

After eight months as manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va., H. A. Shaw has tendered his resignation. He has not as yet made known his future plans.

Al Handel of the Orpheum Theatre, McKees Rocks, has just invested in a brand new Nash sedan.

J. Levy will erect a new theatre at Amarillo, Texas.

S. Z. Poli Buys Miami Hotel; Massachusetts Theatre News

Sylvester Z. Poli, head of the noted theatrical circuit that bears his name, has acquired the Savoy Hotel at Miami, Fla. He has become deeply interested in the development of real state in Florida. Mr. Poli's purchase of the Miami hotel is one of the most important ventures he has made outside of his theatrical enterprises. He has bought a lot adjoining the hotel and the structure will be enlarged and converted into a high-class apartment hostelry.

Mrs. Poli, who has been quite ill, now is well on the road to recovery. They are having a most enjoyable sojourn at the Florida resort. The New England theatre owner plays quite as enthusiastically as he works and devotes much of his time to fishing, bathing and golfing.

E. M. Loew, head of the E. M. Loew circuit of theatres, is enjoying a two weeks' sojourn from the problems of booking and other cares of his Boston office.

Now that the Boston City Council has authorized the sale of the Moson street fire headquarters, it will be possible to complete the plans for the erection of a memorial theatre to the late B. F. Keith. This new amusement palace will combine the present Keith's Theatre, Bijou and Boston theatres.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new film theatre and the new Keith house in Boston. The former is due to open during the spring, while the Keith theatre interests look forward to opening their house early in the fall.

Leading theatres in Boston had the following feature pictures the week of March 8: Modern and Beacon, "The Mirage" and "The Man Without a Conscience"; Loew's State, "Cheaper to Marry" and "Contraband"; Boston, "The Price of Pleasure"; Loew's Orpheum, "The Great Divide"; Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, "The Lady"; Fenway, "New Lives for Old"; Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia, "Frivolous Sal."

During the brief earthquake on Saturday night, February 28, the balcony in the Calvin Theatre in Northampton shook slightly, but the audience was not alarmed, according to Manager Fred P. Belmont. In the Academy of Music the patrons were reported as having been made rather nervous. One woman became hysterical during the resultant commotion at the Strand Theatre in Malden. John P. Freeman is manager of the Strand.

Abraham Goodside conducted College Club week at his Capitol Theatre in Springfield the week of March 9. It is an annual event. The theatre management and the College Club of the city co-operate in presenting the program. A percentage of all money received from the sale of tickets by club members is turned over to the scholarship fund. "The Goose Hangs High" and "Learning to Love" comprised the double feature film program. Added attractions included the College Club quartet and a fashion show. Members are given the provilege of selling candy in the lobby and others aid the regular house ushers.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo theatres are planning to observe "Go to the Theatre Week" the last of March when the various houses will co-operate in taking full page ads in the newspapers. The theatres will extend themselves at this time in putting on special programs and will put forth an effort to try and bring back to the theatres those folks who have given up the habit of attending. The houses will put on the biggest features obtainable at this time and both legitimate and motion picture theatres will combine on the proposition. This is the first time that such a stunt has been launched in Buffalo and its results will be watched with interest.

Another new theatre is being planned for North Tonawanda, N. Y. John H. Fennyvessy, manager of the Flash, has announced plans for erecting a new house the site of which has not as yet been selected. It is reported it will be built in the downtown section. Mr. Fennyvessy has long been identified with the theatrical business. With his father and brother he operates four of the largest houses in Rochester and only a few months ago purchased the Flash Theatre in Tonawanda. Webster street business men are behind a plan to erect another theatre on the old Fidelity Trust land in the Lumber Town. This land recently was purchased by a syndicate and the plans have been gone into for the building.

Johnny Osborne, former manager of the Family Theatre in Batavia, has been appointed manager of the Majestic in Hornell, N. Y., the house recently taken over by the Genesee Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., and which formerly was operated by Fred Peters. Fred, by the way, is now enjoying the profits of his decade of operation and appeared on Buffalo streets last week in a Packard Eight sedan. Prices at the Majestic have been changed to 25 and 15 cents.

The Buffalo city council has adopted a resolution authorizing an amendment to the building code to allow a theatre to be built in the rear of a block of stores at 1436 Hertel avenue, the site owned by Sidney Wertheimer and which is only one block from Shea's North Park Theatre. Nearby church interests have opposed the project for some time.

Judge McCarthy to Stay with Hoosick Falls, N. Y., Theatre

Although Lew Fisher took over the New Theatre in Hoosick Falls last week, it doesn't for a minute mean that Judge Charles McCarthy, who has been running the house for several years, is going out of the business. While there was a report that Judge McCarthy was intending to devote his entire time to his legal practice, it developed later that when Mr. Fisher acquired the house it was with the distinct understanding that he took along the Judge with him. So Judge McCarthy will be just as much a fixture as ever, in the capacity of manager, right on hand to welcome the patrons as in the past and to listen to complaints as well as to praise. By acquiring the Hoosick Falls house Mr. Fisher has added another to his string, which includes Ticonderoga, Chatham, Port Henry and Fort Edward. The first thing that Mr. Fisher did was to have the projection machines thoroughly overhauled and new motors installed.

Betty Feuer, 20-year-old manager of the Crescent in Schenectady, has a remarkable memory and one that stands her in good stead in the business. Before assuming her present position she was for years a movie fan and could rattle off the names of hundreds of actors and actresses. And now Miss Betty is remembering footage, and is able to tell the length of hundreds of pictures which she has played.

April 2 and 3 are marked down as red letter days for the Troy Theatre, as on these dates Thornton W. Burgess, of "Bedtime Stories" fame, will make personal appearances, coming to the Mark Strand for April 4. Uly S. Hill, manager of the two houses, is looking for a record-breaking attendance.

Harry Hellman, the placid owner of the Royal Theatre in Albany, at last has the laugh on a film manager and a film salesman. Mr. Hellman returned last week from Lake Placid and has been busy narrating how he literally walked the legs off of Charles Stombaugh, manager of the local Pathe exchange, and Amis Leonard, a salesman. It seems that the two stopped over to see Friend Harry, who almost immediately suggested a hike around the lake, some four miles or so. Setting the pace, Mr. Hellman led the way and before the first mile had been negotiated the two were fairly begging for mercy while the perspiration dripped from their brows.

Say what you want to and think what you will, Charlie Sesonske of the Grand in Johnstown must be sitting pretty this winter when it comes to business. It's the only explanation for the new Cadillac limousine in which Mr. Sesonske sailed into town the other day.

Exhibitors in Utica received a visit this week from Carolyn Goodman, secretary of the Albany Zone committee, who is planning to spend a day or so at frequent intervals in this or that city, calling on the exhibitors and explaining the purposes of the committee. Schenectady received a visit from Miss Goodman earlier in the week.

According to plans under way, John F. Cooney, owner of the Union Square Theatre in Pittsfield, will enlarge his house this coming summer by about 400 seats, making the front entrance face on Union street. The house was built in 1912.

Bill Smalley, you're a wonder! Having organized a five-piece orchestra from musicians around Cooperstown, Mr. Smalley is sending it along with "The Thief of Bagdad" for three days in each of Mr. Smalley's houses, with the exception of the one in Catskill where the opposition has already played the picture. It opened in Walton last week to capacity business, and is now swinging through the circuit, with Hamilton, Sidney and Fort Plain due within the next week or so. Mr. Smalley builds up his business during the Lenten season by playing some of the best pictures he has booked, "New Toys," "The Ragman" and "Idle Tongues" being among those scheduled for early runs. Mr. Smalley was in town during the week. In telling of his experience in the recent earthquake he said that he was sitting in his theatre when it began to weave back and forth. It seems that he had been having some trouble with water in the cellar of the house and his first thought was that it had undermined things and the theatre was about to collapse.

It must have been a great night at the Elks in Schenectady last Saturday, and if you don't believe it, just ask C. V. Fish, owner of the American Theatre there, a chaplain of the lodge and likewise a bowler par excellence. Perhaps the earthquake had something to do with last Saturday night, for the people streamed out of Mr. Fisher's theatre, one woman waiting until she got outside before fainting. Much credit is due Miss Kitty Meinhold, the pianist, who kept banging away on the keys and doing much to reassure the frightened people.

There is one thought uppermost in the minds of exhibitors in this section just now, and that is who will get the State Theatre in Schenectady, which is to be sold under the hammer at once. There are all sorts of rumors, one to the effect that William Shirley is after it, while another credits Paul Alberts of New York, formerly of the Albany Theatre in Schenectady, and in town last week, as a possibility. Mr. Shirley himself was in New York during the week and is said to have been looking for financial backing in order that he might make a bid. Before any bids can be made the prospective bidder will be required to deposit a check for $5,000 as an evidence of good faith.

Newspapermen are becoming managers of picture theatres in this section. The latest is Alex Sayles, former city editor of one of the Albany afternoon papers, who will look after the Clinton Square Theatre in this city, as well as newspaper copy for the Leland. It was only a few months ago that Tony Veiller, one time with a Schenectady paper, was named as manager of the Lincoln in Troy. Jake Golden, former city editor of the Albany morning paper, is now manager of Harmanus-Bleecker Hall.

H. E. Jordan, who sells phonographs in Unadilla, will from now on give residents of that village an eye-full as well as an ear-full, for he has been selected to manage the picture theatre there that has reopened after having been closed for some little time.

Attorney Tom Shean of Massena sort of doubles in his trips to Albany these days. Last week, for instance, Mr. Shean bought several pictures along Film Row and then spent an hour or so in federal court defending a couple of bootleggers.

Nate Robbins of Utica may not have a great amount of competition in the theatrical line, but in another way he has competitors by the millions. Mr. Robbins, who is as proud as a peacock over his young son, declares whenever the opportunity affords that there is never a boy like him, but then some million other fathers are doing the same. Mr. Robbins has already started breaking his son in the business and plans to have him one of the biggest exhibitors when he reaches manhood. Just now the boy is about a year old.

Admission prices at the Empire in Glens Falls, just taken over by C. H. Buckley, have dropped, with 25 cents prevailing each evening and Sundays, and with matinees at 15 and 25 cents. According to Oscar Perrin, manager of the house, it opened big with "Janice Meredith" last week, and there will be no vaudeville if it keeps on going over as it started. The house will run from 1 p. m. to 11 p. m. and it is planned to spend about $20,000 in improvements, including a new marquee and entrance. A Robert Morton organ is being installed, Mr. Perrin and Mr. Buckley being in Glens Falls on Thursday when it arrived.

Although M. E. Silberstein of the Community Theatre in Catskill also owns and runs the daily paper there, Jack Goodwin, manager of the Smalley Theatre in the village, is reaching the people by form letters that are being mailed to thousands. It appears that Mr. Silberstein has rather set his foot down against "readers" in his newspaper from the opposition house. The theatre is charging 10 and 20 cents for week day nights and matinees, with 10 and 25 cents on Saturday nights.

GEORGE HACKATHORNE
One of the leading players in the B. P. Schulberg special, "Capital Punishment."

The hand of welcome was extended last week to "Pop" Filkins, who is now working for the Gilmore interests in Syracuse and who used to be a well known figure along Film Row. Mr. Filkins is looking hale and hearty, and told everyone he was glad to be back even though for but a few hours.

The desires of Mrs. Morris Silverman of the Happy Hour and Pearl theatres in Schenectady carry at least $100 weight in influence. The other night Mr. Silverman was persuaded by his wife to attend a dance. The next day he complained of feeling tired and declared that he would have given $100 not to have gone. Then someone was unkind enough to ask why he went, to which he replied: "To eliminate argument."

William Shirley, manager of Farash Theatres, Inc., had troubles of his own last week, and they weren't contracts either. It all developed when C. H. Brockmyer, the six-foot doorman of the Strand, resigned to accept a position at the Elks Lodge. The theatre had provided Mr. Brockmyer with an expensive suit and naturally Mr. Sherley had to find not only just the right sort of a person for doorman, but also one that would fill the suit.

Smalley's theatres in Fort Plain and Catskill, as well as Cooperstown, are due for redecoration this spring. E. M. Holden of Gilbertsville has notified the exchanges to cancel bookings, as he is planning to close.

Mrs. Robert Fonda can justly lay claim to two titles, that of mother and that of exhibitor. Not only does Mrs. Fonda look after her small child, but she does the buying for the Star in Schenectady and the Grand in Scotia, and in each she excels. Once a week finds Mrs. Fonda along Film Row.

There was a small fire in the booth of the Griswold in Troy last Saturday night, destroying one reel and badly injuring the machine. Projectionist Ross was not injured.

The biggest business of the winter at the American in Schenectady falls to the credit of "The Sea Hawk," which was played for two days instead of the usual one allotted to all pictures at this theatre.

John Wright of Carthage has been named as manager of the Strand Theatre in Harrisville, the only picture house in that village. L. L. Connors of Cambridge was along Film Row during the week. William Smalley and Meyer Schine were in town during the week serving on the Arbitration Board.

Betty Feuer of Schenectady has been on a vacation, spending it in Utica and Herkimer. And what do you suppose she did? Went to the movies, of course, and then after seeing how well one or two pictures went oved in the two towns, scurried right back home and booked them for her theatre.

John Garry, who was manager of the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, has been named manager of the Empire in Glens Falls, which now is under the same ownership as the Albany house.

Improvements still continue at the Leland, including a large mirror on the second floor and electrical fixtures, all tending to make it what C. H. Buckley the other night described as a "real cozy house." Other improvements are slated for the months to come.

Exhibitors throughout this entire section are having their projection machines tuned up, realizing the important part which they play in the success of a theatre. Elmer Crowninshield of Albany is rebuilding two machines for the Orpheum of Amsterdam, while Jimmy Rose is having two machines overhauled for the Columbian in Rensselaer and a like number for Gardner's Hall in Troy.

Connecticut

A theatre is to be erected in Winsted by the Strand Theatre Corporation of Winsted. The corporation has not yet been formed.

The Chamber of Commerce of Hartford in a warning against "wildcat" stock offerings says that "beautiful pictures of tracts bought for moving picture promotion often figure in the prospectuses."

New corporations to engage in the amusement business in Connecticut, authorized during the week ending February 28, amounted to $50,000.

An organ to cost $10,000 is being installed in the Lyceum Theatre in New Britain.

Rhode Island

E. M. Loew recently was host to more than 400 newsboys at his Music Hall Theatre in Pawtucket. Manager Chenoweth welcomed the boys in behalf of Mr. Loew.

The Modern Theatre in Providence is without its orchestra. With the expiration of the contract held by William A. Krauth, conductor, Mangaer Sol Braunig, due to general business conditions, realized it was impossible for him to renew it. There were 19 men in the aggregation. Mr. Krauth formerly was at the Mark-Strand Theatre in New York.

Vaudeville folk who appeared on the "Old Home Week" bill at the E. F. Albee Theatre in Providence have presented Manager Harry W. Crull a silver plaque.

The Franklin Opera House in Nashua, after having been remodeled and renamed the Capitol, has been opened.

Canada

Ernie Moule, owner of the Temple Theatre, leading theatre of Brantford, Ontario, announced a change of policy for his house starting with the week of March 2 which included the raising of prices a general five cents, the inclusion of three acts of vaudeville along with the regular picture program and the adoption of the plan to change bills twice weekly in place of three times each week as before.

"I am giving the people what they want and they are willing to pay a little more for it," declared Mr. Moule, in announcing the widening of the scope of entertainment at the Temple Theatre. General admission for adults at evening performances now is 45 cents and at the matinees it is 25 cents.

Mr. Moule practically controls the amusement situation in Brantford. He is the owner of the Temple Theatre but operates it under the auspices of the Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, presiding as the Brantford managerial representative of that company in his own theatre.

Little or nothing happened in any picture theatre in Eastern Canada during the recent earthquake. Every theatre was packed to the doors with a Saturday night crowd, but only in Montreal was there any report of near panic in the houses. There was some excitement at the System Theatre. Montreal, when somebody yelled "fire," but the turmoil quickly subsided. At the Palace Theatre, Montreal, Manager George Rotsky found that it paid to have all returned soldiers as ushers, because when the crowd showed uneasiness the veterans passed up and down the aisles to assure everybody that there was no danger. At the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, Manager Howard Conover called to the orchestra to carry on. At the Capitol Theatre, Manager Harry Dahn reported that a few people left the boxes, where the trembling was quite noticeable. Manager B. M. Garfield of the new Rialto Theatre stopped a rush for exits and Manager Abbie Wright of the Princess Theatre kept the show moving in order to occupy the minds of the patrons.

The Rialto Theatre, 101st Street and Jasper avenue, Edmonton, Alberta, has been sold by the Canada Life Assurance Company, which was the owner of the building by virtue of mortgage holdings, to the National Home Furnishers, Ltd., for $60,000.

Just Ask Staab

It's a far cry from movies to baby buggies, but ask Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, about either one and there's little he doesn't know that's worth knowing.

Staab demonstrated his knowledge to the satisfaction of all recently when during a debate in the state legislature, of which he is a member, he took the floor and argued in favor of regulating sales of baby carriages.

Staab, as his main point, drove home the argument that he has known of numerous cases where baby carriages have collapsed after being water soaked.

The walking information bureau—that's Staab.

Michigan

Henry S. Koppin has brought his string of neighborhood theatres up to an even score through the purchase a few days ago of the Courtesy Theatre on Dix avenue, Detroit. The house will be closed for redecorations and repairs. Mr. Koppin left after the conclusion of the deal to spend a month's vacation in California.

Thomas O. Grady, chief traffic inspector of the Detroit police department, was kept busy last week answering complaints about a spook car which Manager Walter Shafer of the Fox-Washington Theatre placed on the streets to advertise "The Speed Spook." It appeared to have no driver, but inasmuch as Shafer had received official sanction from the inspector the stunt went on its way unhampered and attracting wide attention.

A. J. Kleist, proprietor of the Oakland Theatre at Pontiac, was surprised by a trio of bandits one night last week and forced into the box office, where the invaders demanded that he open the safe. As he was complying with their orders a workman upstairs accidentally dropped some material on the floor and the bandits made haste to get away. Several thousand dollars in the safe was saved.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Miles are receiving congratulations on the birth of an 8-pound baby daughter. Mr. Miles owns the Regent, Miles, Orpheum and Ferry Field theatres.

Stradley Opens New Theatre on Queen Anne Hill, Seattle

L. R. Stradley, who opened his beautiful new 750-seat Cheerio Theatre on Queen Anne Hill, February 28, had a most auspicious beginning, playing to three capacity houses and receiving many expressions of pleasure and congratulations from the patrons. Mr. Stradley, who has been in the printing and publishing business for twenty-seven years, knows his stuff. He is carrying a small ad in the leading newspapers, along with the first-run showmen. This has already resulted in a number of telephone calls of inquiry and patronage from all over the city, where folks missed the feature picture when it had its downtown first run. Mr. Stradley has issued a series of clever bright colored cards, with snappy messages and verses, which are handed to patrons with a good night message as they leave the theatre. He also has distributed cards, punched to hang up, with his complete program for the coming month. Not only the feature is listed, but the comedy, news reel, scenic, etc.

Manager Robert Bender of the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, this week started the first of his three unit programs. It was composed of "The Mad Whirl," a Harold Lloyd reissue, "Now or Never," and a "Jazz Week Musical Concoction." Considerable success attended the initial triple-header.

Definite date of April 4 has been set for the opening of the new Columbia Theatre, Longview, Wash. It is reported that a party of officials of the Long Bell Lumber Company will come on from Kansas City for the opening and that all boxes and loges are already sold out for the opening performance.

J. C. Thomas, manager of the Burien Theatre, Burien, Wash., has issued a 9x12 card ruled off into twenty-seven squares, each one dated, and listing his feature attraction. As he only operates four nights a week, the dark nights are filled in with pithy sayings, such as: "Stay home and save money for a good laugh Friday"; "Don't make any dates for Saturday, for you must see "Tornado"; "Come down Friday for a sack of groceries from our Country Store."

With the affiliation of George Sauriol of the Orpheum Theatre, Tacoma, with the M. P. T. O., Tacoma becomes 100 per cent united with the exhibitor organization.

Claude S. Jensen has booked the "Midnight Express" for his Liberty and Highway theatres in Portland, also for Astoria, Oregon, from Greater Features, Inc.

Jensen & Von Herberg have booked "Our Gang," Harry Langdon, Spatt, Hal Roach one and two reel, Ben Turpin, Mack Sennett and Arthur Stone comedies from Pathe.

Mike Newman plans to open the Grand Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., about March 10 as a first-run house.

It is reported that Pantages in Seattle contemplates closing for a week or ten days, during which time it will be completely renovated and redecorated. E. C. Bostick is manager.

Following the termination of the present contract of the musical show at the Palace Hip, Seattle, which will end in about a month's time, that house will once more return to a policy of feature pictures and Ackerman & Harris vaudeville. Starting March 7, the picture program will go into effect with "The Battling Fool" as the opener, in addition to the musical show. The full change back to vaudeville will be about April 4. This makes a new outlet for first-run pictures in Seattle.

San Francisco

The Hawaiian Amusement Company, Ltd., has been organized to take over the interests of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Ltd., and the New Princess Theatre Company, both of Honolulu. The officers of the new concern are Joel C. Cohen, president; Louis R. Greenfield, vice-president; A. S. Davis, vice-president; W. H. McInerny, vice-president; A. Wylie Mather, secretary, and E. I. Parker, treasurer. The directors consist of the officers, with the addition of A. L. Castle, A. N. Campbell, C. S. Davis, G. G. Fuller, J .H. Worrall and Fred Hons. President Joel C. Cohen returned to San Francisco recently with Louis R. Greenfield, who spent a month in the Islands in connection with the consolidation, and offices have been opened at 109 Golden Gate avenue, where the Louis R. Greenfield Theatres maintain headquarters.

J. A. Partington, general manager of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., San Francisco, is making a trip to Chicago and New York to see what is being done there in the line of stage presentation. An automatic stage of his invention is being presented at the Granada Theatre and is proving of great interest.

Among the exhibitors who have visited San Francisco's Film Row of late have been E. W. Fischer, of the Rialto Theatre, Oakdale; Paul R. Sprague, of the Quincy Theatre, Quincy; Charles Fraler, of the Grand Theatre, Tracy; J. L. Seiter, of the Lyric Theatre, Manteca; W. H. Laughead, of the Westwood Theatre, Westwood; H. Heber, of the Majestic and Sequoia theatres, Sacramento; G. H. Wilson, of the Liberty Theatre, St. Helena, and Robert Hazel, of the T. & D. Jr. Theatre at Tulare.

A new theatre will be opened shortly at Fortuna, Cal., by Charles Westcott. The house will seat about 500.

LILLIAN RICH
Featured in Paramount pictures

Dr. J. A. McNear, Jr., is redecorating the Mystic Theatre at Petaluma, Cal., and is installing 585 new seats. A marquee is also being added.

New seats are being installed in the Starland Theatre at Sebastopol, Cal., by Albert Huntley, and the installation of a hand-played pipe organ is under consideration.

Byron Byard, of the Hart Theatre, Arcata, Cal., found use for a portable generating set during the storm which recently swept the north coast. He had this at the theatre in readiness to transport it to a nearby town which is without electric current, when power in Arcata was cut off. It required but a few minutes' work to put the miniature plant in operation and the show continued while the rest of the town was in darkness.

The Argonaut Theatres, Inc., has been organized at Sacramento, Cal., by union labor interests and the erection of a semi-community theatre is planned. A. C. Sullivan is president of the theatrical concern and J. L. R. Marsh is vice-president.

William Stierley, who recently disposed of the Opal Theatre, San Francisco, to James W. Barlow of Stockton, plans to make an extended eastern trip before engaging in business again.

J. M. McClure, a former resident of Greater San Francisco but who has been away for several years, has returned and has been made manager of the New Franklin Theatre at Oakland, recently rebuilt and reopened by Ackerman & Harris. Since leaving this city Mr. McClure has had charge of theatres in St. Paul, Minneapolis and in Winnipeg, Canada.

Maine

Hollis H. Caswell, projectionist of the Bungalow Playhouse in Harrison, knows how to help his boss get the good-will of the community. Mr. Caswell gave his services free of charge at a recent benefit show.

During the earthquake Saturday night, February 28, the shock in Augusta was most noticeable in the Colonial Theatre, where the projection machines were rocked.

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

(Includes Selznick)

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Very good picture. Pleased all. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Rural and town class, town of 1,400. Admission 10-20. A. Keuss, Community Theatre (500 seats), New Athens, Illinois.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. Very good comedy drama; pleased all who saw it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Rural and town class, town of 1,400. Admission 10-20. A. Keuss, Community Theatre (500 seats), New Athens, Illinois.

YANKEE CONSUL. (6,148 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This is quite a disappointment after the success of "Going Up." It is a good picture but the previous picture was exceptional and you can't satisfy people with ordinary pictures following the knockouts. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeals to younger people. Intelligent Americans, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

F. B. O.

BROKEN LAWS. Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. This is a good picture, with a splendid moral. The star, Mrs. Wallace Reid, did capable work and this time it was her work that put the picture over and not a sensational story reflecting the name of the star's husband. "Broken Laws" is a picture everyone should see, young and old, married or single. High class, city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Not so good as some of his but will please the majority. Silver King is a star himself. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 500. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

FIGHTING SAP. (5,138 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A good western which drew a bigger house than the Paramount special, "Peter Pan," at a much lower rental, and judging by the comments it pleased more. So there you are. Small towns are tough propositions. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MAILMAN. (7,150 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. Very good picture; scenes on sea are great. Pleased one hundred per cent. Admission 10-25. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Rural and town class, town of 1,400. Admission 10-20. A. Keuss, Community Theatre (500 seats), New Athens, Illinois.

NEGLECTED WOMEN. Star, Seena Owen. This picture was made in England with several American stars and proved to be a fair program picture; nothing else. Better look before you book. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

NO GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Here is a coming western star. This one pleased the western fans, and if he makes as many friends with his future pictures as he did with this one he will prove a sure money getter. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

NORTH OF NEVADA. (5,000 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A good program offering. Plenty of action. The horse does splendid work. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

THERE'S MILLIONS IN IT. (6 reels). Star, Catharine Calvert. This one is a lemon and very bitter at that. Better pay for it and not run it. Print in good shape. Special, no. No audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. Old, but a picture that all classes enthuse over. I consider it an ideal picture for a Saturday audience. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

TRIGGER FINGERS. (4,775 feet). Star, Bob Custer. The usual blood and thunder western and will go over where they like them. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

TRIGGER FINGERS. (4,775 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Bob is putting out a picture with lots of action, good story, fine directing, a pretty good picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Farm class, town of 100. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

YOUTH AND ADVENTURE. Star, Richard Talmadge. This is a pip. Keep him in stories like this and he will sure bring home the bacon and you will be able to hear the coin in the old box office. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety-eight per cent. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

First National

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Oh, boy, what a picture this is! We had the biggest opening on this picture of any picture we have ever played except "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." We opened at 10 a. m. and by 1 p. m. we had them standing, and for the first four days stood them all day long. Everything about "Classmates" is tip top. The story, the scenery, the acting and the star were all highly enjoyed by our patrons. We had a record week. Don't miss this bet. High class, city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

GALLOPING FISH. (6 reels). Star cast. This picture drew well at the box office and kept the house in an uproar throughout its length. They said they liked it as they went out and made it a point to say so afterwards. Should have shown it two nights. Audience appeal excellent. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (300 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

MINNIE. Star, Matt Moore. I certainly advise all exhibitors to lay off this one. How this picture got by the censors is more than we can figure out. It is no good, and the moral is very bad. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara La Marr. Flopped on this one. Can't understand it as I personally thought it very good. Barbara is popular but just couldn't get them out. Acting good. Must have been that I didn't raise price. General class, town of 4,000. Admission 15-25. R. L. Newell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star, Bessie Love. Good picture. Some liked it as well as "Covered Wagon," but isn't worth anywhere near the money they ask. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. General class, town of 3,700. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. This First National production is a knockout. We had a good week's business and the picture was highly satisfactory. Mr. Ince's efforts in presenting a moral seems to me to have been cleverly brought out and the picture carried a terrific wallop. We recommend "Those Who Dance" for any kind of theatre, anywhere. High class, city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

THUNDERGATE. (6,505 feet). Star, Owen Moore. This is a very good picture. Some of our patrons said it was best we have had in long while. It is different from ordinary run and therefore interesting. Good audience appeal. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

TWENTY-ONE. (6,560 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Had very favorable comments on this picture, and while it only did an average business it was received with very complimentary comments throughout the circuit. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star cast. Just average program production. Not awful poor but nothing extra. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Rural and small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,074 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. The best Talmadge I've seen for some time. It didn't run away with the house record but satisfactory. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Rural and small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,074 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A splendid production that, in the hands of a lesser director than Frank Lloyd, would have missed the mark. Norma does the best acting of her career in this one and the audience was loud in its praise. Splendid photography and excellent film made this 1923 release as good as any more recent photoplay and the cast consisted of players who really lived their parts. Should be a good drawing card in any house. Tone good. Audience appeal 90 per cent. Suitable for Sunday or as special. Draw general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WOMAN ON THE JURY. (7,231 feet). Star cast. This is a powerful drama for an audience that likes fine acting, and the all-star cast doesn't mean maybe; it sure is a great cast and a great picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

Fox

CUPID'S FIREMAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Charles Jones. Very good program picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

VAN.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Exceptionally good picture that went over to a record breaking business. Tone okay. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

LOVE LETTERS. (4,749 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A little below her average in this one. The star acted her part. But don't see why they don't put her in a better and larger picture. Good tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 500. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,272 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Picture well liked by everyone. O'Brien is getting popular. Dorothy Mackaill is an excellent actress but is not popular for some reason. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. Special, yes. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

OH YOU TONY. (6,302 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good, as usual. Tone okay. Special, no. Audience appeal good. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Didn't do much business but the picture was well received by those who saw it. Comments were good. Tone slightly off color. Fair audience appeal. Special, no. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

PLUNDERER. (5,812 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Good mining story, with action throughout. Seemed to please and hold interest. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

SOUTH SEA LOVE. (4,168 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Went over fairly well and while not a big picture pleased the majority. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A sure-fire box office bet. Outdrew everything else in town three to one. The dog is great in this and Mix manages to keep up his fast pace. Where they like Mix this goes immense. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special for us. Big audience appeal. General class, city of 16,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

THAT FRENCH LADY. (5,426 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. This is a crackerjack for program class. Beat some specials at the box office. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Rural and small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TOWN THAT FORGOT GOD. All star cast. I do not see how this one was overlooked in selecting the screen's best last year. We never had a picture here that took such a hold on the audience; it was the talk of the town for days. The work of the little boy in this picture is, to our mind, unrivalled; even little Coogan does not reach it. Yes, it is sad—very sad—but its happy ending will help that where anyone cannot stand a few tears of human sympathy. Proper music is essential to the proper presentation of this picture. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Public School Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

WESTERN LUCK. (5,020 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good Jones picture. Jones does not draw for us lately, and we are sorry of this fact because he is a better actor than is found in many westerns. Good tone. Appeal eighty per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw rural and town of 1,078. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

WHEN ODDS ARE EVEN. (4,284 feet). Star, William Russell. A good little program picture that will please. Photography and water scenes fine. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 500. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

WHEN ODDS ARE EVEN. (4,284 feet). Star, William Russell. Nothing in this picture to recommend just one of those blanks that we run into occasionally. Weak story, poor acting by supporting cast. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

Appreciation!

" 'Gosh a' mighty!' what a ripping good letter brother Davis contributed in regard to my inquiry on holding pictures for the extra day." (That was the article, "How One Small Town Does It," which L. O. Davis sent when friend Prescott asked how best to get good from the word-of-mouth advertising that a good picture brought.)

"There's real coin in his experience, which would cost many of us good coin to learn. Thanks to him it's a service that can be measured by real money.

"His straight-to-the-point letter brought out many fine points to be considered, and I know his views came from on the 'inside' —and that is what counts.

"Many thanks to you, brother Davis."—E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine.

Buck Jones. A very good picture that will please everyone a little different from most of Jones' pictures. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Excellent audience appeal. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Fair program picture. Not received favorably by patrons. Business average for Jones. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

WOLF MAN. (5,145 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Poorest picture I ever ran of this star. The ending was very sudden and they asked me if the picture was all there. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal fifty per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 500. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

Metro-Goldwyn

HELD TO ANSWER. (5,601 feet). Star, House Peters. Nothing weak or wrong with this one. An exceptionally fine picture, with excellent photography and well acted and directed. You can be safe in playing to any audience. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Family and transsient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

HIS HOUR (6,300 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. Despite many adverse reports, I think this is a very good picture for a small town. It is clean all the way through and does not have a bit of suggestiveness in it. Miss Pringle fine in title role. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre, Jewett City, Connecticut.

RED LILY. (6,975 feet). Star, Ramon Navarro. Absolutely nothing to it. If you have it bought don't make the mistake I did and play it two nights. You might get by one night but not two. Splendid cast but no story. No tone. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, none. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

REVELATION. (8,732 feet). Star, Viola Dana. This picture pleased one hundred per cent. Played it two days with good comedy and had a full house both nights. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Town of 5,000. Potchin Paissell, Russell Theatre (500 seats), Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

SHERLOCK, JR. (4,605 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Good comedy; went over good but did not draw very good. Tone good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town of 800. Admission 15-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (200 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

THROUGH THE DARK. (7,999 feet). Star cast. Accepted here as a very good picture and it went over nicely. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

UNSEEING EYES. (8,300 feet). Star cast. The majority was very well pleased with this picture and it went over rather well. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WILD ORANGES. (7 reels). Star cast. Was considered an exceptional picture and praise of it was universal. It didn't do the business it should but then the weather was very inclement. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WOMEN WHO GIVE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A great picture. Story of the Cape Cod folks, depicting the life and hazards of the fishermen also trials and heart aches of their women. Should please any audience. Fine tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. As special, no. Draw transient and family trade, city 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good picture: Meighan out of his standard in this. Good tone and appeal. Sunday yes. Special, no. Draw rural class, town 250. J. J. Halley, San Anselmo Theatre, San Anselmo, California.

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is a fine picture. It is not as good as some of Meighan's but is much better than that general average and it has a good box office drawing power. It is a nice compromise between a western and a Thomas Meighan comedy drama and I believe pleased most of both classes of movie fans. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Universal audience appeal. Intelligent Americans, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Very good feature. Fine acting. Good story. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star cast. Was well liked by the majority and would no doubt have proven a good bet at the box office but for an unprecedented snowstorm. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

CHEAT. (6,325 feet). Star, Pola Negri. This is the best Negri we have had. Jack Holt also added much to the picture. Snowstorm kept many away, but all who ventured out were well repaid. Good appeal. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Not as good a story as Meighan has been having as he is made to look like a cad in the first part and does little to defend himself. A story of the coal mines and a lot of running and fighting over a big tipple. Seemed to please the Meighan crowd. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. General class, city of 16,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. One guy stopped me on the street a couple of days before I ran it and said: "Don't make so much noise about 'The Covered Wagon,' I saw it, it's just a western picture." I am a peaceable man and not favorably impressed with electrocution as a mode of death so I let the fellow go without killing him, just naturally classing him as a dumbell. I had seen the picture myself and had my own ideas about it and when I did run it the majority agreed with me that it was a real picture, one that in the years to come will be appreciated as much or more than it is today. I broke no records. In five out of the ten days I ran it we had some of the worst weather in years. But you can't blame the picture for that, so as long as I could borrow money enough to pay the film rental I feel happy that I ran it. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. You can't go wrong on this one. It's good, good all the way through. Good story, good acting, and very good directing. Bebe Daniels is better than ever before and Tom Moore does fully as good work as he did in "Manhandled." By all means get this one. It's good. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

THOMAS MEIGHAN

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Pauline Stark, A very entertaining picture; good for any class theatre. Pauline Stark is beautiful, looking a great deal like Gloria Swanson, and is a real little actress. Wallace Beery does the best acting he has ever done. Played the picture entire week to splendid business. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal good. All classes, city of 91,000. Admission 40-50. Guy O. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

DON'T CALL IT LOVE. (6,457 feet). Star cast. Well liked by all who came, but somehow it did not take, why it was I don't know as it was good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Rotten, as usual. No appeal. Special, no. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. A very good feature. Fine story and splendid acting. Elaborate sets. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Considered a wonderful picture as far as direction and photography was considered while the story itself wasn't so convincing. Still the majority went out pleased. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Will suit the better classes if not opposed to a picture. A little racy. It was good and pleased a half house two nights. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeals to educated class. Farmers town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexander, Minnesota.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. A very good picture from every angle. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Not a big one. Audience appeal, ninety eight per cent. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-30. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. Better than last two Negri pictures, but did not take in enough to pay film rental. Town of 9,237. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mount Vernon, Ohio.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. No worse than most of hers. I don't like her and I don't know a single person who does. An artist perhaps but why make a real American audience watch her when they would greatly prefer seeing some human being of their own race and color play heroine. If Paramount could trade her for Gladys Walton or other retired actresses and then keep her there it would strengthen their line-up in my estimation. Intelligent Americans, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,800 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Fair picture but was not considered up to Betty's standard. Tone questionable. Appeal okay. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Not fit to be shown in a theatre catering to family trade. And yet Paramount states "if you want our bigger ones you must run others as well." How long are we small town exhibitors going to prostitute our theatres by showing such dirt? Tone terrible. Not suitable for Sunday nor any other day. Suitable to keep in can only. No appeal. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (300 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Not much to this, James Cruze took a set back with us when we showed this. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 feet). Star cast. A very good picture whose drawing power is spoiled by a rotten name. They will lay off but if once in will be pleased. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. City of 10,000. Admission 10-30. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

GUILTY ONE. (5,625 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Good mystery story. Had the audience guessing up to the last end of the feature. Everybody liked it. Not big but satisfying. Well produced and directed. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,785 feet). Stars, Bebe Daniels, Ernest Torrence. Played two days to poor business: it did not draw well the first night and the poor print killed it for the second night. This print was terrible. Some scenes were so dark you practically couldn't see them on the screen. The last thirty feet of the last reel was absolutely unfit for projection purposes. There was a time when all Paramount pictures we received were in excellent shape but it looks as if "them days are gone forever." They should have paid us to run this show. Good tone, fair appeal. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star cast. A very poor picture from a box office angle, none worse. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Town of 2,700. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weisner, Idaho.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Much better than expected from panning given in previous reports. It made a good program picture. Small patronage. Tone, okay. Doubtful for Sunday. Special, no. General audience appeal. Farmers town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Not much to this. Just a fair program picture and not at all suitable for small town patronage. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison. Kansas.

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Not much to this one. Old and jumpy and had several unfavorable comments. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Small town and farmer class town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Very good. Gloria is glorious in this. Good tone, fine appeal. Yes for Sunday. Special, no. Draw rural class, town 250. J. J. Halley, San Anselmo Theatre, San Anselmo, California.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria's best so far. Subway scene good. Don't be afraid to boost. Getting along fine so far with first Famous Forty. Hope it keeps up. General class, town of 4,000. Admission 15-25. R. L. Newell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is a good program picture, sold on a program price, and satisfied a fair crowd. The star is not yet made at the box office but is coming and the crowd is satisfied with this picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Universal audience appeal. Intelligent Americans, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

Claire Windsor as Virginia, and Dixie himself in "The Dixie Handicap," a Reginald Barker production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. A fairly good picture in the estimation of the majority but not a great box office attraction. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. A clever story but apt to go over the heads of some. Good acting and very interesting. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Great for the kiddies but has no drawing power for adults in small towns. It is really an unusually good picture and the kids certainly enjoyed it. Just about broke even with it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Good business for three days. The first time a fairy story ever held up for three days. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. City of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

Pathe

DYNAMITE SMITH. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. Just fair. Picture drew well but many women complained it was too brutal. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (300 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a great picture. Best Lloyd we have ever run. Our patrons were well pleased with it and that's what counts. Tone good. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. One of the finest comedies ever made. It seemed to please universally. I used it for second run and though I guess my town is too small to stand a second run I had a fair business from those who came to bring a friend as they had seen it. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Universal appeal. Intelligent Americans, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

WHY WORRY? (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. Very good comedy. Use plenty of advertising and put it over big. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town of 800. Admission 15-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (200 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

BREATH OF SCANDAL. (6,940 feet). Star cast. Business only fair and so were the comments. The advertising accessories, especially the paper, was bad. Special, no. No audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

WHITE MAN. (6,370 feet). Star, Alice Joyce. African adventure story. Went over nicely at the box office. My people liked it. Tone okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Principal

CAPTAIN JANUARY. Star, Baby Peggy. (6,194 feet). An interesting story of the sea with a fine cast. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

DAUGHTERS OF PLEASURE. Star, Monte Blue. These two stars make a good team. The picture went over nicely against extra strong opposition. Second days business was much better than the first which only occurs on very popular pictures. This one was well liked by all. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. (7,800 feet). Star cast. Fairly good picture but was disappointing. Did not do the business done by "When A Man's A Man" and is not as good a picture. I advertised heavily, stressing the name of Harold Bell Wright. The paper on this picture is extra good. Tone, okay. May be suitable for special. Fair audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Just a fair western picture. Will please, however. Carey well liked here so the picture don't really have to be so much to please them. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Fair audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats). Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Mighty good western. Tone, good. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Masses city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6,287 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Betty Compson goes strong always with Dallas movie fans regardless of what picture she is in, or what theatre it is played. "Ramshackle House" is a keen mystery story of the Florida everglades. Betty looked lovely and the picture had a strong audience appeal. We had a splendid week. This is a picture that will please all theatre goers of any age or sex. Buy it, book it. High class city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. This is one of the most beautiful pictures we have ever played. To my mind it is far more interesting than "Blood and Sand," but it was not a drawing card in our theatre. Priscilla Dean is not popular with Capitol audiences. Inferior vehicles have killed her as a box office attraction and it will take some time to "bring her back." We did an average week with this one. High class city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). This is a fine picture. An ideal tie up with the Daughters of the American Revolution or any other patriotic society. It is too long to be run like the ordinary program but good enough to be handled as a one show a night proposition. Will build up good will for any house and is a great lesson in patriotism. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, patriotic. Intelligent Americans town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star cast. Very good comedy drama. Pleased one hundred per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Rural and town class town of 1,400. Admission 10-20. A. Keuss, Community Theatre (500 seats), New Athens, Illinois.

SHRIEK OF ARABY. (4,158 feet). Star, Ben Turpin. Here's a shriek sure enough boys and your patrons are bound to like sheik Ben in a role that fits his peculiar antics to a T. As a burlesque on the sheik it's a hummer and Mack Sennett provides a lot of pretty girls in the cast with Kathryn McGuire as leading lady in attractive and striking costumes. It's a farce comedy and full of laughs. County and city class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

THREE MUST GET THERES. Star, Max Linder. Good burlesque on the "Three Musketeers," but didn't go over very big. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Town of 800. Admission 15-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (200 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

Universal

JACK O' CLUBS. (4,717 feet). Star cast. A good program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

OH DOCTOR. Star, Reginald Denny. Universal has hit it again with this Denny picture. Each Denny production is better than the last, and each week's receipts beat the preceding week's run of the star in another production. "Oh Doctor" is a fast moving comedy, just packed with laughs that kept our audiences laughing all the while. It is a sure cure for the blues. Buy this by all means. Play it anytime, anywhere. High class, city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. One of the best railroad dramas of the season. If your audience enjoys action and thrills give them this one and you will not have to worry about pleasing them. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. They liked this one immensely. They consider Denny as Wallace Reid's logical successor in my town. It won't take many pictures like this one to make him a foremost headliner. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Small town and rural class 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (300 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good comedy drama. You can't go wrong in boosting this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Rural and town class town of 1,400. Admission 10-20. A. Keuss, Community Theatre (500 seats), New Athens, Illinois.

TORNADO. (6,575 feet). Star, House Peters. This is a very good melodrama but did not break any records for us, as our ladies patronage does not care for melddrama, nor House Peters but the production as a whole was most satisfactory. High class city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (8,785 feet). Star cast. Very good baseball picture. Pleased ninety per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Rural and town class town of 1,400. Admission 10-20. A. Keuss, Community Theatre (500 seats), New Athens, Illinois.

Vitagraph

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star, Irene Rich. "Behold This Woman" is highly entertaining production and no more charming star appears on the screen than Irene Rich. We did a nice week's business, nothing to rave about, but all who saw the picture liked it immensely. We recommend it. High class city of 250,000. Admission 10-15-30-50. Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre (1,044 seats), Dallas, Texas.

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 feet). Star cast. Very good action picture which is a little different from the ordinary run with a good plot and a rattling good wrestling match. This is a picture which will please everyone. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Bet your last dollar on this due being good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Masses city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

LAURA LA PLANTE

Whose magnetic personality has attracted exhibitor attention in her Universal pictures.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. This picture is full of action. Drew well for us and we feel safe in recommending it to any exhibitor who wants action picture. Good appeal. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

PIONEER TRAILS. (6,920 feet). Star cast. This is a good picture for any theatre. It is a western but Vitagraph makes them different. Run it if you can get it and advertise. Tone good. Sunday, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 500. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

SILVER CAR. Star, Earle Williams. A Vitagraph re-issue which is just fair. We did not give much and gave plenty. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

Warner Bros.

BABBITT. (8 reels). Star, Willard Louis. This is a good comedy-drama; the star is at his best. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Draw small town and country class, town of 450. Admission 10-35. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Almyra, Arkansas.

Comedies

AIR POCKETS. (Educational). This picture is a great laugh producer. Has a large number of good stunts. Created more favorable comments among my patrons than the feature which was one of Fox's giants. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

CHAMPEEN. (Pathe). "Our Gang." This is an average "Our Gang" comedy. Nothing particularly striking about it. There are a few laughs and it is a good subject, but not a comedy knockout by any means. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

HIS NEW MAMA. (Pathe). Star, Harry Langdon. Barring none, here's one of the greatest two reel comedies I have ever seen. Plenty of action, pretty girls and everything. Pep from start to finish. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred percent. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

HOLLYWOOD KID. (Pathe). Star cast. Mack Sennett is in this one and he sure does remember how to work before a camera. This comedy is a lot of nonsense around a studio and is very good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

LIZZIES OF THE FIELDS. (Pathe). Star, Charles Murray. First class comedy with a lot of new gags these Sennett comedies are all good. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Maxico.

All the Educational comedies are coming along in good shape. None better. Town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SAFE AND SANE. (Educational). Not much to this one. Very poor indeed. However it does get a few laughs towards the end. No tone. Sunday, yes. No appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

The Circle Design Is Always Effective

Here is a very nice double five from the California Theatre, Los Angeles. It uses the circle idea, but instead of one circle there are three rings and the white of the middle circle is not the least effective of the trio. Off to the right are a prescription and a medicine bottle, to match with the title, Oh, Doctor! Most of the small stuff is set in a small six point, and yet there is ample display. The entire space is a nice example of compact effectiveness. Of course two fives does not mean that they are selling space by the inch in Los, but two fives is easier to visualize than 70 by 2, which is the same thing. Although this is a reverse, the color is so black that the lines, some of which are as small as a twelve point.

THE CIRCLE SELLS

Offset Delays with a Teaser Campaign

When Leo A. Garner first announced that he was bringing Scaramouche to the Columbia Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., it was an op'ry house show, with a traveling orchestra and everything. But before the contract date arrived the roadshowings were discontinued, so he booked it on a rental basis and announced it again. Circumstances required two or three disappointments, and the possibility of Scaramouche coming to Bristol became a local joke. When Mr. Garner finally was assured that he could have the picture on a certain date, he had cried "Wolf" so often that something was necessary to offset the effect of the repeated postponements. He decided to start off with a teaser and he began with a single inch, one column, which read merely "It won't be long now." When that had run for several days, he changed the copy to read: "It won't be long now, Scaramouche." You will find one of these singles in the lower left hand corner of the cut on this page. Following this up with a campaign running single fours and fives and breaking into double fives, he ran the slogan on every advertisement he used on this picture; and he used more than one a day, using plan book copy as well as his own ideas. The same cut shows a single and a double, each with the slogan. For a final kick he came out with a hook-up page in which even the tombstone works collaborated without any effort to hook into the play. He ran two shows a night, putting in a special orchestra to play the score, and he offset the effect of the disappointments, running three days to sustained business. He adds that many persons who had seen it in other cities came again "and liked it just as well the second time." It's one of the few pictures we ever wanted to see repeated. We saw it three times. That slogan was worth a great many ticket sales to Mr. Garner. It will be worth as many to you on a play you have had a hitch on.

Here's a New Idea Drawing Contest

The latest in drawing contests comes from the Playhouse, Wilmington, Del., and the cut speaks for itself. This is done in cooperation with a local paper, which offered 25 passes daily to the boys who filled in the outline most completely and neatly. The beauty of the idea is that you can get many more interested than will come in on a contest where the entire picture has to be drawn. With this much already done, the rest looks easy, and as a result lots of boys will fill in who would not bother to do the complete head. And the stunt is beautifully simple. All you need is a mat of the star. From this two casts are made. One is printed straight and the other has the features routed out. The same thing can be done with a scene cut by routing out the metal inside the figure outlines or by making holes in various parts of the cut which must be reconstructed from the original. In the case of a halftone there is a wide latitude in judging, for the reconstruction may range all the way from the features to the full fill in for flesh tints. In the case of Keaton it might be good idea to offer a prize for the best smiling face. This would advertise his trademarked solemnity and add a little punch to the idea. But whatever way you want to work it, you have the foundation for a good new idea and one that will interest several times as many as a straight drawing contest.

THREE EXAMPLES OF THE USE OF THE SLOGAN

All Hand Design Is Not Best Technique

"Drawn by Eugenia Johnson" is written on a number of samples of work from the Alamo Theatre, Louisville, Ky., and that is the chief trouble with them. They are entirely hand work. The design we reproduce is about the only one where there is a partial excuse for all hand work. With a clumsy compositor the lettering might suffer in this display. Most of the others are so framed that type not only could be used, but used to greater advantage than the drawn letter. In all of the drawing the work is well done; better done than usual. Miss Johnson is an artist and not merely an "inker in." There is strength, even vigor to her portraits and she does well with mass colors. If she would stop with that and let the printer perform his natural function she would produce a better than usual design. But, like so many artists, she seems to resent the presence of type within her space. She wants to do it all, and so she letters the entire space, to the detriment of the display. If hand work were better than a more regular cutting, it would be no time at all before the typefounders produced a series of faces in this style, but the Pen Print, of limited use, is about the only regular font, outside of the conventional scripts, because straight cut letters are more desirable. To throw away the advantage of legibility for the very doubtful "artistic" atmosphere is to waste some, often much, of the money paid for space. The only excuse for hand lettering is to get the exact display in a space so small that even a six point cannot be handled well. In a space one or two inches deep and one or two columns wide, especially where there is considerable drawn design to interfere with the setting in of the type, a hand lettering is permissible. But these spaces are all of them large. The sample shown in a five eights and other sizes run around a three nines or tens. Here it is possible to use type mortises, and in some of the designs about half of the engraver's bill could be saved, while the effect would be materially increased. Generally the comeback is that the printer does not have a sufficiently ornamental letter. We got that from three Pittsburgh press agents before Milt Crandall came on the Rowland and Clark Circuit. Now most of Milt's displays carry type. He bought a few fonts, and he gets a good result with from a quarter to a tenth of the other Pittsburgh spaces. He has paid the relatively small cost of the type many times over—and he still has the type. We think that if Miss Johnson will letter in the title and stars and let the printer get a chance at the rest, her very good art work will show to better advantage, and she will be helping the house to better sales. She has good ideas of display, and she can get these worked out in type if she will stand over the printer a couple of times.

GOOD DRAWING, BUT RATHER WEAK LETTERING

Two Displays of Unusual Interest

Two advertisements from Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., very markedly show the advantage of a big attractor over a group cut. Both displays are good, but the attention value of the large figure is greatly in excess of the smaller one, though this is only about an inch and a half deeper than the other, and of the same width—a six column. Mr. Burns, who is publicity manager for H. B. Vincent, has developed the white border almost into a trade mark. Generally he uses this device to save space, but for Peter Pan an extra space was taken. The cut is the press book four column size. It made a nice display, and of course it was backed up by a lot of press work. But the second day announcement is so much better in its attention-getting quality that there is scarcely any comparison. This cut was planned for a full page advertisement, but it does as well; perhaps better, as a six sixteens, because here it fills the space and is more dominant. In a general way it is a poor idea to permit a cut to take up so much space. Were this more than a single figure, the rule would hold good here, but since the cut shows only the figure of Peter, it is disposed of at a glance and the eye seeks the copy. That is what makes the overlarge cut (in proportion to the space,) dangerous. The eye and the mind are so busy looking at the cut details that they overlook the text. With only the single figure this does not hold true, and the idea of Peter dominates the mind while the copy is being read. Precisely the same cut area showing a lot of people or many happenings would defeat the advertising aim, but the single bold figure helps. This is one of the prettiest displays that Mr. Burns has ever sent in, and the reason it is sightly is that he has not overcrowded the white space with a lot of talk. He still holds to the value of white space and does not cloud the cut by bedding it in type. The essential copy is that in the upper left hand corner. Below it is a repeat and extension of the opening.

"Heart of a Siren"

Barbara LaMarr in One of Best Vamp Roles of Her Career, with Conway Tearle and Good Cast

Reviewed by Tom Waller

Barbara LaMarr may be considered to do the finest work of her screen career in "Heart of a Siren." As the temptress, to whose wiles all men encountering her succumb sooner or later, Miss LaMarr has a languishing and gorgeously costumed role and the picture proves she is unhesitant in manifesting an acute knowledge of these points. Her long lashes, limpid eyes and swaying form occupy the center of the camera's focus.

Playing opposite her is Conway Tearle. His essay of the part of the young Englishman whose coldness transforms by degrees into a passionate and sincere love for the siren is quite convincing.

A touch of excellent comedy—the kind that is genuine and thus mirth-provoking—is afforded at well timed intervals by William Ricciardi and Clifton Webb, ex-toreador now "bull thrower," and valet to the siren, respectively.

The story, although like one of many of its kind, is secondary in view of Barbara's fine performance, a good cast under splendid direction, and lavish sets of a Southern Europe atmosphere.

As far as moral tone goes, we would say that the picture is suitable for any theatre, showing on any of the seven days a week.

This production is being distributed by First National.

Cast

Isabella Echevaria	Barbara LaMarr
Gerald Rexford	Conway Tearle
John Strong	Harry Morey
Mario	Paul Doucet
Maxim	Clifton Webb
Emelio	William Ricciardi

Adapted from the William Hurlburt play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Directed by Phil Rosen.

Length, 6,700 feet.

Story

Isabella with her retinue of servants arrives at a fashionable French hotel where she encounters many of her cast-off admirers. She determines to bring Gerald, a young Englishman stopping at the hostelry, to his knees because of his coldness towards her. She follows Gerald and his mother to Paris and there, through an artist friend, arranges an accidental meeting. Gerald proclaims his love and Isabella admits affection has supplanted her desire for vengeance. Isabella and Gerald are enraptured when Gerald's mother succeeds in persuading the siren to break with the Englishman. It is not until after his engagement is announced to another woman that Gerald learns of this from his artist friend. He reaches Isabella and proclaims his desire to marry her just after she has taken a potion from a bottle labled poison. The fluid turns out to be harmless and happiness is the close.

"On Thin Ice"

Warner Brothers Offer Crook-Mystery Romance with Tom Moore and Edith Roberts as the Stars

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Tom Moore and Edith Roberts as the stars, Warner Brothers are offering a crook-mystery story, "On Thin Ice," which tells the tale of a gang who believe that a girl who has been railroaded to jail knows the whereabouts of stolen money and endeavor to make her tell where the loot is by gaining her confidence. Her innocence is finally proven, the mystery cleared and the girl marries one of the crooks who is influenced by her to reform.

The story follows largely along conventional lines of pictures of this type and moves along easily. There is not very much action, although the theme is melodramatic, the appeal being based on sympathy for the girl, the mystery element and the romantic angle, much dependence being placed on characterization to aid in holding the audience interest.

Edith Roberts gives a sincere and praiseworthy performance throughout and is a good selection as to type. Tom Moore is well cast as the crook who, while posing as the girl's long lost brother, falls in love with her and gives up his criminal career. William Russell is good as the leader of the gang, who also turns one "straight" trick before he dies. Theodore Von Eltz is capable as a young doctor in love with the girl, but these scenes tend to confuse the love angle and do not advance the plot as he is dropped just as the girl is shown becoming quite interested in him. The types selected for the members of the gang are excellent and the atmospheric touches are good.

"On Thin Ice," while not a striking production of its type, should prove of average entertainment value for patrons who like stories of the underworld in which there is a mystery angle and a romance between the innocent girl and a criminal who reforms.

Based on novel, "The Dear Pretender," by Alice Ross Colver.

Directed by Mal St. Clair.

Length, 7,046 feet.

Story

A bank is robbed and Breen, the vice president demands the crooks be brought to justice. Rose Lore comes in with a satchel and tells a hard luck tale about a lost brother and that her father has just died, and returns the satchel, which she claims was thrown over a fence and landed at her feet. When opened it contains only washers and newspapers. Rose is convicted but freed on parole and detectives try to follow her to get a line on the loot. Dapper Crawford who engineered the robbery, believes Rose knows where it is, so he gets a henchman, Chuck to pose as her long lost brother. The three go away to the country but can get no information from Rose, and finally give up but not until Chuck has fallen in love with her and determined to go straight, and Dapper has disclosed the fact he is not Rose's brother. Dapper traces the washers and sends for the real criminal and also for Rose, intending to use her to blackmail him. Chuck hears of this and comes to Rose's rescue. The detectives break in as Dapper and Chuck are fighting, and one of the gangsters shoots Dapper. He persuades the police to give him a chance to clear up the mystery, and it proves that the bank vice president is the real crook. Rose is vindicated and marries Chuck who becomes a traffic cop.

"The Boomerang"

B. P. Schulberg Offers Entertaining Romantic Comedy Adapted From David Belasco Stage Play

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

One of David Belasco's long list of stage successes "The Boomerang" written by the popular playwrights Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, is now being offered on the screen by B. P. Schulberg as a Gasnier production with Bert Lytell and Anita Stewart.

There is a clever underlying theme to this picture which concerns a doctor who unable to make a success as a physician, styles himself a psycho-analist opens a sanitarium, specializing in "heart troubles" and is flooded with patients. Among these is a lady clairvoyant who to find out how he gets away with his scheme, gets a job as one of his nurses. The doctor scoffs at love and the title comes from the fact that his theories all prove a boomerang and he falls madly in love with this nurse.

The picture starts out as a straight romantic comedy drama with quite a bit of satire and some sophisticated and epigrammatic subtitles that are witty and amusing. As it progresses, however, the comedy gets broader and finally there are several farce comedy situations such as two conspirators hiding in the girl's bedroom, and three sets of strong arm men successively kidnapping her from each other.

The picture has some clever and effective situations and should provide good entertainment for the average patron, for the romantic side is worked out in a pleasing way and there are a number of amusing moments that will get laughs; it would seem, however, that the full comedy possibilities particularly in the farcial situations have not been realized.

Anita Stewart does excellent work and is unusually attractive as the heroine, and Bert Lytell gives a good portrayal of the doctor who gets hit by his own boomerang. The remainder of the cast is in capable hands. Ned Sparks scores in an unusual type of comedy role as a chap who is always on hand to prevent suicide and send the patient to the sanitarium. A clever and amusing angle to the story is the manner in which the doctor-hero uses the same remedy, jealousy, to cure all of his patients, and the way the girl usese this treatment to advantage in her own case.

Cast

Virginia Zelva	Anita Stewart
Dr. Sumner	Bert Lytell
Budd	Donald Keith
Grace Tyler	Mary McAllister

Directed by Gasnier.

Length, 6,714 feet.

Story

Finding that no patients were coming his way, Dr. Sumner opened a sanitarium, called himself a psycho-analyst and specialized in affairs of the heart, his principal remedy being to arouse jealousy. About this time, Virginia Zelva, raised as a clairvoyant by a foreigner, Poulet, decided that as business was slow she would find out how Dr. Sumner got away with his line of stuff, so she entered his establishment as a nurse. One of her first cases was that of Budd, a young chap, and Dr. Sumner who made fun of love, calling it a sordid game, found himself interested. DeWitt, an unscrupulous lawyer learned that Virginia was the niece of a wealthy man, and made love to her even trying to kidnap her, to further his own ends. Poulet also sought to have her pose as this heiress. Both enter the sanitarium stealthily and Dr. Sumner finds them. Suddenly he discovers his treatment has been a boomerang and he is madly in love, so he plans to kidnap Virginia. At a costume ball, DeWitt's men grab her, the doctor's men take her away from them, and two others get her and place her in a car with the doctor. Finally, the car stops and the masked men make them kiss each other, when it develops one of them is Virginia's uncle, who says he has known all along though she is too good for the doctor, he can have her as his wife.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Don't Worry"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Century two-reel comedy distributed by Universal Wanda Wiley appears as a country girl in outlandish clothes who comes to live with a rich uncle, a cough drop manufacturer, and succeeds in capturing several rival manufacturers who try to steal the formula. The picture is filled with slapstick action and rough and tumble stuff, including a scene in which the star has a hard time to keep from falling on a highly polished floor. There is the familiar lot of running around and knockabout action, use of trap doors, etc. Miss Wiley's work is up to its usual high standard and there are a lot of situations that will appeal to the slapstick fan and get the laughs. Altogether it is an average number of this series.—C. S. S.

"Dynamite Doggie"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Al St. John in this Tuxedo Comedy provides entertainment that, because the humor is not forced and because every slightest move isn't supposed to be funny, gets across with a punch each time that a real gag is put over. It chiefly concerns a youth in love with a girl and in fear of her bulldog and of her father. Father supplies his bit of comedy by sicking the dog on the youth; then the action has to do with St. John and the dog. He succeeds in making a friend of it by feeding it, but having included a time bomb in the dog's food, he tries desperately—and fails—to give it the slip. At last, on shipboard, the youth and girl think they are safe and the dog left behind. It appears as the zero hour comes, but the bomb explodes in the water when the dog is taken sea-sick. This animal is very clever and the work of the players is excellent. The subject ought to please almost every type of audience.—S. S.

"The Storm"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

This is one of the best of the recent Out of the Inkwell cartoons drawn by Max Fleisher and distributed by Red Seal. It shows the familiar little clown disobeying the cartoonist's warning that a storm is approaching and refusing to return to the ink bottle, saying he must exercise the baby. He gets caught in a severe storm and separated from the child. The storm is a regular hurricane and before it is over baby and clown have an awful time. There is good comedy, plenty of pep and a lot of clever imaginative touches in this cartoon and it should prove good entertainment for any type of audience.—C. S. S.

"Excuse My Glove"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this, the Spat family stages a society prize fight in their home, hoping to thus get in thick or thicker with the elite. Ambrose, the brother, is scheduled to put on the gloves with a tough egg of a pugilist, but sees the "pug" work out in his gymnasium and fakes a broken arm. Tewksbury Spat then is forced to substitute in the ring and immediately his troubles multiply. He is knocked out several times but saved from a losing count by his wife, who is timekeeper. The pug's wife objects to this and a free-for-all fight starts. The butler turns off the light. When they go on again, Mrs. Spat stands triumphant over the prostrate bodies of everyone else. It is excellent fun, with plenty of atmosphere and color, and Frank Butler, Sidney D'Albrook and Laura Roessing do fine work.—S. S.

"The Cowpuncher's Comeback"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

One of Universal's series of westerns released under the Mustang brand, with horses and the activities of horse thieves taking the place of herds and cattle rustlers. Art Acord, the hero, appears as a chap who is erroneously convicted of horse stealing and returns and clears his name by rounding up the gang. Acord does not show to especial advantage in this film, in which the continuity is jumpy and at times hard to follow. There is the usual amount of familiar type of action here for the western fans, but altogether it is hardly up to the average of pictures of this class.—C. S. S.

"Giddap"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Billy Bevan, Helen Mehrmann, Yorke Sherwood, Kathryn McGuire and Andy Clyde head the cast of this Mack Sennett comedy about a polo match gone wrong. The fun is fast and furious, the gags many and good and the burlesque characterizations by the different players excellent. Sennett certainly is a genius at crazy characterizations as well as gags. Most of the action is the chase of the polo players after the runaway ball. This lights in all sorts of players—ash cans, wagons, women's hats—and destruction follows fast in its wake. Much of the stuff is familiar, but, treated from a slightly different angle, it scores. Del Lord directed from the story by Felix Adler and Jefferson Moffitt. Adler and A. H. Giebler provided clever titles.—S. S.

"Do You Remember"

(Red Seal—Novelty—One Reel)

The most striking feature about this Cranfield and Clark subject released by Red Seal is the novel manner in which the views are introduced, the film being in reality a series of scenic shots of beautiful spots in England. A couple is shown having a little disagreement. The husband gets an album of snapshots and shows his wife scenes of many places they visited together, and she soon forgets her anger. As the pages of the album are turned, each picture dissolves from a still into a moving picture of the same subject, with flowers and leaves waving and the animals and birds in motion. In some instances the camera is allowed to panoram over the surrounding scenery. The change from still to motion photography is done with unusual smoothness. It is an entertaining novelty that should please the average patron.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 10

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

The chief feature of Pathe Review No. 10 is the second installment of "The Origin of Man," pictures showing the Roy Chapman Andrews expedition into Mongolia. It was during their search for fossils that the explorers chanced upon the desert dwellers who are brought to America in film form. Other subjects in the reel are "Making Friends With Birds" and views of Seattle in Pathecolor. This last is one of the "Visiting Our Own America" series.—S. S.

"The House of Flickers"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Imperial Comedy is immensely entertaining and it ought to tickle exhibitors because it deals with their problems. Now that a comedy about an exhibitor's troubles has been done, we wonder why nobody thought of it before. It contains a lot of fun for the general public and it offers an exhibitor an alibi for an occasional slip in putting on a show. In this case the trouble starts because of the projectionist. A monkey aids in the confusion until, finally, hurried splices are made in the film and scenes appear on the screen upside down, sidewise and without relation to each other. This comedy is a peach for diplomatically advising the public as to a theatre owner's difficulties, and will atone in an audience's mind for many feet of rainy film and breakages. Every bit of it is funny and some parts are screamingly so.—S. S.

"Storm King"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Universal's series of two-reelers issued under the Mustang brand are westerns in which horses take the place of the familiar cattle, with the activities of horse thieves replacing those of cattle rustlers. In this one the action centers around the hero, who thwarts the plan of the villain to not only clean out a drove of horses but to steal "Storm King," a very valuable stallion. To do this the villain makes love to the girl and persuades her to elope, but the hero comes to the rescue. There is considerable action and a lot of good riding in this film, in which Edmund Cobb appears as the hero. It is of average entertainment value.—C. S. S.

"Judge's Crossword Puzzles"

(Educational—Novelty—One Reel)

This is the second of the series of animated cross-word puzzles offered by Educational. A guide definition is given and the patron has a few seconds in which to guess the answer, which is then filled in. The definitions are in a comic vein and are followed by amusing comments. It should prove interesting where cross-word puzzles are the vogue.—C. S. S.

"Traps and Troubles"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

This Grantland Rice Sportlight, produced under the direction of John Hawkins, follows along the lines of previous Sportlights dealing with the subjects of golf and is interestingly done, with plenty of human interest as well as exhibitors of technique on the part of star golfers. The duffer and the fanatic playing in the snow are shown, as well as such professional players as Walter Hagen and Sarazen.—S. S.

"The Pie Man"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this Aesop Film Fable, Paul Terry has his funny characters rob a pie man's cart and render his life miserable. Again the cartoon shows a wealth of imaginative humor and is replete with excellent drawings.—S. S.

Pathe Review No. 11

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"The Life Story of the Cabbage White Butterfly," one of "The Secrets of Nature" series and produced with the co-operation of the Natural History Museum of London, is the principal feature of this reel. It shows interestingly how an ugly caterpillar becomes a beautiful winged creature. Other subjects are views of New Orleans in the "Visiting Our Own America" series and "Assorted Steps," the inside story of a dancing diversion.—S. S.

"Zowie!"

(Pathe—Novelty—One Reel)

This is the first of a series of Stereoscopiks to be issued by Pathe. Cardboard spectacles, with one gelatine lense of red and one of green, are provided. The subject is hugely interesting. The first examples of characters apparently stepping out of the screen and coming toward you are decided novelties, but the best is reserved for the last, when a lariat and a baseball and a bug on the end of a stick come whirling into your very face, it seems. The illusion is perfect.—S. S.

"Both Barrels"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

Jack Perrin is featured in this two-reel Mustang Picture. It is a typical western story dealing with the purchase of a salted mine, the discovery of a vein of real gold, a gun fight to retain control of it, a race to file the claim first and a love affair. The characters are the sucker purchaser, a mine shark and swindler, a girl who runs a restaurant and her invalid mother and a Chinese cook. All of them are well played. This subject possesses merit for those who do not recognize it as having a time-worn plot.—S. S.

"The Girl Problem"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the Sweet Sixteen Comedies. Betty leaves Art's car when he's gone for gas and drives off with Ed, a rival. Art suspects foul play, as there are tramps nearby, but the "foul" turns out to be a fowl the tramps have stolen. Later, Art's father tries to solve his son's algebra problem while the latter visits Betty. Six hours later Art is shooed home by Betty's dad and finds his father still struggling with the problem—and the wrong lesson, at that. This subject shows a good understanding of youth and contains some effective comedy.—S. S.

"Merrymakers"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

The characters in this Cameo Comedy, played by Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance, are sweethearts about to undergo the perils of matrimony, though a loud-snoring father doesn't approve and a mischievous brother makes life miserable for all about him. Therefore, home proving an impossible place for billing and cooing, the two visit the Blue Mouse Cafe. Here an ex-sweetheart of the girl provides slapstick humor. This subject largely consists of gags, none of them particularly new but all effectively done. It has average merit.—S. S.

"Captain Kidd"

(F. B. O.—Cartoon—One Reel)

The cartoonist gives his version of Captain Kidd in this Bray Studio cartoon, released through F. B. O., of the same title. It is interesting to note how the artist is able to intermingle with the creatures of his pen. This cartoon should prove itself an entertainer in any theatre.—T. W.

Bachmann Sets Release Date on Schulberg Films

J. G. BACHMANN, vice-president and general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, has set the release dates of the remainder of the company's program for this year.

With James P. Hogan's "The Mansion of Aching Hearts," now ready for first runs, the release on the Schulberg schedule will be "The Boomerang," a screen version of the famous David Belasco's stage play. This is the second Schulberg special offered this year, the first being "Capital Punishment." Gasnier directed "The Boomerang," which is a comedy drama featuring Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith.

The last week in April, Gasnier's next production, "Faint Perfume," will be ready for exhibition dates. This novel by Zona Gale was one of the three best sellers of 1922, and is soon to be dramatized on the New York stage by Brock Pemberton. It is now being made with an all star cast which includes Alyce Mills, a recent Schulberg find who has been signed to a long contract.

"My Lady's Lips," by John Goodrich, will follow "Faint Perfume" on May 15. James P. Hogan is directing this society story.

On June first the last B. P. Schulberg Production for this season will be ready. This is "When a Woman Reaches Forty," a story which has caused much interest because its author, Royal A. Baker, is motion picture censor for the city of Detroit. Production on this story will begin as soon as Gasnier completes "Faint Perfume."

The Schulberg lot in Hollywood is working at full speed. In addition to completing this year's releases, preliminary work on the first four pictures for next fall is under way.

ANTONIO MORENO

Now working in Rex Ingram's production, "Mare Nostrum," for Metro-Goldwyn. Alice Terry is playing opposite Antonio.

Six from Abramson

In about a month Ivan Abramson will begin working on the first of a series of six productions he intends making in the next twelve months. They are to be fashioned after "Lying Wives," the production that Abramson has just finished shooting on, and is now editing and titling. That is, Mr. Abramson intends giving each one of the six a powerful and moral-teaching story and an all-star cast.

New Tuxedo Comedy

"Dynamite Doggie" has been selected as the title of the next Educational-Tuxedo Comedy. It will present Al St. John and the Tuxedo cast in one of the comedies made before this star joined the Mermaid forces.

Sally O'Neil, New to Screen, Has Lead in Neilan's "Patsy"

A GIRL by the name of Sally O'Neil, who has had no previous experience in pictures, was selected by Marshall Neilan for the leading feminine role in his next Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Patsy," which has already been started.

William Haines is playing opposite her, it was announced this week, and Charlie Murray, Ford Sterling and Hank Mann are also in the cast of "Patsy."

"Patsy" is of Neilan's own authorship, and although the director is "shooting from his cuff," studio officials are not perturbed, since Neilan worked without a scenario on several of his most notable successes.

The story of Sally O'Neil's sudden rise to the fame which this will mean to her, is a real Cinderella tale of the movies. Neilan and his wife, Blanche Sweet, who has the leading role in her husband's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Sporting Venus," saw Miss O'Neil for the first time among the guests on the dance floor atop a Los Angeles hotel. They were so impressed by her beauty that an interview was arranged, and a screen test given Miss O'Neil. The result of the test was that she was chosen for the lead in Neilan's new production.

Malcolm McGregor Signed

Becomes Thirty-Ninth Member of Metro-Goldwyn Stock Company

Malcolm McGregor was made a featured Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract player last week, it was announced by Harry Rapf, studio executive. He is the thirty-ninth member of the stock company, Pauline Starke also having just been signed.

McGregor has the leading role opposite Norma Shearer in Monta Bell's "Lady of the Night." It was his work in this film that brought him the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract.

He is now appearing opposite Eleanor Boardman in Frank Borzage's production of "The Circle," Somerset Maugham's stage success adapted by Kenneth Clarke.

"Seven Chances" at the Capitol

Buster Keaton's long awaited feature comedy, "Seven Chances," will have its world premiere at the Capitol Theatre the week of March 15th.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE

Director of Samuel Goldwyn's pictures, for First National release.

Sawyer-Lubin Exploitation on "Heart of a Siren"

THE Associated Pictures Corporation, producers of Sawyer-Lubin features starring Barbara La Marr, appreciates the value of publicity and believes in giving its product all the exploitation possible. It is the contention of Mr. Herbert Lubin, secretary of the corporation and an executive of wide experience in motion pictures, that the policy of "letting George do it," in this case the distributor, is unfair both to exhibitor and producer.

"An active publicity department and a liberal exploitation appropriation is an absolute necessity for every producing organization that is in the industry to stay and is planning for future growth," said. Mr. Lubin recently. "The publicity that can be obtained during the months it takes to prepare and film a picture, has direct box office value for the exhibitor and the wise producer sees that his name is identified with all his productions, by staging an effective advertising campaign before his picture is turned over to the distributor.

"In pursuance of our established policy a vigorous publicity and advertising campaign is being waged on behalf of 'Heart of a Siren,' in which Conway Tearle, Harry Morey, Clifton Webb, Arnold Daly, Ida Darling and others appear in support of Barbara La Marr. This includes a series of page advertisements in the leading trade journals, which will appear weekly until the picture is released, mailing reprints of these advertisements to exchanges, franchise holders and first run theatres, along with photographs of Barbara La Marr in character. An attractive booklet stressing the strong box office appeal of this La Marr picture is being prepared for mailing to exchanges, franchise holders and first run exhibitors. A personal letter from Miss La Marr on one sheet board, with photos of the most striking situations in the picture, will be prepared for exhibitors, and an especially prepared insert is being sent to many thousand movie-goers throughout the country, who have requested fan photos of Barbara La Marr since 1922, when the policy of keeping these names and addresses on file was instituted.

"Newspapers throughout the United States and Canada have been publishing publicity material on 'Heart of a Siren' for months back and pictures of the players and production have been supplied rotogravure editors for reproduction in their pages.

"All the foregoing is by way of advance publicity and will, of course, be supplemented by the splendid exploitation given their releases by First National Pictures, Inc.

Rayart Salesmen in New York for Conference on Fall Program

W. RAY JOHNSTON, of the Rayart Pictures Corporation, announces that a conference has been called at the New York offices of that organization for all executives connected with the sales and advertising departments for next week to lay out the advertising and sales plans for the fall program of Rayart Pictures.

Wally Jackson, Eastern representative, and Tom Curran, Midwestern representative, have both reached New York to take part in laying out the fall program and to discuss with Mr. Johnston the type of product required in the various territories.

The Rayart program, with a few production plans to be completed, are practically set for the fall market.

Harry J. Brown will make a series of eight Reed Howes' specials to be released at intervals of one every six weeks. These will be directed by Al Rogell. The first four pictures of the new group will be "The Crack of Dawn," an auto racing story; "Racing Romance," a race horse story; "The Devil's Double," a Central American revolution picture; and "The Gallant Fool," a fast action comedy-drama.

Brown will also produce a series of eight five-reel comedy-drama fight pictures featuring Billy Sullivan, who starred in the fourth series of Leather Pushers. The first picture will be "The Fear Fighter," by Grover Jones.

Harry Webb will produce a second series of eight Whirlwind Westerns starring Jack Perrin—first release in September.

There will be four specials on the Rayart program, the first of which will be "The Beloved Pawn," from Harold Titus' novel of the same name. Comedies and serials will complete the Rayart program for 1925-6.

Art Department for Chadwick

Further evidence of the increased activities of Chadwick Pictures Corporation is the installing of an art department under the direction of Howard Simon, former staff artist of the New York Tribune, who has recently returned to New York after a protracted stay in Europe.

Within the past week Chadwick has also opened offices in Los Angeles, where I. E. Chadwick, president of the corporation is personally supervising production of four new pictures. E. Lanning Masters has been engaged to take charge of the West coast publicity staff.

Belasco Prod's. Get Rights to Stage Play, "Three Faces East"

A. H. SEBASTIAN, general manager of Belasco Productions, Inc., releasing through Producers Distributing Corporation, has just issued an announcement revealing the closing of negotiations for the motion picture rights of "Three Faces East," universally recognized as the most successful play of spy intrigue ever presented on the American stage.

"Three Faces East" was written by the well known dramatist and scenarist, Anthony Paul Kelly, and as a stage play it enjoyed enormous popularity, running for almost two years in New York City.

The big feature of "Three Faces East" is its element of suspense and the uncertainty of its denouement. The audience not only suspect the wrong persons; they suspect practically every character in the play; and the tension is relieved only at the last moment. The story is laid in Central Europe in war time, and a terrific air raid by the enemy is included in the melodramatic action.

"In securing the film rights to 'Three Faces East,'" says Mr. Sebastian's statement, "we feel that Belasco Productions, Inc., has obtained one of the most valuable pieces of theatrical property in America, and a fitting successor to 'Friendly Enemies,' starring Weber and Fields, which we have just completed. The fact that we have secured this remarkable play indicates our determination to adhere to the production of the finest plays and books it is possible to obtain. As in the case of our previous pictures, the present production will be distributed by the Producers Distributing Corporation.

"The dramatic quality of 'Three Faces East' is tremendous. There are wheels within wheels, and one character after another is subtly revealed as a participant in the great counterplots of espionage. But there is never a possibility of deciding on which side any person is operating, and the audience is worked up to a pitch of excitement such as I have seldom seen in a theatre.

"Preliminary preparations for film production are now being undertaken, and a further announcement of our plans will be issued within a short time. I can promise, however, that cast and director will be thoroughly in keeping with the importance of the play itself.

Working on "Faint Perfume"

Gasnier has terminated his annual vacation in New York and has returned to the coast where he is already at work on the screen version of Zona Gale's novel, "Faint Perfume." Alyce Mills, new Schulberg player, has a prominent role in this feature which will be a spring release on the schedule of B. P. Schulberg Productions.

Duncan Sees 1925 Biggest Year in Vitagraph's History

JOHN M. DUNCAN, personal representative of John B. Rock, General Manager of Vitagraph, spent last week in New York conferring with Mr. Rock on the distribution plans of Vitagraph's coming 1925-1926 pictures. These productions are now being made ready, scenarios are being assigned to writers and directors are being selected. They will be made from standard works of the most popular writers of the day—novelists and playwrights whose output has ridden at the top in human interest, dramatic action and punch; and everyone will have passed the test Albert E. Smith, President, puts to all Vitagraph pictures, the test of clean, wholesome entertainment values.

Johnny Duncan brought great news to Johnny Rock from the outlands. The Vitagraph series pictures are being snapped up by exhibitors.

"They want Vitagraph product and Vitagraph helps," Mr. Duncan reported. "Vitagraph spells service for the exhibitor—it is the exhibitor's friend, one prominent theatre owner in Ohio told me on this last trip. He took our whole strip right up to and including 'Baree, Son of Kazan.'

"The best sales talk Vitagraph men have had while I've been with the organization, and, that's just a little less than ten years, has been service for the exhibitor, good prints, excellent posters and advertising units and—fair play.

"Exhibitors are praising Vitagraph's leadership in providing tax-free music cue sheets. They tell me that they knew when they sent in their plea for relief in this that Vitagraph would be the first to come to their aid and provide these tax-free cue sheets. 'Vitagraph is always away ahead of any other company in working for the benefit of the exhibitors,' one theatre owner told me.

"I have recently toured Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia and Indiana. I find a steady development in theatre building, a wholesome growth in the market for excellent pictures. The exhibitors are beginning to mobilize their play dates, as suggested by Sydney S. Cohen in a recent statement. They see the writing on the wall—if they do not protect themselves against the distributors-producers-theatre-owning combines they know they will see the day when their own walls will tumble about them before the competition of these combines. That's why they are booking Vitagraph pictures—they know Vitagraph is independent, owns no theatres, and plays fair."

Film Booking Offices Buy Laura Jean Libby Stories

THE works of Laura Jean Libby, who died several months ago, are at last to reach the screen.

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., announces that contracts have been signed which give to that organization the right to produce and distribute throughout the world four of Miss Libby's most famous novels, with an option of an additional forty. This will bring before another generation the novels of an authoress who was unquestionably the leading exponent of the romantic school of writing in America, if not in the world.

The works of Laura Jean Libby, which have still a very considerable sale in this country, were perhaps more widely disseminated in her heyday than those of any other living writer. In addition to the sale of her novels, which was tremendous, newspaper syndicates took up the distribution of her stories. Their author was the first writer, in fact, to have her novels thus distributed on such a vast scale.

Through several generations of American readers, Mrs. Libby ranked as the popular interpreter of the romance, the dreams, and the Castles in Spain, which come alike to the shop-girl and the debutante, however divergent may be the building of those castles. She first successfully spanned in literature the chasm of class distinction and married off the "poor little match girl" type to the proud English nobleman; or brought together in unclouded wedlock the delivery boy and the aristocratic daughter of Fifth Avenue. That such a proceeding interests the mass of the reading public is eloquently attested in the sales of Laura Jean Libby's novels and her name is still as well known in American homes as that of Lincoln.

The Libby stories to be made by F. B. O. on their own lot in Hollywood are: "When His Love Grew Cold," "The Abandoned Bride," "Iola's Sin," and "In a Moment of Temptation." The first of the novels to be filmed will be "When His Love Grew Cold," which thrilled many a youthful feminine heart a decade or more ago when the name of the author was a household word. "When His Love Grew Cold" was the late author's favorite novel, and had the widest circulation of all her books.

Work on "When His Love Grew Cold" will be started in a few weeks. A famous star of the screen and stage is now being considered for the leading role, and one of the finest scenario writers in Hollywood will make the adaptations of Miss Libby's stories. The name of the director, one long and prominently associated with the screen, is being temporarily withheld.

In commenting on the purchase of the Laura Jean Libby stories, Mr. Schnitzer said:

"I cannot understand why the works of Laura Jean Libby, which provide excellent material for the screen, have been negl and that Miss Libby could not have the joy of seeing her work transferred to the silver sheet while she was alive. Every story she wrote is jammed full of motion picture material. Love, hate, mental conflict and physical punch—all are there, waiting between the pages these well known books to reach the millions of Miss Libby's readers who are movie fans."

Famous Players-Lasky to Produce "The Wanderer"

THE story of the Prodigal Son is to be put on the screen.

"The Wanderer," one of the most famous of all Biblical stage-plays, is soon to go into production at the Paramount West Coast studio, according to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production. Its filming is to be done on a scale of lavishness seldom before equalled in screen history.

Raoul Walsh, who is responsible for the direction of "The Thief of Bagdad," has been selected to produce the play. Assisting Mr. Walsh is a large staff of architects and artists, several of whom aided him in the production of the Fairbanks picture.

More than two months have now been spent by these men preparing a score of massive sets in the Paramount studio, and on numerous locations. Plans have been completed for one of the most elaborate cities ever conceived for motion picture production.

"The filming of 'The Wanderer' has been approached with greatest caution," says Jesse L. Lasky. "We waited many months until we felt we had found a man whose directorial genius was capable of accomplishing the difficult task of producing the picture. Just as 'The Covered Wagon,' 'The Ten Commandments' and 'Peter Pan' each advanced a step in the progress of motion pictures, so we hope to make another stride with 'The Wanderer.'"

While casting on the picture has not yet begun, an announcement has been made that more than a score of nationally prominent players will be included among those taking part. Seven most important Biblical characters to be filled are Jether, Jesse, Gaal, Naomi, Tola, Tisha and Pharis. The entire cast will be selected with extreme care, according to Mr. Walsh. The thousands taking part in mob scenes will be chosen individually with a view chiefly to their spiritual features. Thirty screen tests have been made by Paramount in an effort to select the boy to play the title role. These tests have ranged from unknown persons to players of wide importance.

To date no selection has been made. Adaptation of "The Wanderer," written as a stage-play by Maurice V. Samuels, is being made by J. T. O'Donahue.

Fox Signs Schertzinger

Irving Lesser Discusses the Harold Bell Wright Books

IN a statement regarding the Harold Bell Wright novels, three of which have been brought to the screen by Principal Pictures, Irving Lesser, vice-president of this company, says in part :

"When an author has an audience of well past 56,000,000 readers, and that author's works are brought to the screen, the exhibitor is receiving a commodity that outclasses the radio lure from every conceivable standpoint. Such an author is a much-looked-for—and a seldomly-found—boon to the exhibitors of the world. And I say this advisedly, for there are few authors whose books enter 10,000,000 homes, making the customary circuit of five or six other readers. Such a record is Harold Bell Wright's, author of the newest Principal Picture, 'The Re-creation of Brian Kent.'

"It is common knowledge that throughout the wide world, civilized and semi-civilized, the Bible is the greatest of all 'best-sellers.' And it is also common knowledge that the second greatest 'best-sellers' of the world are those written by Harold Bell Wright The Literary Digest, in a recent issue, commented on E. E. Wilson's article in Farm and Fireside, in which Mr. Wilson says 'that in eight years the sale of Harold Bell Wright's, second to the Bible as a best-seller, has reached 10,000,000 books, a total of 56,000,000 readers.' These books include some of the other Wright stories Principal has given to the theatreowners, such as 'When a Man's a Man,' 'The Mine With the Iron Door' and the present release, 'The Re-creation of Brian Kent.' It also includes 'The Winning of Barbara Worth' and others my brother Sol and our associate, Mike Rosenberg and I are planning to produce this year.

"When you take in consideration the fact that Harold Bell Wright's books, such as 'The Re-creation of Brian Kent,' our latest screen-book, and the others by the same author we have already made, reach into the most lowly of homes, into the smallest and largest cities and towns, into the highways and byways, you can see before you a vast army of readers who want to become movie goers. Into the homes where books are seldom read and bought go his books. Into homes, peopled by those from every walk of life, more than ten million of his books have found a haven. There are something like 110,000,000 persons in the United States, yet only about 90,000,000 read anything at all, including newspapers that are printed in the English language. It hardly sounds possible, yet it is the gospel of truth, that Harold Bell Wright reaches alone through the use of his solitary pen nearly three-quarters of the number who read. Of his great following, according to Hildegarde Hawthorne, the biographer of the greatest living writers of our day, hundreds of thousands buy only a single book a year, and that one is invariably one by Harold Bell Wright.

"D. Hiltman, vice-president of D. Appleton and Company, publishers of all of Wright's books, as well as some of our other leading authors' works, it may be interesting to know has this to say of such books as 'When a Man's a Man, 'The Mine With the Iron Door' and 'The Re-creation of Brian Kent': Harold Bell Wright's books are practically the only ones sold in the smaller cities and towns even before they are placed on the market. Forthcoming announcements of Mr. Wright's latest book bring forth a deluge of orders from our booksellers all over the country. Once the first printing is exhausted, it is not long before the second and third and so on, sometimes up to the fifteenth printing, follows. In the instance of 'When a Man's a Man,' nearly one million and a half copies were sold. More than a million of 'The Mine With the Iron Door' were consumed in a short time. The record of 'The Re-creation of Brian Kent' is one million and a quarter and still selling rapidly. Excluding the bible, it can be safely said that Harold Bell Wright is the 'best-seller' of the age, and I cannot visualize anyone during this century surpassing this great writer's popularity."

Second Half of Huge F. B. O. Programme Now Under Way

THE second half of F. B. O.'s $5,500,000 program of production got under way with a bang at the company's Hollywood plant this week.

Not only were all F. B. O. units at work, but announcements of additions to the coming season's schedule provided a note of interest.

Contracts were signed by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O., and representatives of the estates of Gene Stratton Porter and Laura Jean Libby which give to F. B. O. exclusive film rights to the works of those world-famous authors, both of whom have died within the past year.

"Her Father's Daughter" will be the first of the Porter novels to be filmed. It will be directed by Leo Meehan, son-in-law of Mrs. Porter, who produced "A Girl of the Limberlost" for F. B. O. with such high success. Casting will begin at once and work start about April first.

"When His Love Grew Cold" will be the first of the Libby books produced. It is as yet undetermined who will direct or what players will be featured in this widely read novel.

Of especial interest to exhibitors and public, however, is the fact that at last the works of these famous writers are to reach the screen under fitting auspices. Together Mrs. Porter and Mrs. Libby probably had more readers than any two other authors in the world.

Under the supervision of B. P. Fineman, Evelyn Brent and Lefty Flynn launched new series for which high hopes are held. Miss Brent has a group of crook melodramas similar to "Silk Stocking Sal" and "Midnight Molly," and Flynn a new series of comedy-dramas along the Wallie Reid lines. Harry Garson will produce the Flynn productions.

Fred Thomson added another week's work to "That Devil Quemado!" which marks his return to the screen after several weeks' absence due to a fractured thigh. Del Andrews is directing. Gloria Hope is opposite the star, and his horse, "Silver King," is much in evidence.

Dick Talmadge completed "Tearing Through," a Chinatown melodrama. Hakima Canutt and Bob Custer, F. B. O.'s Western stars, are hard at work on "Empty Corrals" and "Go Easy, Young Fellow."

A note of interest was supplied by the announcement that Emory Johnson will resume work in a few weeks, filming a melodrama which, as he says, "will pay a tribute to the profession of journalism."

In the short subject field, F. B. O. is active with "The Pacemakers," by H. C. Witwer, co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara.

Virginia Lee Corbin, who has been prominently associated with F. B. O. pictures. Her work in "Broken Laws" brought her the unanimous acclaim of the critics, and it is expected she will make a reputation for herself in "Lilies of the Street," F. B. O.'s special for 1925.

Fox Film Corporation to Screen the Kyne Stories

BECAUSE Fox Film Corporation has a reputation for successfully transferring virile, outdoor stories to the screen, the announcement that Peter B. Kyne, one of America's favorite authors of red-blooded fiction, has, for a period covered by contact, given that company the exclusive screen rights to his multitudinous works, attracts more than passing interest.

A deal such as this between a writer of the standing of Mr. Kyne and a production organization like the Fox company is fraught with potentialities and should result in making splendid motion picture history.

Evidence of this can be readily seen by examination of the terms of the agreement. This contract, in itself, sets a precedent that is very likely to serve as a model for all other producers in their dealings with writers of fiction suitable for the screen.

In addition to having the exclusive privilege of adapting to motion pictures the Kyne stories, the contract contains the stipulation, made at the author's own suggestion, that he will assist in preparing the screen treatment of each of his stories to be picturized, cooperate in the writing of the continuity and titles, aid in the actual direction of the filming, and supervise the final cutting of the film.

Although setting a precedent as far as contracts between producing organizations and authors go, the contract between the Fox Film Corporation and Mr. Kyne is in line with the announced policy of that organization to secure closer cooperation between the writers of screen stories and its production units.

The idea behind this departure from the old way of doing business is to make the completed picture, when it is thrown on the screen, as much the author's own brainchild as the original story from his pen.

It is also expected to make obsolete the oft repeated phrase, "Oh, it wasn't anything like the book," heard so often when the picture commented on happened to be an adaptation from some widely circulation piece of literature. With the author following his story from one production unit to another, until it is the completed film, there is no reason why it cannot be brought to the screen as he conceived it.

Mr. Kyne has long advocated this. In a sensational speech a few years ago denouncing the arbitrary attitude of certain producers in this connection, he made it plain that he would not allow a single story of his to be picturized unless he was allowed to cooperate in its production to the fullest.

In an interview following the announcement that he had signed with the Fox company, Mr. Kyne said that the Fox company was the first to come to him and agree to this method. He said he was delighted with the spirit of cooperation shown by the Fox executives and their willingness to meet him half way. He stakes his reputation that the result will be a pleasant surprise to everybody concerned.

Mr. Kyne is no stranger to exhibitor or fan, and his name has box-office value on a par with those other two writers of outdoor fiction, Zane Grey and James Oliver Curwood. By the same token the exhibitor and fan are intimately known by Mr. Kyne, and he is a keen student of what will satisfy the one while entertaining the other.

Mr. Kyne disclaims all attempts to classify him as one of the "literary great."

"What the public wants is to be entertained," says Mr. Kyne, "and that is my principal thought when I sit down to my typewriter. That will be the thought I will bear in mind when writing for the movies."

While only tentative plans have been made regarding the use of Mr. Kyne's stories by the Fox company, it is safe to assume that Tom Mix will be starred in at least one of them. The others will also be special productions and announcements regarding them will be orthcoming as soon as their disposition is finally agreed on.

Red Seal Pictures on Broadway

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld selected Red Seal's latest Max Fleischer Inkwell release entitled "Ko-Ko the Barber" to play for Rivoli's anniversary week together with the "Thundering Herd."

Red Seal's "Do You Remember," one of its Gems of the Screen series is playing its pre-release run at the Rialto Theatre, Broadway, this week thus giving Red Seal double Broadway representation this week with one of its featurettes at the Rivoli and one at the Rialto.

Warner Brothers Open Broadcasting Station

Radio broadcasting station KFWB, Hollywood, Cal.—the first broadcasting station to be put in operation by a motion picture producing and distributing company and the last radio broadcasting station on the major wave lengths available for any operating company in the state of California—went on the air for the first time Wednesday evening, March 4th.

The station has been established and is being operated by Warner Bros. and is located at their big West Coast studios on Sunset Blvd., Hollywood.

With S. L. Warner on the Coast on general business connected with the company, three of the four Warner boys were present at the opening of the station; H. M. and Jack Warner spend most of their time at the studios.

Technically, KFWB is a 500 Watt Western Electric equipped broadcasting station working on a wave length of 252 meters. The plan is to have it on the air every evening from 6 o'clock until 11, Standard time. This means that the station will be working from 9 o'clock Eastern Standard time until 2 A. M., enabling such people in the East as are able to pick up Los Angeles to get the program after the big eastern stations have finished broadcasting.

"Daddy's Gone A-Hunting"

"Daddy's Gone A-Hunting" has opened on the Coast at Loew's Theatre in Los Angeles, where its reception by both critics and public equals the enthusiasm displayed when this new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer triumph played at the Capitol Theatre in New York. Frank Borzage directed this picture from the Zoe Akins stage success, adapted to the screen by Kenneth B. Clarke. Percy Marmont and Alice Joyce have the leading roles.

Patsy Ruth Miller Signed

Patsy Ruth Miller has been signed by Warner Bros. Word that Miss Miller had signed a long term contract was received from the West Coast studios a day or two ago. It was also announced that Miss Miller's first Warner Bros. picture will be "Rose of the World" from the novel by Kathleen Norris which is being put into production now for release as a part of next season's product.

New Picture for Rex

F. Richard Jones, supervising director of the Roach Studios, is now busily engaged helping Director Jackman in the work of assembling the final editorial version of the multiple-reel feature recently completed with Rex, the king of wild horses. The human cast of the production carries such names as Guinn Williams, Kathleen Collins and Christian J. Frank in the leading roles.

"Don't Pinch"

The title of the Bobby Vernon Comedy, "Brass Buttons" has been changed to "Don't Pinch." It will be an April release.

Scenes from "His Marriage Wow," in which Harry Langdon is starred by Mack Sennett for Pathe release.

Scenes from William DeMille's recently completed Paramount production, "Men and Women," featuring Richard Dix, Neil Hamilton, Claire Adams and Robert Edeson.

Off for the Orient

To add two more years to seven already spent in the Orient in the interest of popularizing the American film, Horace T. Clarke, Far Eastern representative of First National Pictures, and his newly acquired assistant, Clarence V. Hake, left March 10th for San Francisco, where they will depart aboard the S. S. President Cleveland, March 21st, bound for Kobe, Japan. Immediately upon arrival in Kobe, Clarke will establish permanent headquarters for the distribution of the First National product throughout the land of Nippon.

Colleen Moore in "Sally"

"Sally," the new Colleen Moore starring vehicle for First National, made from the Ziegfield musical comedy hit of the same name, has been finally completed and the negative rushed to the Rothacker Laboratories in Chicago where the release prints are to be made and finished by March 29th, the date on which "Sally" is scheduled to be released.

Hunt Selected to Play Lead

One of the richest prizes drawn by a screen actor in many years now attracts public attention to the venerable Jay Hunt, who has been jointly selected by William Fox, John Golden and John Ford to play the role of "Bill Jones" in the Fox screen production of the play "Lightnin'"; made forever renowned by the late Frank Bacon.

French Fashion Artist's Exhibit

Erte, one of the leading fashion designers of the world, held an exhibition of his drawings at the Hotel Madison, New York City, on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

Following his exhibition, Erte left for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios at Culver City, Cal., where he will direct the costume department, and design gowns for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stars.

Erte's exhibition at the Madison attracted wide attention in New York art circles and among society. Erte's drawings and designs composed a large part of the exhibition. Internationally famous as one of the foremost designers of French fashions, Erte's drawings appeared on the covers of such magazines as Harper's Bazar.

New York newspapers were remarkably lavish in the space they devoted to the celebrated artist, a Russian by birth but French by adoption, whose studio at Monte Carlo will be reproduced at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plant during the artist's sojourn in this country.

"The Snob Buster" Arrives

Rayart Pictures received from the Harry Brown units on the Coast the latest Reed Howes Production, "The Snob Buster." The picture was screened by the entire staff of Rayart, and of Richmount Pictures, Rayart's foreign distributors, and by the managerial and sales force of Merit Film Corporation, Rayart's New York distributors. All were loud in their praise of the new production which in the opinion of all of the executives surpassed the recent Howes Pictures "Super Speed" which has proved a decided hit.

"William Tell" at Cameo

"William Tell," which Emil Harder, the American director, produced in Switzerland with the co-operation of the Swiss Government, will open an indefinite engagement at the B. S. Moss Cameo Theatre in March, according to announcements from the producer this week. The feature is an adaptation of Frederick Von Schiller's historical drama. Max Conrad, the Swiss composer and musical director of the Stadt Theatre of Zurich, prepared the music score, basing it on the Rossini opera.

Ocean Voyage Off

Irene Rich has had another disappointment. Miss Rich was "all set" for a European vacation of two months when Warner Bros. gave her the star role in two important novels, one of them "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted."

Henry Ginsberg Organizes His Own Distributing Co.

FOLLOWING the recent announcement of the incorporation of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, there has been such speculative comments as to the objects of the newly formed company.

As the name implies, the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation will function purely as a sales and distribution medium, backing up its product with a progressive campaign of publicity and exploitation more pretentious than any that has heretofore been offered in the independent market.

Twelve productions will constitute the program of the corporation for the first year.

The outstanding features of the new company are the personality and executive ability of Henry Ginsberg, the ambitious scheme of exploitation, publicity and advertising of the product, the guaranteed excellence of the pictures and a highly specialized organization whose efforts will be devoted exclusively to efficiency in distribution and sales.

"While the notice of the incorporation was somewhat in advance of what my associates and myself intended," said Mr. Ginsberg, "inasmuch as one or two minor matters are still pending, our plans are complete and within the next two weeks we will announce to the trade the personnel of our organization and a detailed statement of our plans and product.

"The corporation will be solely a distributing company backed by the strongest campaign of exploitation and advertising that has ever been offered in the independent field. Our program for the year will consist of twelve productions, the first six being made by a unit well known for the excellence of its product of the past season, and the second six to be put out under a trade name that has not yet been definitely decided upon but a product that will be of uniform excellence.

"I am assured and carry that same assurance to the independent market as to the quality of these pictures by the stories, the titles, the selection of principals and cast, and the amount to be expended on each individual production, all these details having been submitted and approved by our company.

HENRY GINSBERG

"With this type of product and my sole efforts as an organization confined to efficient distribution and exploitation in the market, we are confident of success. My knowledge o fthe foreign and domestic field coupled with what we have to offer, has assured me of the undivided support of the principal exchanges throughout the world.

"In connection with the exploitation and advertising, we have engaged the services of a staff of exploitation and publicity men under the direction of Ray H. Leason. Our campaign will be a complete carry-on and carry through policy, embracing a national poster service in addition to many novelties for each and every picture. Our complete organization, the titles of our productions and other details will be announced very shortly.

"The independent market has become a highly specialized field and today is commercially sound. Heretofore production and sale has been coupled, this together with the incident worries of financing, has piled up additional costs and unsatisfactory distribution. With the formation of my company we hope to eliminate a great amount of this waste and overhead, and devoting our efforts solely to distribution of a carefully selected product on a quality rather than quantity basis, enable the independent market to benefit by this saving and specialization.

"We hope to have a highly specialized organization of selling representatives, backing up their efforts with effective exploitation aids. This force will thoroughly cover the entire country and at this early date we have been assured of our pictures being handled by the best independent exchanges, giving us a maximum distribution.

"Incidentally we are willing to finance any sound proposition that comes within the scope of our company, and which we feel would have a beneficial effect upon the industry.

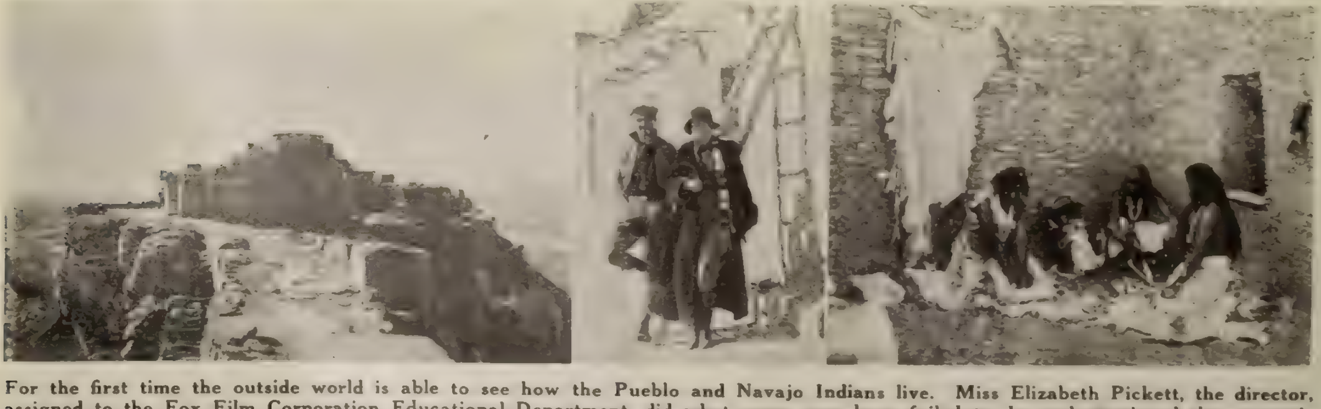
"The vitally important fact is that our organization will be enabled to guarantee to the independent market an exceptional and uniform quality of product with rock bottom distribution costs, the first really efficient distribution and exploitation."

Henry Ginsberg, head of the new organization, is a well known figure in the industry, his record with several of the largest organizations being especially brilliant. For the last eight months he has confined his efforts solely to the perfection of his own organization plans, so that with the opening of the new season the company will be ready to operate on a sound and thoroughly organized basis.

C. B. C. Buys Alaskan Picture

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is now functioning as a state-right distributor of independent pictures not made by itself.

It has purchased the Alaskan picture "Justice of the Far North," and will distribute it as the first picture of a number to be announced in the future. The picture was made in the northernmost reaches of Alaska and shows life up in the frozen regions in its true aspects.



For the first time the outside world is able to see how the Pueblo and Navajo Indians live. Miss Elizabeth Pickett, the director, assigned to the Fox Film Corporation Educational Department, did what many men have failed to do, and convinced the superstitious residents of New Mexico that no harm would come to them if they allowed her to photograph their dwellings. Miss Pickett with G. O. Post, her cameraman, and scenes that will be included in the two Fox Educational releases she made in "the land of the living past" are shown here

DISTRICT MANAGERS WHO WON FIRST NATIONAL-ESCHMANN MONTH PRIZES

First National Announces Eschmann Month Sales Winners

THE winners in the Eschmann Month Sales contest held last October by First National Pictures, Inc., was announced this week by W. J. Morgan, Stanley Hatch, A. W. Smith, Jr., and Charles M. Steele, assistants to Mr. Eschmann in the distribution department who originated and promoted the contest as a fitting recognition of the successful administration of their chief.

Cash prizes were offered to the three branches standing highest in the new business written during the period and played before February 1, 1925. Also to the three district managers standing highest. The entire personnel of the branch offices winning the prizes were to share in the awards.

The winners of the district prizes are: First prize, Joseph Skirboll, manager of the Western district; second prize, H. A. Bandy, manager of Central district; third prize, R. C. Seery, manager of Midwest district.

The prize winning branch offices are: First, Charles H. Muehlman, manager of the San Francisco branch; second, R. S. Wehrle, manager of the Pittsburg branch. There was a tie for third place in the branches—Thomas B. Spry, manager of the Boston branch, and Robert Smeltzer, manager of the Washington branch, having the same percentage of increase.

A fixed cash prize was offered to the assistant manager, the salesmen, the booker and the cashier of each branch coming within the prize money. In addition, other employes in the winning branches shared in the prize money, those in the branch standing first being given an additional weeks' salary; those in the branch second, 75 per cent. of a week's salary; and those in the branch standing third, 50 per cent. of a week's salary.

Marie Prevost in Big Roles

Marie Prevost has just plucked two choice roles from the novels purchased by Warner Bros. to be made into next year's Screen Classics. Just as soon as she has completed her work as the naughty wife in Ernst Lubitsch's newest Warner Bros.' comedy, she will move her makeup box over to Harry Beaumont's set, there to enact the role of Rose Kirby, the central figure in Kathleen Norris' romantic tale, "Rose of the World."

Upon completion of this role Miss Prevost is scheduled to play Connamara, the effervescent and modern girl in "Bobbed Hair," the novel by twenty famous authors which was written by an arrangement between Warner Bros. and G. P. Putnam Sons, who are bringing out the book after it has just finished running serially in Collier's Weekly.

Norma Talmadge in "The Lady"

Volume of Business Exceeds "Secrets," First National Reports

Reports being received by First National from first run exhibitors who have shown the new Norma Talmadge picture, "The Lady," reveal that this production is bringing more money into the box office than did Miss Talmadge's previous most successful picture, "Secrets."

"The Lady" is highly praised by the exhibitors as well as by the newspaper critics in all of the cities where it has been shown and the public is attesting its enthusiasm by the money they are paying at the box office to see it.

From all present indications "The Lady" will gross more than "Secrets" and that production was one of last season's biggest bookers and is still going at a fast clip.

Letters and telegrams received by First National from first run exhibitors who have already shown the picture agree that it is the best thing Miss Talmadge has done for the screen.

"Heart of a Siren"

A print of Sawyer-Lubin's new Barbara La Marr picture, in which Conway Tearle is co-starred with her, "Heart of a Siren," was shown for First National officials last week. It is declared by those who saw it to be Miss La Marr's best picture. It was adapted from William J. Hurlburt's stage play, "Hail and Farewell." Phil Rosen, who directed "Abraham Lincoln" for Al and Ray Rockett, directed "Heart of a Siren," and has made an excellent job of it.

"The Man Without a Country" Now "As No Man Has Loved"

THE title of the New William Fox production "The Man Without a Country" has been changed to "As No Man Has Loved."

The change became effective March 9 at the Central Theatre, New York, where the picture is entering its second month.

A statement from the Fox Film Corporation explains that the title was changed to avoid confusion arising from the fact that the title "The Man Without a Country" had been used before on productions filmed many years ago.

The new film is one of Mr. Fox's most ambitious productions and its popularity in New York has occasioned an attempt to bring the old versions out as reissues. Although the new film is based on Edward Everett Hale's story, it is really a glorification of the famous work.

In announcing the title change, it was pointed out that the decision was made "in fairness to the theatre going public and to meet the demands of exhibitors throughout the country."

"By giving the production a new title," declared Fox officials, "we have avoided any confusion that may arise, thus offering our picture to the public as the big, distinctive production that it is."

First announcement of the title change was made in the New York newspapers in order that the movie-goers of that city would be properly informed. The new title made its first appearance at the Central Theatre on Monday and by Wednesday it was firmly established.

Before making the title change newspaper critics in New York, who have been so lavish in their praise of the picture, and exhibitors throughout the country, were consulted.

"The vast array of literary classics which contain material for motion pictures of the highest grade, not only enthralling but cultural in their character, present a problem to producers," according to Fred McIsaac, writing in the New York Evening Bulletin, "that is now faced by William Fox who has changed the title of "The Man Without a Country" to "As No Man Has Loved."

The classics are unprotected by copyright laws, which only cover a period of from forty to fifty years. A great work may lie unread and forgotten until some enterprising producer determines to risk a fortune in putting it upon the screen. Then from all quarters come those who wish to profit upon what others have made profitable.

In the case of D. W. Griffith there was the celebrated photoplay of the French Revolution which he called, "Orphans of the Storm." He had chosen the "Two Orphans" and as soon as it was known films of "Two Orphans" came rolling in from all sides.

It happened that there were two forgotten films of "The Man Without a Country."

This is the problem of any producer who wishes to film the works of any of the celebrated writers of the past. They have no legal protection and their efforts will result in other and inferior productions flooding the market to profit by their exploitation.

Warners to Launch National Advertising Campaign Soon

WARNER BROTHERS are about to launch an extensive national advertising campaign. The latest and most significant development on the ninth floor of 1600 Broadway, New York, is the arrival there of Myer Lesser, president of the Blaine-Tompson advertising agency, with headquarters in Cincinnati.

Mr. Lesser is the man who plotted, planned and conducted the extensive national advertising campaign for the Warner Brothers a year or two ago when their copy "broke" in a spectacular way in a thousand of the leading newspapers and magazines throughout the country. He has taken off his coat in his own offices in the Warner suite of 1600 Broadway and is now engaged in preparing another national advertising campaign for the company.

That the Warner Brothers are about to tell their 1925-26 story in a bigger and more elaborate way than ever before admits of but one logical conclusion, namely, that the story they have in mind is a bigger and more important story than they have previously had to tell.

In the announcements which they have made during the past few weeks Warner Brothers have indicated that their future activities are to be particularly important. Lowell Sherman, among the most prominent of Broadway stage stars and an actor whose value in motion pictures has been found tremendous, has been definitely signed to be starred in a number of "Classics of the Screen." Matt Moore, Clive Brook, Huntly Gordon and Kenneth Harlan are other players which have been placed under long term contracts under the new Warner Brothers plan to make their roster of players always available for their pictures the best on the Pacific Coast. And there is another well authenticated rumor that the same company is about to announce the acquisition of one of the biggest bets in the acting profession.

It has been announced that the Warners are to make about twenty-six pictures for 1925-26. "Bobbed Hair," now running serially in Collier's and attracting international attention because of its novelty in that it has been written by no less than twenty of the best known living authors, is perhaps the biggest story which the company has yet announced for next year. That some of the other books purchased are by authors like Kathleen Norris, E. Phillips Oppenheim and Arthur Somers Roche justifies the strongest kind of advertising.

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Projector Instructions

G. T. Baldy, Projectionist, Rosetown, Saskatchewan, Canada, has asked that I publish instructions for assembling and adjusting the Power's solid pin intermittent movement.

I do NOT agree with the projectionist attempting such a stunt, as he is not, except in rare cases, equipped with either the mechanical skill or the tools necessary to successfully accomplish such a job—to do it in a way that will result in perfect operation of the parts.

I have always and still do STRONGLY recommend that every theatre have one spare projector framing carriage, with all parts assembled and adjusted at the factory, so that when necessity arises the spare carriage may be slipped into place and the defective one be returned to the factory, insured parcel post, for repair and adjustment. THIS IS THE WISE COURSE, and THE CHEAPEST COURSE IN THE END.

However, very well knowing that projectionists do attempt the installation of new intermittent parts, I have thought it best to request the Nicholas Power engineering department, through Lester Bowen, its head, to prepare full, detailed instructions for both solid and roller pin movements, to the end that those who insist upon doing the almost impossible, may at least have exact, correct instructions as to how to proceed.

The instructions have been prepared in accordance with my request. Here they are:

Instructions For Assembling Power's Solid Pin Intermittent Movement

Before removing the old intermittent parts from the framing carriage, first remove the gate, aperture plate and lower apron with its guide rollers. It is also necessary to remove the take-up pulley, gear and spindle, also the large No. 640 gear and spindle. In order to remove the No. 640 gear and spindle it is necessary to take off the front plate, after which the set collar holding the No. 641 spindle in position can be loosened. The No. 640 gear and No. 641 spindle can now be removed from the main frame bearing. All parts of the framing carriage are now easily accessible.

Part No. 662—Set collar for pin cross spindle.

Part No. 666—Intermittent pin cross and spindle.

Part No. 667—Intermittent sprocket.

Part No. 670—Eccentric bushing (large).

Part No. 671—Eccentric bushing (small).

Part No. 675—Cam and spindle.

Part No. 676—Set collar for cam spindle.

These are the major parts of the intermittent movement which are assembled in the framing carriages and will be referred to in these instructions by their names and part numbers.

To Remove Old Parts

To remove the old parts from the framing carriage first remove the oil case cover of the intermittent casing, after which the flywheel should be removed from the end of the cam spindle. The flywheel and flywheel pinion are keyed to the cam spindle and can be pulled from the end of the spindle after the large set screw which holds the flywheel in place has been removed. After the flywheel has been removed from the end of the cam spindle, loosen the set collar No. 676. The cam and cam spindle can now be withdrawn from the framing carriage. After the cam and cam spindle has been removed loosen the set screw holding the large eccentric bushing in position. The pin cross, large bushing, the No. 662 set collar and intermittent sprocket can now be withdrawn together from the framing carriage. The only part remaining now is the small eccentric bushing and this can be very easily removed after loosening the screw which holds it in position.

Bluebook School

Question No. 241—Give us your idea of the best location for the rewinder and other various necessary projection room devices other than the projectors themselves. Don't just describe your own lay-out, but consider the matter from the standpoint of convenience, safety and general utility.

Question No. 242—What importance attaches to having the two elements of the rewinder in perfect line with each other? IS YOUR OWN REWINDER IN PERFECT LINE??

Question No. 243—How would you arrange for making splices at the rewinder table?

Question No. 244—Give your views as to speed of rewinding.

Question No. 245—Give your ideas as to the general equipment and adjustment of the rewinder. Think this over a moment before you answer.

Strip Framing Carriage

The framing carriage is now stripped of all the intermittent parts and the installation of new parts can be made. Before assembling the new parts the cam spindle should be placed in position in the framing carriage in order to determine whether it has a proper fit. The spindle should turn freely but not loosely in the bearings of the framing carriage. The large and small eccentric bushings should also be placed in the framing carriage in order to make sure that they fit properly. It is essential that both the large and small bushings fit snugly in the framing carriage bearings.

Fit Intermittent Sprocket

The intermittent sprocket should now be fitted to the pin cross. On the pin cross, located between two of the arms, a punch mark will be noted. This punch mark indicates the large and of the taper pin holes in the pin cross spindle. The intermittent sprocket has a file mark on the hub between the two taper pin holes. This file mark indicates the large end of the pin holes in the sprocket hub. There is also a scratch mark on one end of the intermittent sprocket. The marked end of the intermittent sprocket should be placed on the pin cross first. The sprocket when placed on the pin cross in the proper manner should have a snug fit when the pin holes are in alignment. After making certain that the intermittent sprocket fits the pin cross properly place the large bushing No. 670 on the pin cross spindle. Next place the No 662 set collar on the pin cross spindle.

Next Step

The intermittent sprocket can now be placed in position making sure that the marked end is placed on the spindle first and that the punch mark on the pin cross and the file mark on the sprocket hub are in alignment. Carefully work the sprocket into position until the pin holes line up from side to side. The pins can now be very easily inserted in the pin holes. The pins should be pulled tight by grasping the small end with a pair of pliers and pulling the pin into position with a twisting motion. Do not attempt to drive the pin into place with a pin punch or a hammer as this will spring the pin cross spindle. The pins can be seated much more firmly by pulling into position as explained. After the pins are securely in place the ends should be clipped with a pair of end cutting pliers or other tool suitable for this purpose.

Large Eccentric Bushing

The large eccentric bushing, together with the sprocket and set collar, can now be placed in position in the framing carriage, after which the cam and spindle should be slipped into position and the large eccentric bushing should be adjusted to bring the pins of the pin cross up against the cam ring. This adjustment is made by inserting a pin punch (or the special adjusting tool which is supplied by the Nicolas Power Company for this purpose), into one of the two holes in the eccentric bushing which are provided for this purpose. In adjusting the pin cross against the cam ring turn the eccentric bushing upward in order that the pins will bear against the outside face of the cam ring. This adjustment should be made so that the pins of the pin cross will rest firmly against the cam ring and yet allow the cam to revolve freely. The large eccentric bushing should now be locked in position by the set screw which holds it in place.

Small Eccentric Bushing

The small eccentric bushing should now be placed in its position in the framing carriage. This bushing has a screw driver slot in one end. The slotted end should be toward the outside of the framing carriage. The end of the bushing should now be brought up against the pin cross spindle and the bushing should be turned in its bearing by inserting a screw driver in the slot until the pin cross spindle will enter the bearing freely. Make sure that the edge of the small eccentric bushing lines up evenly with the inside face of its bearing in the framing carriage. The small bushing can now be locked in position by tightening the set screw which is provided in the framing carriage for this purpose. Before locking the small bushing, however, make certain that the pin cross turns freely.

The pin cross spindle, set collar, sprocket and eccentric bushings are now installed in the framing carriage. The pin cross, however, is free to move from end to end. The pin cross should be pressed firmly against the inside face of the eccentric bushing and the sprocket should now be tested for alignment from side to side. It is necessary that the sprocket teeth rest evenly between the flanges of the intermittent idler roller and the sprocket teeth from side to side should be equally distant from the center of this roller.

The intermittent idler roller can as a general rule be used as a safe guide for aligning the intermittent sprocket. It is possible, however, that the idler roller bracket may be bent or sprung out of position. In this case it is necessary to align the sprocket by its position with relation to the aperture and upper and lower feed sprockets. This can be done by placing a piece of film on the upper and lower feed sprockets and pulling it tight across the aperture and intermittent sprocket. The intermittent sprocket can now be placed in the correct position with relation to the sprocket holes in the film. The sprocket teeth should be spaced equally distant from side to side of the center of the film. Make sure in making this adjustment that the upper and lower feed sprockets are resting firmly against the shoulder of the bearings in the mechanism main frame. If the intermittent sprocket does not line up properly when the shoulder of the pin cross is resting against the inside face of the large eccentric bushing the set screw holding the eccentric bushing should be loosened, after which the bushing can be shifted to the proper position by tapping from either side, being careful that the adjustment of the pins of the pin cross against the cam ring is not disturbed.

The large eccentric bushing should now be locked in place by retightening the set screw which holds it in position. After this adjustment has been made the No. 662 set collar should be brought against the outside face of the eccentric bushing and adjusted so that there is no end play of the intermittent sprocket and pin cross. Care should be taken after tightening the set screw in the No. 662 collar that the pin cross revolves freely in the eccentric bushings.

The cam and spindle should now be placed in the framing carriage. Placing the No. 676 set collar on the cam spindle between the two bearings in the framing carriage, now adjust the shoulder of the cam firmly against the bearing in the framing carriage. The No. 676 set collar should now be brought up against the outside face of this bearing and locked in position so that there is no end play of the cam spindle. Make sure that the cam and spindle revolve freely.

Locking Flywheel

After the No. 676 set collar has been locked in position the key for holding the flywheel and pinion should now be placed in position and the flywheel and pinion placed on the end of the cam spindle and locked in position with the large set screw which is tapped into the end of the spindle.

The oil case cover should now be replaced making sure that the face of the cover and framing carriage are perfectly clean and that none of the old shellac is left on the surfaces. The cover can be sealed by placing a small amount of shellac on the surfaces of the cover and framing carriage before tightening the screws holding the framing carriage cover.

Now replace the aperture, lower apron, gate, take-up pulley gear and spindle, No. 640 gear and spindle, and the mechanism front plate.

The intermittent casing should now be filled with "Powerline." This lubricant is furnished by the Nicholas Power Company and is manufactured especially for lubricating the solid pin intermittent movement. "Powerline" will be found to give better results than any other lubricant which can be used for the solid pin movement.

Instructions For Assembling Power's Roller Pin Intermittent Movement

Before removing the old intermittent parts from the framing carriage, first remove the gate aperture plate and lower apron with its guide rollers. It is also necessary to remove the take-up pulley, gear and spindle, also the large No. 640 gear and spindle. In order to remove the No. 640 gear and spindle it is necessary to take off the front plate, after which the set collar holding the No. 641 spindle in position can be loosened. The No. 640 gear and No. 641 spindle can now be removed from the main frame bearing. All parts of the framing carriage are now easily accessible.

Part No. 675B—Cam and cam spindle.
Part No. 675A—Guard plate.
Part No. 676—Set collar.
Group F—Assembly, consisting of parts number:
Part No. 666C—Pin cross and spindle with rollers and 667A taper pins.
Part No. 666B—Oil slinger.
Part No. 756—Washer.
Part No. 670B—Eccentric bushing.
Part No. 670A—Thrust collar.
Part No. 667—Intermittent sprocket.

These are the major parts of the intermittent movement which are assembled in the framing carriage and will be referred to in these instructions by their names and part numbers.

To remove the old parts from the framing carriage first remove the oil case cover and gasket from the intermittent casing, after which remove the flywheel and flywheel pinion from the end of the cam spindle. The flywheel and flywheel pinion are keyed to the cam spindle and can be pulled from the end of the spindle after the large set screw which holds the flywheel in place has been removed. After the flywheel and flywheel pinion have been taken from the end of the cam spindle loosen the set collar No. 676. The cam and cam spindle can now be withdrawn from the framing carriage. After the cam and cam spindle have been removed loosen the set screw holding the eccentric bushing in position. The entire Group F Assembly can now be withdrawn from the framing carriage as a unit.

The framing carriage is now stripped of all the intermittent parts and the installation of new parts can be made. Before assembling the new parts the cam spindle should be placed in position in the framing carriage in order to determine whether it has a proper fit. The spindle should turn freely but not loosely in the bearings of the framing carriage. The eccentric bushing should also be placed in the framing carriage in order to make sure that it fits properly. It is essential that this buching fit snugly in the framing carriage bearing.

> Note—If the Group F Assembly has been purchased as a unit and is to be installed in the framing carriage, the entire Group F can be fitted into the framing carriage bearing in the manner described covering the eccentric bushing in the foregoing paragraph. If the parts of the Group F Assembly are purchased separately proceed with their installation as follows:

The intermittent sprocket should now be fitted to the pin cross. On the pin cross, located between two of the arms, a punch mark will be noted. This punch mark indicates the large end of the taper pin holes in the pin cross spindle. The intermittent sprocket has a file mark on the hub between the two taper pin holes. This file mark indicates the large end of the pin holes in the sprocket hub. There is also a scratch mark on one end of the intermittent sprocket. The marked end of the intermittent sprocket should be placed on the pin cross first. The sprocket when placed on the pin cross in the proper manner should have a snug fit when the pin holes are in alignment. After making certain that the intermittent sprocket fits the pin cross properly place the No. 666B oil slinger in position on the shoulder of the pin cross. The No. 756 washer can now be placed on the spindle next to the shoulder of the pin cross, next place the No. 670B bushing in position on the spindle, then place the No. 670A thrust collar in position on the No. 670B bushing.

Place in Position

The intermittent sprocket can now be placed in position making sure that the marked end is placed on the spindle first and that the punch mark on the pin cross and the file mark on the sprocket hub are in alignment. Carefully work the sprocket into position until the pin holes line up from side to side. The pins can now be very easily inserted in the pin holes. The pins should be pulled tight by grasping the small end with a pair of pliers and pulling the pin into position with a twisting motion. Do not attempt to drive the pin into place with a pin punch or a hammer as this will spring the pin cross spindle. The pins can be seated much more firmly by pulling into position as explained. After the pins are securely in place the ends should be clipped with a pair of end cutting pliers or other tool suitable for this purpose, after which the protruding ends of the pins can be filed smooth with a fine file. This completes the Group F assembly. The No. 670A thrust collar should now be brought tightly against the intermittent sprocket and tightened in this position by the two set screws which are provided for this purpose. The No. 670A thrust collar should be set so as to eliminate all end play of the No. 670B bushing but care should be taken that the pin cross and sprocket revolve freely in the bushing.

The entire Group F assembly can now be placed in position in the framing carriage, after which the cam and spindle should be slipped into position and the eccentric bushing should be adjusted to bring the pins of the pin cross up against the cam ring. This adjustment is made by inserting a pin punch (or the special adjusting tool which is supplied by the Nicholas Power Company for this purpose) into one of the two holes in the eccentric bushing which are provided for this purpose. In adjusting the pin cross against the cam ring turn the eccentric bushing upward in order that the pins will bear against the outside face of the cam ring. This adjustment should be made so that the pins of the pin cross will rest firmly against the cam ring and yet allow the cam to revolve freely. The large eccentric bushing should now be locked in position by the set screw which holds it in place.

The intermittent sprocket should now be tested for alignment from side to side. It is necessary that the sprocket teeth rest evenly between the flanges of the intermittent idler roller and the sprocket teeth from side to side should be equally distant from the center of this roller.

Idler Roller a Guide

The intermittent idler roller can as a general rule be used as a safe guide for aligning the intermittent sprocket. It is possible, however, that the idler roller bracket may be bent or sprung out of position. In this case it is necessary to align the sprocket by its position with relation to the aperture and upper and lower feed sprockets. This can be done by placing a piece of film on the upper and lower feed sprockets and pulling it tight across the aperture and intermittent sprocket. The intermittent sprocket can now be placed in the correct position with relation to the sprocket holes in the film. The sprocket teeth should be spaced equally distant from side to side of the center of the film. Make sure in making this adjustment that the upper and lower feed sprockets are resting firmly against the shoulder of the bearings in the mechanism main frame. If the intermittent sprocket does not line up properly the set screw holding the eccentric bushing should be loosened, after which the bushing can be shifted to the proper position by tapping from either side, being careful that the adjustment of the pins of the pin cross against the cam ring is not disturbed. After this adjustment has been made lock the eccentric bushing securely in position by retightening the set screw.

The cam, guard plate and cam spindle should now be placed in the framing carriage. Placing the No. 676 set collar on the cam spindle between the two bearings in the framing carriage, now adjust the shoulder of the cam firmly against the bearing in the framing carriage. The No. 676 set collar should now be brought up against the outside face of this bearing and locked in position so that there is no end play of the cam spindle. Make sure that the cam and spindle revolve freely.

Locking Flywheel

After the No. 676 set collar has been locked in position the key for holding the flywheel and pinion should now be placed in position and the flywheel pinion and flywheel placed on the end of the cam spindle and locked in position with the large set screw which is tapped into the end of the spindle.

The oil case cover and gasket should now be replaced, making sure that the face of the cover and framing carriage are perfectly clean. The screws holding the framing carriage cover should now be tightened securely.

Now replace the aperture, lower apron, gate, take-up pulley gear and spindle, No. 640 gear and spindle, and the mechanism front plate.

The intermittent casing should now be filled with Lubricant for Roller Pin Intermittent Movement. This lubricant is furnished by the Nicholas Power Company and is manufactured especially for lubricating the roller pin intermittent movement.

Note—Do not use "Powerline" for the roller pin movement. "Powerline" is intended for the solid pin intermittent movement and will seriously damage and may ruin the roller pin movement.

Some Stunt

Wm. Guth, financial secretary and Treasurer of the International Projection Association, traveled clear across New York City to show me the latest type of film outrage, perpetrated, apparently, by the Film Board of Trade. He had cut one of these OUTRAGES from the end of each reel of a seven reel feature.

As the picture shows, it consists of a salmon-colored, gummed sticker, four frames long by 9/32 of an inch wide. On it is printed "Official Marker"—Film Board of Trade.

Can you beat that! The exchanges kick about the men punching holes in film, and then they themselves UTTERLY RUIN FOUR FRAMES AT A CLATTER WITH THIS FOOL STICKER. Of course, projectionists will promptly amputate them, as no man having pride in his work would permit such a thing as that to appear on his screen. Next! The Film Board of Trade seems determined to side-step all intelligent action, and to dig up as nearly as possible an equivalent for the thing it protests against.

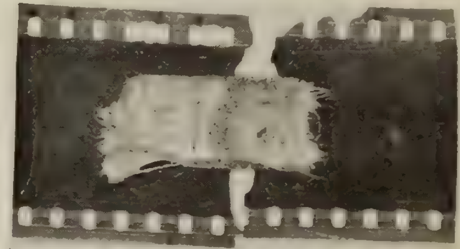
A New Scheme

Charles W .Lewis, Mgr. I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, N. Y., sends in a brand new stunt in the way of a film splice. Don't know as to whether its inventor has applied for patent, so be very careful about using it. Presumably the letter containing this was sent to another department. I have its tail end, which reads:

> Knowing that friend Richardson is waging a campaign against film damage, I attach a sample "splice" taken from the feature "The Mask of Lopez," out of an Albany exchange, which I think ought to win the pink derby. Our service has been exceptionally good, and I do not think that F. B. O. is entirely to blame for this, except that the inspection must have been pretty lax to permit such a thing to slip through without correction.



I presumed that if this wonderful idea is duly patented, the stock of adhesive tape manufacturers will be a good buy, because there certainly ought to be a big increase in demand for that commodity.

There is and can be no legitimate excuse for an exchange sending out such a thing as this, except in case of emergency when it is impossible to inspect and repair films and get them to the theatre in time for exhibition. In a case of that sort, inspection may be waived, provided a card of warning be inserted in each reel can, advising that the films have not been inspected, instructing the projectionist to examine and repair them, rendering bill to the exchange for service for the time consumed doing the exchange inspectors' work, at whatever rate per hour the projectionist receives for his regular work.

Dangerous

Sending out such a thing as this without warning ENDANGERS THE PROJECTIONIST AND EVERYTHING IN THE PROJECTION ROOM, because it is a direct invitation to fire. It also endangers the life of every one in the audience, because if there is a fire and panic God only knows what may happen. It is a direct invitation to the ruination of goodness knows how many feet of film, because the projectionist, has the RIGHT to presume the films to have been inspected and repaired, also has the RIGHT to presume them in fit condition for projection as received, unless the note of warning spoken of accompanies them.

This classic consists of a bit of half-inch-wide surgeon's adhesive tape holding the two ends together—or at least within 1/4 inch of each other, AND THAT "GOT BY" THE EXCHANGE INSPECTOR. Well, even at the zip-a-ty-zip speed of "inspection" used in many exchanges, I think Miss I. N. Spector must have been readjusting her gum when this first-aid-to-wounded-film went through.

Albany is the Home of The Politician, and one of our cities where, in the past at least, Op'raters hold forth in all their pristine glory. I am therefore well pleased to hear that your Albany exchange ordinarily supplies "exceptionally good service." Every city ought to have something which is exceptionally good.

A Li'l Stunt

Glenn G. Wallace, Projectionist Jefferson Theatre, Muskegon, Michigan, comes out of obscurity at a gallop, thus:

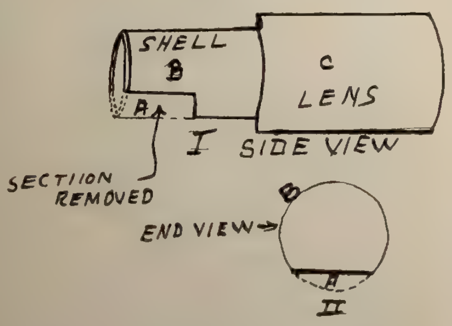
Dear Friend Richardson: After having read our department for several years, have just decided to limber up the old Corona, and "show my ign-runce as "Dinty" Moore puts it.

Have been projecting motion pictures for about five years and am at present employed at a vaudeville-picture theatre which was constructed a bit more than a year ago. Have two Power 6B improved projectors, a C4 Brinkert spot lamp and a 35-35 ampere Fort Wayne motor-generator set. The projectors are equipped with Snaplite projection lenses, and I'm going to pass along to the "boys" a li'l stunt I pulled off to adapt the extension shells, or tubes which come along with the Snaplite for use on a Power. They are specially made for use on Simplex or Power projectors where the conditions require an exceptionally long focal length projection lens.

On the Power these extension shells, or tubes, which are designed to screw on the barrel of the lens, come into contact with the shaft which connects the shutter shaft gears with the large idler gear on the flywheel side of the mechanism. To avoid this interference, proceed as follows:

How To Do It

Screw the shells on the barrel of the lens, having in some convenient way marked the exact position of the lens when the screen image is in sharp focus. Replace the lens in its jacket and shove it back until the shell strikes the obstructing shaft. Next measure the distance the lens lacks of going back to its correct focusing position, and reaching through the projector aperture, using a suitable sharp-pointed tool, make points on circumference of the shell even with, or a trifle above the top of the shaft.



Next take the lens out remove shell from lens and, using a fine-tooth hack saw, cut out the section of the shell which prevents the lens from being brought back to correct position for focusing, as per attached sketch, in which dotted lines indicate section sawed out.

Having done this you will find the screen image to have considerable added sharpness, as the shell collects the stray light rays projected through the aperture, which would otherwise be lost, form a halo around the outside of the lens barrel, or be projected to the front wall of the projection room.

Record Stunt

Be sure to cover the bright raw edge of metal left by the hack saw with a good-non-gloss paint, else they will reflect the rays which strike them back toward the aperture. An excellent "home brew" paint may be made by dissolving a phonograph record in a can or jar of tightly sealed denatured alcohol. One record to one pint of alcohol is about right. Break up the record as fine as you can and place the receptacle where you can and will give it an occasional shake. It will take about two days to dissolve enough for use. This also makes an excellent paint for rotating shutters made from cardboard, port shutters and for the front projection room wall.

I hope these few stunts will be of value to some of the men, if you think it worthy of publication. I myself get lots of good hints from the department. I expect to send in some Bluebook School answers soon.

New One

Such things are always worth printing. That phonograph-record-paint stunt is a brand new one. Painting the raw edge where it was sawed is important, yes, but you are in error in thinking it is because light rays will be reflected back toward the aperture. Rays reflected in that direction would, I think, do no particular harm, BUT rays also would probably be reflected toward and into the lens itself, and that is very muchly something else again. Those rays might and probably would do very real harm.

As to the shell adding sharpness to the screen image—well, I don't see just why that should be. The original idea of the lens shell extension in the Simplex was to prevent the film from piling up in the light ray in case something went wrong—if the intermittent didn't intermit because the film had broken between it and the upper sprocket. In that case, unless the projector be promptly stopped, the upper sprocket would of course keep poking film down into the mechanism casing, and without the protecting covering of the light ray, you could see what would, or might happen.

Of course the casing does confine the light in cases where the light beam has greater diameter than the lens at the point of junction, but I rather doubt if the escaping light does much harm, except that it is possible some of it might escape through the openings in the Power mechanism and reach the projection room wall.

Well, anyhow, provided the shell interior be kept well painted with non-gloss paint, it cannot do any harm, and may have advantages. What do the rest of you chaps think about that? It is discussion that brings out the truth. Also John Doe out in San Diego, California, likes to know just what Bill Doe (no relation) up in Portland, Maine, thinks about things, and wice wersa. The editor's remarks very often express only his individual opinion, which may or may not be correct. Only where he makes a positive statement does he express an opinion from what he believes to be known fact.

Why Don't They Help?

In commenting on his visit to the American Projection Society, Arthur Gray, Boston, made these remarks:

> It really seems a shame that of all the projection talent gathered in that room that night, not one of them has, publicly at least, given any aid, encouragement or effort to the furthering of the work of the Bluebook School. The work of the American Projection Society and the work of your department is so very closely allied that I fail to see why that very intelligent group of men should have apparently missed such a splendid opportunity to both acquire and to disseminate projection knowledge.

I understand just how brother Gray feels about it, but have not myself been in the least surprised, nor have I felt at all badly about it. One who does not know the men very well is apt to get himself fooled in a matter of that sort. As a matter of fact, out of something like a thousand to twelve hundred projectionists and operators in New York City, not one has yet taken the trouble to answer one of the Bluebook School questions, NOR DID I EXPECT THEY WOULD. The New York City man is a peculiar institution. I know him, and know what to expect of him.

However, one really would suppose that high grade men—such as the American Projestion Society is composed of would, if for no other reason than their interest in the advancement of knowledge, give active aid to such a thing as the Bluebook School. Their failure to do so is, I think, mostly a matter of inertia. They don't like to move. Actually answering those questions every week is work, and work which they don't have to do. Most of them rather feel that they are near the top in projection matters, and all they now need is to just keep up with the procession—which is a wrong view, but one I cannot find it in my heart to blame them much for.

They may take this tip from me:

The man who confines his energies to merely keeping up with the procession eventually falls behind it. That is true in every case.

The A. P. S. men know the large value of the Bluebook School, and many of them—perhaps even all of them, are following the questions and answers very closely. But they don't and won't bestir themselves, as they really should, to give active assistance in the work. Well, anyhow they are not by any manner of means alone in that. There should be at least fifteen thousand answers to the questions every week—I'm truly glad there are not.

PROJECTION AND ITS IMPORTANCE

By F. H. RICHARDSON

FROM THE TRANSACTIONS SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS

The ultimate success of any production depends to a very great extent on the impression received by the audience. Imperfect projection reduces the value of any production. Neither producers, directors, or players make public protest against bad projection. Poor projection is to the motion picture the same as house paint and burlap upholstering would be to an automobile

THE only reason I have expended time and energy in the preparation of this paper is that I am, and for many years have been, very firmly convinced that great harm is done the motion picture industry through and by reason of the failure of producers, exhibitors and theatre managers to appreciate, or I might perhaps better say, to understand the relative effect of high class projection and projection which is not high class upon the screen image, the viewing of which is after all the thing upon which the whole industry depends for its very existence. The success of any production, in so far as concerns any audience, depends upon two things, viz.: What the audience sees upon the screen, which includes all those various things going to make up the finished product, and how it sees them, which includes all those various things which go to make up what we call the "presentation of the picture." That projection is the one most important item in presentation no one will deny, and that projection has very much to do with "how it sees them" surely no one will dispute.

Come let us reason together.

Surely there are few, if any men, connected with the motion picture industry in responsible position who will question, much less attempt to dispute, the two following propositions together, or either of them singly:

(a) Imperfect projection will reduce the attractiveness to the audience of the finest production ever made, and the reduction will be in exact proportion to the fault in projection, which may be sufficient to, so far as the individual audience is concerned, ruin the production.

(b) While it must be freely granted that high class projection cannot possibly remedy such faults as may be inherent in any production, it may nevertheless serve to send an audience away better satisfied with a production which in itself is not a good one, or which even is a poor one, than with a production which is in itself high class, but which has its inherent good qualities largely nullified and made unattractive by faults in its projection.

Put in another way, with high class projection the really good production becomes a brilliantly beautiful thing which sends audiences away with words of praise, so that the play advertises itself in the very best possible way, whereas the same production may either not please its audiences at all, or may even put them in a more or less dissatisfied frame of mind, if it be not well projected.

On the other hand if the production of only mediocre merit be poorly projected it will be made to appear very poor indeed, whereas if it be well projected its inherent faults may and probably will be in a considerable degree redeemed in the eyes of the audience.

I believe the foregoing will not be seriously questioned, much less disputed by any man conversant with the facts, and if we grant what has been said to be true, then it becomes difficult to understand why so little attention is given the matter of placing projection in the hands of high class men—men of real ability and brains who will bend every effort to the placing of the finished product of the industry before the purchaser, the public, in the best possible way.

We find some productions ruined, insofar as has to do with the individual audience by discolorations of the light, due entirely to carelessness, by overspeeding, which is utterly ruinous of artistic results; by dim lighting, by glare spots near the screen; by unsteadiness caused by failure of the management to provide suitable and necessary repairs; by carelessness in the matter of focus; by dirty lenses or lenses wrongly assembled and by other faults which have no manner of valid excuse. This sort of thing is all too common and it seems an astounding thing that neither producer, director, player or any one else has ever voiced any adequate sort of public protest. The producer seems either to have no interest at all, or at least very little interest in what happens to his productions once they have left his hands. He will labor hard to product the best possible photoplay, and will expend money lavishly to that end. Once completed, however, he will not, or up to date has not made any adequate effort to get it projected in a way which will give it a one hundred per cent value to audiences, upon whose approval he must depend for its success.

The director insists that his name be blazoned forth upon the screen, that he who runs may read, though he must well know that his work will, in a very large majority of cases, be literally emasculated in its reproduction upon the screen, and made over into a ridiculous travesty upon the original. But do we ever hear any sort of public protest by a director that his work is not properly reproduced? Did you ever hear of such a thing?

The player who gives all of his or her ability and art to the interpretation of a scene will, and very often does calmly look upon his or her shadow form transformed into a sort of animated, jerky jumping-jack by a too fast projection speed, or watches him or herself literally blotted out by shadows, perhaps, right in the most artistic part of a scene. Did you ever hear one of them utter a public protest? Did you ever know of an actor speaking of such abuses in any of the thousands of "interviews" printed? Do you know of any player who has made any sort of effort to stop the projection abuses which make them absurd before thousands of audiences every day?

It is true that not all exhibitors now permit abuses in projection which will be visible on the screen of their own theatres, though even these men make little or no effort to check abuses of the film which, while they will not appear on their screen, will be visible on the screen of every theatre using the films thereafter. These exhibitors have, thanks to the education of years, awakened to the importance of the perfect reproduction upon the screen of their theatre of the thing the "eye" of the camera saw, and that it shall be reproduced exactly the way the lens "saw" it. They have discovered that an absolutely perfect reproduction of the various scenes, in exactly the way they were made is "good business" from every viewpoint, including the item of money making —box office receipts. They have discovered that artistry in projection really does pay, and they are demanding it of their projectionists, in so far as concerns their own screen.

But unfortunately, progressive exhibitors and theatre managers of this type are still very greatly in the minority, and what we may call the average theatre manager and exhibitor demands cheapness rather than quality in all things pertaining to his projection, save only the films themselves. Many of his kind seem to believe firmly that quantity will serve to offset any lack of quality—that ten reels projected at race horse speed, and with perhaps many other imperfections in the screen result, will be as acceptable, or even more acceptable than eight reels artistically projected.

Such men are nothing less than a mill stone around the neck of the industry. They are of the type who believe that "a picture is a picture" and the audience does not know the difference. They are the one greatest incubus with which the industry is inflicted.

Let us draw an analogy. Everything up to the point of completion and distribution of the positive film is constructive. Projection is the finish. If the finish be not high class, then the entire product must and will suffer.

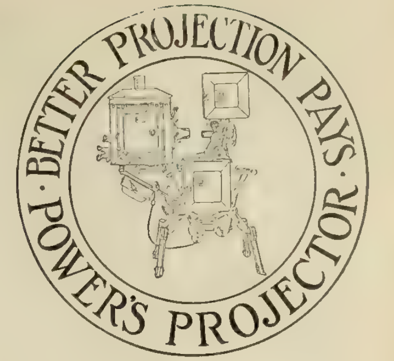
What would you think of the business sense of an automobile manufacturer who turned his whole plant over to the production of a high grade car. A powerful, silent running, well balanced engine is designed, which is economical of gas. A spring action is evolved which causes the car to ride smoothly over even the roughest roads. The finest of material is used throughout, until it comes to the finish. Up to that point the car is the very best that can be made, but suddenly the manufacturer becomes economical and has the machine finished with ordinary house paint and upholstered with burlap.

What would be your opinion of the business sense of this man? I ask you the question seriously, but warn you to consider your answer because the house point and burlap finish for the automobile exactly typifies what the motion picture industry is today doing, or permitting to be done, in practically all theatres up to a comparatively short while ago.

The producer labors hard to produce a photoplay of real merit, often boasting, with much apparent pride, that it "cost half a million dollars." Up to the point of the "finish" no expense is spared to make it the best it is possible to produce. It lacks only the "paint and upholstery" (reproduction upon the screen), when suddenly everything gets tremendously cheap, and the work of the director and the artist is, in a large percentage of theatres, placed in the hands of a man whose "ability" is purchasable at from thirty to forty dollars a week, and what ability he may possess is usually hampered by orders as to projection speed and limits to projection room upkeep expense which makes matters still worse. The net result is a "house paint and burlap finish," because, as in the case of the automobile, the audience (public) can see only the finish; and a dimly lighted, fuzzy-focus, shaky, discolored picture, projected at improper speed certainly is not well finished, or perhaps I might say it is finished, insofar as concerns audiences viewing its projection in that way.

BETTER PROJECTION PAYS

Adv



TO THE INDUSTRY

Poor projection imposes a tremendous handicap upon the industry. It operates to discredit the work of the producer, and has no legitimate reason for existence. For its own protection in the industry, including all its component parts, should demand high class projection. No exhibitor has the moral right to inflict poor projection upon the industry, to the serious injury of all concerned. And that serious injury is thus inflicted who will deny! We see the finest of productions reproduced upon the screen by men who have neither knowledge, energy or high grade skill. We find them punching long strings of holes in the films, for no other reason than that they either do not know how to make a cue sheet, or are too lazy or shiftless to do it. We find them speeding up the projector to avoid flicker tendency, because they do not know how to avoid it otherwise. We find them setting the projector at a speed to accommodate the "schedule" for the day, and allowing it to project at steady speed a production which may require half a dozen or more changes of projection speed to properly synchronize with camera speed.

The foregoing constitutes but a few of the long list of projection abuses chargeable directly to the projectionist himself, and to no one else, the results of which show immediately and directly upon the screen. But not all projection abuses which produce direct damage to the projected image can justly be laid at the door of the projectionist. As I have already pointed out, some of them are due to the theatre management and its policy of cheapness in projection room matters. Others are due to the almost criminal procedure practiced by very many film exchanges. I use the words "almost criminal" advisedly, because lack of proper inspection and repair of film by exchanges, or at least by very many of them, is the one most prolific source of fire danger, and since film fires endanger human life, I feel entirely justified in employing the strong term. It is not too much to say that four of every five film fires which have their beginning at projector apertures are directly due to lack of proper inspection and repair of the films, and most emphatically, inspection and repair is the duty of the exchange and of no one else. It is only the duty of the projectionist to make such repairs as may become necessary during the course of projection, and he has the right to expect to receive films in good mechanical condition from the exchange.

Let us now examine into what losses come through the mishandling of films, though in so doing it will be necessary to depend upon somewhat uncertain estimates.

What seems to be at least a reasonably accurate estimate places the number of reels of film in daily use in North America (the United States, Canada, Mexico and Central America) at 125,000. This seems to be rather an under- than an over-estimate. Accepting it, if we place the average value of reels of film at twenty dollars (surely a conservative estimate) then the total value of all film in daily use north of the Canal Zone is two and one-half millions of dollars.

In considering the amount of unnecessary damage done to film through the lack of proper procedure in projection, caused by carelessness, lack of skill, lack of knowledge, or by hampering orders, we shall be compelled to depend upon a very rough estimate. I think however, no man at all familiar with the subject will doubt the statement that the films are damaged unnecessarily at least one-half of one per cent of their value daily through the above named causes. If we accept the estimated total valuation of $2,500,000, then the daily unnecessary damage would be $12,500, which means that sum added to the "overhead" expense of the industry.

This does not, of course, seem a very serious matter, since it amounts to less than a dollar a day per theatre. In fact it would not be very serious if the actual damage to film, viewed merely as property damage, were all, but the truth is that the injury to the film itself is trivial when compared to the damage caused to screen results. It may be accepted as fact that any damage done to film in one theatre will injure the screen result in every other theatre in which the same film is thereafter used. True, one bit of damage might not appreciably mar the result in the next theatre, but many small injuries to film operate to detract very seriously from the projected picture, hence they lessen the drawing power of the box office.

This argument is not one which may be successfully disputed. The only question is how much the box office drawing power of theatres using the older film is lessened, but surely no one can or will doubt that, when we consider the number of theatres using film more or less damaged, the loss must be very great. To prove to you that this is so, I ask you to use your imagination for a moment.

In many, many hundreds of small cities, towns and villages, are small theatres, and while projection in some of them is very good indeed, in the great majority it is quite the reverse. In very many of them it is about as bad as it well could be. In these theatres, or most of them, old and badly damaged films are used, and in many of the smaller village theatres the condition of film is nothing short of terrible.

These theatres for the most part only manage to live, charging a rather low admission. They are not well patronized. And now here is where I ask you to let imagination enter and visualize for you what would be the effect if every theatre in all the land, big and little, city and village, put on high class projection. By "high class projection" I mean good films well projected—a screen result equal to the best of the big city theatres. Never mind telling me it could not be done. Just imagine it has been done, and ask yourself this question: What would be the total added possibility of additional box office receipts? Would you seriously question an estimate of one million dollars added box office receipts daily? Think it over! If you decided that there would be a probable added receipt of that sum, then I challenge you to dispute the proposition that poor projection is costing the industry one million dollars a day, less whatever it might cost additional to put good projection into all the theatres.

You will most likely say it could not be done, but there I take issue with you, except that in some places when, owing to limited current supply available, it would not be practical to put on so brilliant a picture as some of the high class city theatres use. However, a perfect projection can be put on without much brilliancy, and then, too, the picture is usually much smaller in the small town than in the large city theatre.

There are agencies which have for years been waging a battle for better projection. They have brought about great improvement, but have not nearly reached the goal. The reason for such slow progress is found in the fact that these agencies have had absolutely not one atom of help from those most interested, and who will most greatly benefit by perfect projection.

The producer has not lifted a finger to help, though producers could very easily have, and still can bring about quick and such improvement merely by calling public attention publicly to the necessity for proper projection of their productions.

The director has not made one move toward either publicly condemning the abuse of his work practiced by the speed demon exhibitor, who insists on projecting from six to seven reels in the time properly allotted to five, nor has he raised his voice publicly in praise of the projectionist who reproduces his work correctly.

Not one of the players have publicly objected to their shadow forms being made a monkey of by wrong projection, nor has one of them, so far as I know, ever publicly praised the work of the projectionist who reproduces their work correctly. In conclusion, I think we will all agree that high class projection is a necessity, and that poor projection works damage exactly in proportion to its fault, which may be very great indeed. I believe we shall all agree that high class projection will bring added revenue at the box office, and add materially to the favor motion pictures find in the mind of the public. I believe we shall all agree that perfect reproduction of the photoplay is something the motion picture industry owes both to the public and to itself; also that the industry should and would be willing to pay reasonably for the privilege of securing perfection in photoplay reproduction, the only question then being—how may we get it.

Rome was not built in a day, nor can projectionists capable of high class work be created overnight, but if this society, the producers, directors, and players take up the matter of the importance of perfection in projection—of perfect reproduction of the photoplay upon the screen—results would be quickly forthcoming.

One of the greatest possible drawbacks to perfect projection is the fact that aside from their employer, who makes things unpleasant when something is unusually wrong, no one seems to take the slightest interest in what the projectionist is doing, so long as it is not too entirely bad. The projectionist is but human. He takes the attitude: If no one else cares for fine work on the screen, why should I? Once let the man understand that the producers do care how their productions are put on the screen, that the directors do care when their work is ruined, that the players do take an active interest in how their shadow forms are staged, and let the public focus its eyes on the projection room a bit and we shall see a change. Under this condition the exhibitor will take some interest in having a man of ability and brains in his projection room, and we shall soon have improvement all along the line.

Affair De Luxe

At midnight, March 17—a day fairly familiar to all Sons of the Owld Sod, the American Projection Society will give a dinner at the Hotel Astor, New York City, in celebration of its tenth birthday.

Personally this editor has his bells all polished up and will be there with every one of them on. Also he strongly suggests to all real progressive men within reach of New York City that they immediately send in a five spot for themselves, or a ten for their lady and the privilege of accompanying her, and be on hand at the above named time and place. You'll have to send your coin for reservation though, or you'll not get in, I'm very much afraid. Address: American Projection Society, 304 West 58th street, marking it "Attention Dinner Committee."

Wish Gray and Griffith might see their way to make it, but expect it is out of the question for Gray at least. Also there are many high class projectionists in surrounding cities who might well take this one night off, say T'ell with the expense, and COME. Take it from me, you would be so encouraged and heartened that it would be worth ten times the trouble and cost; moreover you would have a large respect instilled into their souls for the profession of motion picture projection.

Another thing: I would like respectfully but most emphatically to suggest that exchange managers, exhibitors, and even the very much up-stage producer would find his time and money well spent were he to bust all precedent and meet personally the high class GENTLEMEN who compose the American Projection Society. You, every one of you, owe these men far more than you ever can pay. Why not come out, get acquainted with them and thus show your appreciation of the work the Society is doing?

I.P.A. Holds High Jinks

Last Saturday at the more or less witching (it gets less "witching" as I get older) hour of midnight I mounted Nanck Hanks, the Go-Devil, and rode over to the club house of the International Projection Society, 437 East 145th street, New York, to attend the high jinks, to which I had, as an honorary (or ornery) member of the Association, been invited.

I found the place all decorated with flags, bunting 'n everything, with colored lights and the very latest thing in jazz orchestras in the ball room, where brave men and pretty women allowed not one note of that music to go to waste.

Nice

It was nice. The International Projection Association is nothing more nor less than a club, with a very real club house. They occupy the entire three story building, the upper floor of which is let to one of the members and his wife, who, in return for the rental, take care of the entire building.

There is a billiard table 'n everything. The thing is GOOD. It supplies a place where the members may have clean amusement, and meet socially under good conditions. Also there are periodical meetings at which lectures tending to educate the members in projection lore are given.

Alex Polin is the president, and is the moving spirit of the club. Polin is now Business Agent of Local Union 306 New York City projectionists.

A recent election of officers resulted as follows: Alex. Polin, President; Ben Norton, Vice President; All Ross, Recording Secretary; Phil Lynch, Corresponding Secretary; Wm. Guth, Financial Secretary-Treasurer.

Such organizations, if rightly conducted (as the two in New York City—the I. P. A. and the A. P. S.—certainly are) are 100 percent good, or mighty nearly so. More power to the I. P. A.

Apprenticeship

From a location I shall not divulge comes the following:

Dear Mr. Richardson: If you allow a part-time projectionist with one year of experience to enter the Bluebook school, then here goes. If I do not always side with your way of thinking, why maybe you'll not always side with my way of thinking, so we will be even.

Here are a few questions I want answered, with request that they be not published. (I have very many similar requests. There is no good reason why these matters should not be published, provided the names and location be suppressed, and they are of interest to many.—Ed.)

I wish to know where to get into touch with the union headquarters for this territory (supplied by mail.—Ed.) Have been told it would be practically impossible for me to get a position with my present experience, because no one employed non-union men, and I could not join the union because I could not afford to put up $200.00 for an apprenticeship; also I would not be able to get into the union anyhow, because there are already too many in.

It really seems altogether unjust that a man can't work into a profession in which he takes pride and joy, after he has spent one year in a non-union place. What is the way out.

Know How You Feel

I know exactly how you feel. I say, as I have said before, the union is fully justified in refusing you admission, PROVIDED it has plenty of COMPETENT projectionists to fill all positions within its jurisdiction.

In my opinion the whole trouble lies right here: when I started railroading way back in 1883, I WAS CONTENT TO AND DID FIRE AN ENGINE (APPRENTICESHIP) FOR FIVE YEARS BEFORE EVER I TOUCHED A THROTTLE AS ENGINEER. Many fired as much as seven years—seven years apprenticeship, mind you.

But in motion picture projection, which requires a far wider range of knowledge than running a locomotive, most men think six months quite long enough to become competent to take charge of projection equipment and the "staging" of a photodrama costing hundreds of thousands of dollars and containing the work of some of the best artists in the business.

The Danger

The trouble and the danger lies in the fact that in projection, as in many other things, the beginner is prone to jump to the conclusion that he knows a very great deal more than he really does know. I remember when I began riding a motorcycle, how at the end of six months I actually had the unadulterated GALL to propose to the editor of a motorcycle publication that I conduct a "Hints to Riders" department, and how insulted I was when he, with a smile I can now very well understand, declined. I look back now and wonder at my nerve, yet I then fully believed myself very thoroughly competent.

My brother, I sympathize with you, but my own view is that if you get well started in, say, three years, you should be satisfied. The very fact that you, with your one year of part time experience, expect to "disagree with my way of thinking," who have had well along to twenty years of very intense experience, is pretty good evidence that you think you know a considerable lot more than you probably do.

Mind you that is not necessarily a fault. It rather inclines me to think that IF you stick, and do finally really get going in projection, you will make a corking good man, but before that time comes around you will find you will have a good many things knocked out of you, and a lot of other things knocked in.

Good luck to you, brother. Enter the Bluebook school and study—by all means, AND don't imagine that because I've written thusly I'm against you. I've just tried to lay before you certain FACTS, very briefly.

Silk Worker

Daniel Constantino, whose name is a familiar one to Bluebook scholars, is going to take a position in a silk mill in St. Catharine, Ontario. Nice little city. Motored through there several times. Wish brother Constantino all good luck, until such time as he goes shooting stars at a screen again—as he will, for they come back sooner or later.

Under the Severest Test Possible, Proven to be a Big Picture

When "Percy" was finally finished the officials of the Thos. Ince Corp'n believed they had a BIG picture. There was only one question. Would the public receive it as it deserved?

So "Percy" was put on "cold" at two houses,—one in Los Angeles, and one in New York. There was no public announcement. In each case the advertised feature was shelved without warning to make room for "Percy."

Both audiences were taken by storm. They laughed, thrilled, applauded. Few pictures have ever received the signs of audience approval that "Percy" did.

"Percy" is presented for your approval on its merits as a real BIG picture. Its extraordinary merit DEMANDS your serious consideration!

A GREAT START FOR A GREATER FINISH!

When it came out of the studio, "Isn't Life Wonderful" went right to work for the Exhibitors.

It was something new back of the box-office, but it had the power!

Remember these records:

Rivoli (N. Y.)	$26,000.00
Rialto (N. Y.)	$21,000.00
McVickers (Chicago)	$27,000.00

And the reason more than 200,000 people went to three theatres is, as the magazine "Judge" says: "Mr. Griffith has made the best picture I have ever seen."

Laughter—"You will find as great comedy in 'Isn't Life Wonderful' as ever was shown on the screen," says the conservative N. Y. Post.

Love—Why, it is all love! It starts with love—grows with love—ends with love

Suspense—"More suspense than a hundred so called big scenes," says the N. Y. News—"Here is a great picture," says Dudley Burrows in S. F. Call Post, "and humanity owes a big debt to D. W. Written by Willard C. Howe, my good friend, and the wise editor of the Exhibitors Trade Review under the title

Is Exhibitors Good Will Worth Anything?

"Two hundred and fifty exhibitors are important to me. I don't care anything about the rest. This industry is not controlled or even influenced to any extent by the exhibitors. Therefore, I don't care what the rank and file of the exhibitors think or say. I don't address my advertising to them. They don't count for anything." This in brief is the substance of recent remarks by a prominent executive in the distributing branch of the business. He amplified his statement to a considerable extent, stressing his opinion of the low order of business intelligence found in the theatre field, thus explaining why his entire advertising effort is addressed to a very small group composing the leaders in the various departments of the business. The author of these statements is not given to brash remarks. He sees the situation from every angle.

Yet it seems to me his theory is wrong.

Vitagraph Knows He's Wrong!

After you have thought this one over read this advice by that stout defender of the exhibitors, P. S. Harrison in Harrison's Reports:

"Stop buying pictures from your competitors and your competitors will stop buying old theatres or building new ones."

"It's the truth, Mr. Howe!"

The Editor's Views

IT begins to look as though the classics of literature and of history are barred from the screen. Apparently, should any producer be so ambitious as to put a real fortune into the picturization of a classic, he is merely creating an opportunity for the hangers-on. Overnight there will appear a varied assortment of pictures of ancient vintage and of little intrinsic value which have been made from the same classic in the dawning days of the industry.

Some of the resurrected pictures will be in one reel and some in five. But, naturally, they would all have the title of the classic. So the man who has put forth the best efforts of his organization in attempting a picturization that has the benefit of all we have learned through the years, is faced with the likelihood of seeing his picture in competition with a two-reeler of the vintage of 1912.

To tell the truth, the number of exhibitors who would actually play the "counterfeit" picture is very limited. But the man with a fortune at stake cannot count on this. It becomes a species of blackmail.

WILLIAM FOX has just had this experience. As soon as "The Man Without a Country" won its place on Broadway, previously made pictures of the same subject began to make their appearance. Not in theatres—oh, NO—but chiefly as a medium of offers to Mr. Fox. "I'll sell you mine for twenty thousand," says one fellow; "I'll sell you mine for five thousand," says another fellow.

It is our own candid opinion that Mr. Fox could have ignored all of these ancient bits of celluloid. "The Man Without a Country," as presented in 1925, need not have worried about such competition. We think we know the exhibitor mind fairly well, and we know of few exhibitors who would have bothered, no matter how keen the local competition, to even consider meeting the opposition of the 1925 picture with the ten-year-old subject.

But the man with his money at stake has to feel that he is leaving no loopholes. So "The Man Without a Country" is now "As No Man Has Loved."

All of which, in the history of an industry that brings up a "momentous" problem each day, may not seem so important. But it is important if such happenings are to keep our picture producers from even entertaining the thought of visualizing the classics.

ARTHUR KANE'S move to Universal is a reason for congratulations to both Mr. Kane and Universal.

There are big things doing at Universal. Some of which, like the purchase of a theatre here and a circuit there, break into print. Others, that do not get into print because they are rather an expression of spirit and courage than the concrete details demanded by a news report.

Carl Laemmle has his hat right in the middle of the ring. If the financiers tell us that key city theatre ownership is the necessary evolution of the industry, Carl will give a thought to that. If million-dollar pictures are the need, his pocketbook is ready. If there are theatres that say "Give us more entertainment and fewer big sets," Carl has his Hoot Gibsons.

Yessir, Carl Laemmle has been in the middle of the picture from the beginning, and Carl Laemmle is going to stay there.

So the acquisition of a man with the background possessed by Arthur Kane is more than a news item.

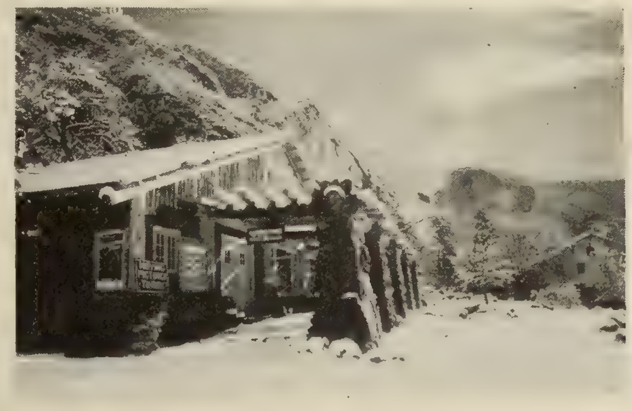
Here's an Exhibitor Who Never Loses a Bet!

By Tom Waller

JUST like the nursery rhyme about the house that Jack built, so the life of Arthur C. Pillsbury and how he became an exhibitor with a unique little $25,000 plant in a valley guarded by lofty crags of Yosemite National Park.

Pillsbury visited us in the World office the other day and his story was so interesting that the "dignity" usually surrounding such a thing as an interview was forgotten. Everyone asked questions and Pillsbury's replies left no doubt in any of our minds that Pillsbury is going to be a mighty successful showman. Here's why:



Twenty-nine years ago Pillsbury decided that he would spend no more time toiling in the city, so he quit his photographer's job on a city newspaper, slung his camera across his shoulder and boarded a train for Yosemite Valley.

The valley was everything described in the railroad pamphlet. In fact, it was far so more beautiful that Pillsbury made up his mind the green grass below and the snow-capped mountains with the wonderful wild flowers at their bases would be the best scenery one could have about a home.

The first thing he did was to tie up with the Government as an official photographer. This job gave him ample time, of which he availed himself, to observe the wonders and peculiarities of nature. Before long he was reading technical books on the things which piqued his curiosity, resultant in his being a full-fledged naturalist today.

Pillsbury's primary step toward getting into the film game was when the motion picture camera made its appearance. He had no idea of becoming a part of the industry then, he only obtained a camera with the intention of being able to further promote his naturalistic bent. He studied the camera like he did the flowers until, it is said, he could reply to all of the questions in F. H. Richardson's Blue Book without even reading the answers.

Eventually, the motion pictures he took of floral life in various stages proved a mighty big asset to him. Incidentally, that is why he is now in the East. For the next month he will screen these films before colleges and clubs, delivering lectures on botany at the same time.

Out in Yosemite Valley the winters are long and some times so severe that all of the exits and entrances are closed to moving things other than trains. That is one of the reasons why townsfolk, a year or so ago, concluded they would have to have some steady kind of entertainment and thus be independent of barnstorming troups. Many of the public-spirited citizens got together and opened up the valley's first movie house. It was a low-ceilinged affair, with hard benches, accommodating slightly over 100 patrons. Amateur projectionists volunteered their services free of charge and everybody worked, but it was too small a proposition to function as a community institution.

Already lecturer, photographer and naturalist, Pillsbury grasped the opportunity for another degree. In obtaining his latest letters he had to delve into carpentry, trucking and plumbing. On January 1 of this year he graduated with honors into exhibitor ranks.

Pillsbury's log cabin is a cozy theatre, seating 400 persons and accommodating about 600, and possesses every modern device of a house twice its size in a big city. He has the "jump" on most big city exhibitors because he built a good portion of it himself.

Although it's the only theatre within a radius of 100 miles, Pillsbury had in mind as well the tourist population, which averages 10,000 each summer. The theatre is so erected that it can be greatly enlarged at little cost and within a short time. The Yosemite showman, however, is considering an adjacent wide open space under a starry roof for big summer evenings.

A regular laboratory and two dark rooms are also accommodated in the log cabin. Companies on location in the vicinity are welcomed to make use of these facilities free of charge and at any time, Pillsbury announces.

This Yosemite exhibitor maintains that he has made money on every show since the opening of the theatre on January 5. He does not believe in using any old film that comes along just because his monopoly makes his house a first run whether he chose to dust off a Bison two-reeler or not. He goes out for the big hits fresh from Broadway.

The reaction he has experienced from the short time he has been exhibiting is that his people want peppy westerns and good comedies, or plausible dramas. They have no use for sex stuff in any form, he declares.

Dressed in a split log frame, three one-sheets are all Pillsbury so far has found he needs to exploit any picture. In the two shows a week he screens during the winter, he finds that his audience was particularly enthusiastic over features of the type of "Sundown" and "Abraham Lincoln." He has the town keyed up over the expectancy of viewing in their log cabin within the next few days "The Thundering Herd."

Last summer Pillsbury sold 10,000 postcards which he made up himself from photographs he had taken of the countryside. This summer similar postcards will be on sale in the theatre and he expects to dispose of 20,000 of them. Even on the back of his own business cards Pillsbury has views exploiting the valley he has chosen for his home and theatre.

If Pillsbury has overlooked a single bet we would like to know it!

But Pillsbury informs us he has more ideas to be run as side-lines in connection with all of the present ones functioning so successfully. We want to hear from him exactly a year from now.

Studio Parties!

Yes, They All Come Under the Heading of Pleasure, But Do They Mean Anything?

By Sumner Smith

THE director, the star and the publicity man conferred while the mob of extras wondered what it was all about and carpenters hammered at a new set.

"I see, I see," the director nodded. "You say that the, ah, writers will be given a studio party here this afternoon to become acquainted with the artists and discuss the moral aspects of 'The Whitewashed Virgin,' which I am making. Very good, suh. We will do our best to entertain them."

"Won't it be perfectly splendid?" the star cried. "A party! My dear, what fun! And such interesting people, these writers. So intelligent and naive."

The publicity man sighed with relief.

"Then it's all fixed," he said. "I'll have a buffet lunch on hand and you two will be host and hostess."

"Delighted," the director and star agreed in unison.

The publicity man departed.

The director and star looked at each other.

"What, again?" moaned the star.

"The office is crazy," said the director.

"I won't, I won't," wept the star, "dance again with that J. Pfeffer Thistle and get all stepped on."

"And I'll have to hear about how to make pictures," groaned the director. "The business is going to the dogs. We never had these affairs in the old Biograph days."

"I should say not," the star agreed. "That is, my mother never had them."

The scene shifts to the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street. J. Pfeffer Thistle of the Evening Pictorial Snappy Views and Bill Bannon of the Movie Trade News are conversing.

"Well, Bill, going to Eclat's studio party?" queries Thistle.

"Suppose I've got to."

"It ought to be fun if they put it on right. Peggy Kiss is in the picture. She's a classy stepper and I like to dance with her."

The trade man curved an eyebrow.

"She seems to like that big brother act of yours," he said.

"Oh, yes, I made a hit with her." Thistle smoothed his George Washington hair-cut and adjusted his spectacles. "But she's short on brains and I don't figure we could hit it off together too steady. They gotta have brains as well as looks to team up with this kid."

"That would help the proportion."

"Eh? Well, s'long, Bill. See you at the studio."

"S'long, kid."

The studio party was getting under way. The guests had been invited for 12:30 and at 1:15 o'clock they were beginning to arrive. The publicity man greeted each and began the introductions.

"Hello, Thistle, how's a boy?"

"How do you do, Mr. Brown. We're glad to see you."

"Hello, Bannon."

"This is Mr. Luter, the director—Mr. Brown, Mr. Thistle, Bannon. Mr. Brown, as you know, is editor of the Fillum Trade Reviews. Mr. Thistle writes that clever copy you read in the Evening Illustrated Looking Glass—oh, beg pardon, the Evening Pictorial Snappy Views. Yes, of course, I knew which one; just a slip of the tongue. Bannon? Oh, he's on a trade paper."

The director leaned against a tinseled grape arbor and faced the editor.

"Well, Mr. Brown, how did you like my last picture?"

"Very bad, very bad, Luter. I consider you a good director, but here you've tried to be too artistic. We've got to have box-office pictures, exploitation ideas in the story. Doug and Mary and I agree on that. So does Charlie. Now that scene of the abandoned grandmother vamping the grandson she hasn't seen since babyhood—too much art, lacks action. She just stands there and looks at the youth like a cow. Where were the clinging arms? Where was the glycerine? Our women fans want tears."

"A most excellent suggestion, Mr. Brown," Luter agreed. "I'll take that up with my scenario editor immediately. Immensely obliged. By the way, that was an interesting visit of yours to studio land. I enjoyed your pictorial record of it tremendously. You photograph very well . . . Well, here's Miss Kiss. You know Mr. Brown, Peggy."

"Hello, Browny, old dear."

"Hello, Peggy. You're looking fine. Remember that tea we had with Doug and Mary and Charlie?"

"Do I? You bet, Browny. That was a great little talk you gave us . . ."

"Well, if here isn't little Peggy and her boyish bob."

"Well, Mr. Thistle, you sweet thing. Are we going to dance later?"

"Surest thing you know, Peggy."

By now the party was well under way. It was 1:45 o'clock. The guests numbered about fifty. They stood around in small groups, tobacco smoke circling around their heads.

There was the dapper, gray-haired, clean-shaven editor who, the picture of interested attention, listened to a young, aggressive editor of "movies" for a newspaper. But for the twinkle in the veteran editor's gray eyes, it would have seemed that his mind was open to argument though his lips were not. His "yesses" were born of the perfect composure which is the child of experience. After a score of them, the younger man went elsewhere for debate.

There was the tall, quiet, poker-faced editor slouching in a chair, listening to the comments of a broadshouldered New York editorial representative anent blondes and how he had sounded off at a meeting in the Mays office. The editor's replies were calm and vague, invariably ending in a question that relieved him from the necessity of either a "yes" or a "no." The dapper editor joined them and conversation languished.

Elsewhere it was going good.

Director Luter and Miss Kiss Can Answer

"Gee, I got mad. You should have seen me. I would have licked Dempsey that night."

"Yes, I'm going to have my summer vacation at Nantucket and play golf."

"Not at all. Movies exist only to support newspaper critics."

"Flora thought 'The Lost World' was great."

"Who's that? He's a new reporter on Spice. Wants to meet everybody."

Tin Pan Alley, soprano, was loquacious.

"He's some actor. Even his ears are backward."

"Why doesn't she endow an orphanage to keep her children in?"

"Oh, he's a darling. But dumb."

The hands of the clock indicated 2:15. Waiters, supervised by the assistant director, lugged a long table laden with food onto the set. People seethed around it. Conversation became a confusion of voices. Hearty thanks were offered that the food had at last arrived. Somebody wanted to know why "these movie affairs" always began late. Fluffy Ruffles, it was reported, dragged down no less than $8,000 a week under her new contract and, so the story ran, Dainty Dolly was giving Handsome Harry the raspberry. Eugenie Melody was letting her nails grow because her fingers weren't tapering enough for the movies. Bud McGink wrote the worst reviews in New York; how did he manage to hang onto his job? Consumption of food paralleled the rate of conversation.

The publicity man rose.

"Quiet, please."

"Quite what?" punned a wag.

"Now, boys, quiet, please."

"He wants quiet."

"Why don't those people keep still."

"Hey, he wants quiet."

"Now, fellows, listen. No speeches, just a little talk by Mr. Luter about the picture. We all feel . . . I beg your pardon, Mr. Brown.

"You'll excuse me, I hope," Brown announced, "but I have an important engagement. Got to go. Goodby, Mr. Luter. Goodby, Peggy. Goodby, everybody."

He hurried out.

Said one trade paper man to his neighbor, "You gotta hand it to Brown—he knows these affairs don't mean a damn thing and he doesn't mind letting 'em know he knows it."

The publicity man tried again.

"I want all of you to hear what Mr. Luter has to say about the picture. We feel that it will be a great success, probably Mr. Luter's best work. Of course, I don't need to introduce him. Mr. Luter."

"This is a great surprise," the director began, delving into an inner pocket and producing a manuscript. "But seriously, gentlemen, I can't tell you how glad I am to have you with me today. My picture, gentlemen, is a picture with a purpose. 'The Whitewashed Virgin' teaches a splendid lesson, one that Mr. Whacker, our president, is anxious to impress upon the great American public—that no orphanage care for our little ones can equal in efficiency the care, the loving care, bestowed upon them in the home. I have given of my best in making this picture, and I am told that the rushes are not bad. What did you say? Oh, thank you, thank you. My good friend Whistle of the Evening Illustrated Looking Glass—sorry, old man, I should have said the Evening Pictorial Snappy Views—my old, old friend Whistle—yes, Thistle—was just now good enough to say that 'The Whitewashed Virgin' promises to be my greatest production.

"I have one more message before sitting down. It is extremely important and I ask your closest attention. All of you, knowing the business so well, are conversant with the importance of a good title for a film. Confidentially, 'The Whitewashed Virgin' does not wholly satisfy us. It offers too limited exploitation possibilities. We will appreciate title suggestions addressed to Mr. Whacker at the office. Whistle, don't you fail us.

"Miss Kiss and I will be delighted to have you all remain and watch us shoot a scene. It will interest you, I think. Miss Kiss, the orphaned child, is to be evicted from the orphanage. Mr. Marlborough, the heavy, throws her down the well you see to the left of me. That is about all, I think. Thank you."

A leisurely exodus ensued. Perhaps one-quarter of the assemblage remained. Among them moved Peggy Kiss, conversing with the male critics, and Mr. Marlborough, conversing with the female critics.

"Surely I have met you before," Mr. Marlborough said. "Wasn't it in Hollywood?"

Bannon and Thistle met.

"Fine time, eh?" Thistle asked.

"I'm leaving," Bannon said. "You going yet?"

"Me? I should say not. Look here, Bill, old man, if you'd mix around more you'd like it better."

At the other end of the set Director Luter called to Peggy Kiss.

"Never mind about the make-up," he said. "We won't be able to do any shooting this afternoon with this crowd around."

"Oh, Lord," she said. "Then I will have to dance with Thistle."

Bannon and Essex, his co-worker, were returning to the office.

"Well," said Essex, "now it'll be 9 o'clock before I get home to New Jersey tonight. Plenty of work waiting for me in the office."

"I know," Bannon said, "but you've got to remember that all this comes under the heading of pleasure."

Inspiration vs. Perspiration

By

Colby Harriman

AN interviewer recently queried Thos. A. Edison relative to the secret underlying his remarkable genius, and in his homely way Edison replied that there was really nothing miraculous about being a "genius"; that the formula for accomplishing meritorious work is "two per cent Inspiration and 98 per cent Perspiration."

So often we have within us the desire to accomplish things; the impulse to create something that is out of the ordinary; the urge to achieve better things—but we lack the ability to make them realities, and find ourselves confronted with the stone wall labelled, "Maybe You Can't Do It." The good idea is then pigeonholed in our mental archives, and some day, to our surprise, we learn that some other fellow has created the very thing we had previously dreamed of and planned without bringing to fruition.

The man who "dared to do the things he wanted to do" is hailed as a "producing genius," "a remarkable creator," "a clever showman." All of which leads us to the thought that we must always, even in the show business, have the courage of our convictions, and when a treasure is washed up on our mental shore we must instantly claim it as our own—and use it. We must obey the impulse consistently and sanely. It is folly to do the impractical thing, as impracticability is expensive in the long run.

Another element which we find neglected in successful development of our production work, is taking the job seriously. A very well-known producer recently said that to him the work of producing theatrical divertissements was the most important thing in the world; that he not only found the opportunity for abundant creative work, but relaxation as well.

The work of devising and ultimately producing prologues and presentations as well as the intricate task which accompanies the arranging of musical compositions, is a serious business, and demands not only hours of concentrated effort, but a heart that is in tune with the mind.

A haphazard system is no system. Too often we have evidences of such carelessness and mental laziness. The logical development in work comes by a consistent concentration of that work in its various processes. We know that if we have a well-founded premise or base which we may commonly call a practical idea, that we can develop it to a successful conclusion. It cannot be otherwise. This is pure logic. We might paraphrase the Biblical line—"Know Thy Work."

Practically all producers have the same routine, although each may differ in his method of operation. This same producer above referred to also gave an idea of how he began his work. He said he was persistently on the lookout for new ideas; he read various publications devoted to art, architecture and decoration, travel, etc. He frequented art galleries; he was a patron of various studios; he browsed in bookstores and in the public libraries; he gleaned interesting bits of information from historical records, costume books, architectural histories, etc. In his office he had scrap-books in which various pictorial suggestions and clippings were pasted. The various suggestions were indexed according to periods, nations and customs.

When the occasion demanded, for instance, an Irish setting he had before him immediately photographs of Irish landscapes with beautiful wooded hills, lake scenes—here and there were found photographs of castles, views of the picturesque country folk, suggestions of types, and these were blended, the best taken from the suggestions, and molded into a production idea.

The idea was turned over to the artist, and not only a faithful reproduction of an Irish exterior was achieved, but the atmospheric background was correct for his presentation, the patrons acclaiming it as a success.

In this way he was able to achieve perfection. The mountains were typical of the Irish country and were not volcanic peaks. The lakes were characteristic of the bog country, and not Norwegian fjords; the thatched cottages did not bear the imprint of the South Sea islands. The huts, the costumes, the properties—all were expressive of the folk of this particular countryside.

Here, the producer created an honest production warding off the approach of failure. Disaster ultimately comes to the man who does not know how to do his work. Too much emphasis cannot be laid on this point, as on this rock is built the structure—to stand or fall—taking its place in a competitive way with various productions in the leading motion picture theatres.

The complete production must carry the effect of a well designed pattern, the intricate parts reflecting the intimate knowledge of the producer with his subject, no detail escaping him.

When a producer has before him reliable information, subject matter which he can depend on—criticism can find no niche in which to rear itself.

It is not policy in this particular work for a producer to hide his light under a bushel. It may glow for him but it is safe to say that before long it becomes extinguished.

What we are all striving for is a place in the sun. We all want to accomplish something worthwhile; to have our efforts appreciated; to get more business in our houses.

Prologues, presentations are vital things, and we must capitalize on the enormous time spent each week in conceiving and producing these features.

They must be profitable.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Complete subject matter for a novel prologue or presentation will appear weekly in this department. Any producer engaged in this type of production work in motion picture theatres is entitled to use the suggestion in its entirety or make his own adaptation.

Working plans, complete in every detail, are available on the presentation suggested herewith. Blueprints have been prepared with view to aiding showman who may desire to avail themselves of the Colby Harriman suggestions. Music cue sheets, color diagrams and costume plates are included. Same may be secured without charge by requesting same of the editor.

"Spring's Debut"

A Seasonal Fantasy

A "Moving Picture World" Presentation

Devised by Colby Harriman

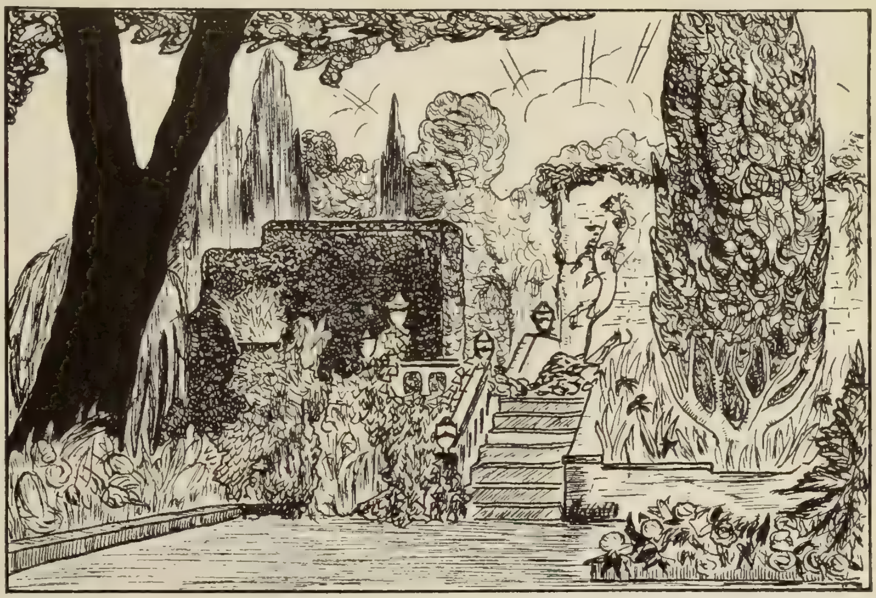
Spring offers many opportunities to the producer for colorful settings and stage novelties. This particular season emphasizes music and the dance. It is comparatively easy for the producer to select effective subject matter for this period as Nature, herself, offers countless suggestions.

Stage settings for this period should predominate in exteriors, especially garden scenes, wooded landscapes or artistic pastorals. The wealth of musical compositions to select motifs is enough to gladden the heart of any director. Color can be given a wide angle of treatment, but what is called "the rainbow colors" should be used in the highlighting, the light greens, pink, yellow, and various red and blue tints.

The suggestion this week entitled "Spring's Debut" has been devised as a suitable and artistic setting for a musical and dance number. It is composed chiefly of set pieces, which can be constructed in flat surfaces, and backed by a cyclorama or a drop.

The technical notations for the setting may be briefly outlined: A large set tree is placed on right stage, the top being trimmed with either a foliage border or a cut tab drop for the tree top effect. A platform is set about two-thirds upstage, with steps and balustrade leading from it to the stage. A runway extends right and left from the platform off stage. The runway is masked on the right by a high hedge row and on the left by a set piece, a wall, with ivy encrusting it. Down stage on the left is a bay-tree surrounded by a flowered set piece. A small flowered set piece with a cedar tree is extreme left down stage. Back of the runway on the up stage right can be placed two set trees. The back drop can be painted with the distant tree outline, this being opaqued, to permit lighting effects to be worked back of the drop. Set pieces with shrubs, flowers, vines and other foliage can be used profusely.

The action can have three movements. The first suggesting the end of winter. In this movement, the foreground is in silhouetted. A scrim is hung down in one and with the cold lighting effects in blues and green mixture, a chill dawn can be suggested. The singers can be highlighted from the sides, particular attention being given to the spots, that they are masked down to eliminate spill light and only shroud the singers.



The second movement, the lighting suggests a rainy morning. A rain effect can be introduced. On the back drop rain clouds can be seen moving. Two dancers, with rainy coats blowing, out-turned umbrellas, dance in the wind.

The third effect progresses as the lights come into color combinations, revealing the new greens of Spring, budding flowers, singing birds. This scene can be mounted to be one of exquisite beauty. A ballet can be introduced, the two singers, as lovers, topping the dance with a spring love song.

The set can be used on a small stage and also find artistic expression in a larger theatre.

Question Box

Inquiries Answered

A. A.—Jacksonville, Fla.: "What simple tests could you suggest to enable me to tell textile fabrics apart? I have some samples for new drops and draperies and want to be sure the goods are pure."

There are several ways to make such tests. The main textile fibers are divided into two groups, i. e. cotton and linen which are of vegetable origin and silk and wool which are of animal origin.

To test silk and wool mixed with cotton:

Cotton can be told by placing sample in solution of potash or lye. This will dissolve wool and leave cotton.

With silk, the same solution will dissolve the silk and leave the cotton.

To test for pure linen:

Place sample of the cloth in a little concentrated sulphuric acid for about two minutes. Remove and wash with water treated with a half solution of caustic soda. The caustic soda attacks the cotton and leaves the linen untouched. The presence of cotton can be told by the gaps that are left in the fabric due to the removal of the cotton.

To test between animal and vegetable fibers:

Burning test is simple. Merely ignite a sliver of the fabric. If the fiber is of animal origin it gives the odor of burning feathers, otherwise the odor is similar to burning paper or wood.

Alkalies will attack wool and silk and dissolve them, but have no strong effect on cotton or linen.

Acids will dissolve cotton and linen and will not effect silk and wool.

To tell the difference between cotton and linen, tear a sample. If it is linen, the tear will leave straight threads, and if it is cotton the threads will curl.

Julia Glass

Miss Glass makes her appearance at the Capitol Theatre this week in a very attractive setting. An arched leg drop is hung in one. A large grand paino is centre, the artist seated on the right. Fabric curtains are hung back. This completes the setting, but the lighting renders it one of the most effective numbers on the program. The leg drop is tinted in blue and purple. The back drop is toned in red at the top and this is tinted down to pink about centre with lights from right stage. The base of the curtain merges into green. A light amber spot is thrown from left stage on the pianist, and a balcony spot in canary high-lights the artist.

Divertissements

Two effective numbers constitute this unit of the program. The first is a dancing number and the other a musical novelty.

(a) "Caprice Viennois"

The setting consists of a black back drop. A thin outline of a quarter moon is hung right. A little left of centre, are hung long strands of light flowered festoons. The festoons are hung vertically on a batten and drop towards the floor, clearing it about two feet. A marble garden bench is below the trellis. In the centre is a white dais upon which a dancer dressed in a white ballet costume, white wig, and a chalk make-up poses as a statue. On the bench sits a male dancer in the costume of a Pierrot. The moon and the trellis is high lighted with light green from the sides. White spots are used on the dancers.

Mlle. Gambarelli and Eusta Glinka do the number, the story suggested by Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois." Eugen Ormandy renders the violin solo.

(b) Irish Fantasy

Excellent continuity has been given this presentation. At the rise, a scrim covers the opening. All lights are out, back stage. Presently, a spot from the side lights Marjorie Harcum, dressed as an old Irish mother. She sings "Come Back to Erin." During the progress of her song the lighting scheme gradually develops until the setting is visible. At the conclusion of her song the scrim is taken away. The setting depicts a typical Irish countryside. Distant mountains, with blue caps and a green hazy base, contrast with the moonlit lake and wooded area in the foreground. The back drop is colorful. Down left is a set house with a practical door. A bench is in front of the house, upon which some of the elderly characters are seated. Back of house on a slight promotory is a stone house, with a light in the window. At right of stage, a fence constructed to give the effect of old rails masks in part of the hedged run way, down which some of the characters enter. The lighting is concentrated on the back drop for the color combinations, a white flood being used on the dancers and ensemble action, while amber spots are used from the sides to high light the scene. Following the first song, seven dancers run in and render a very spirited Irish folk dance. A character actor as an old Irishman speaks a few lines and calls for a song of the other days. Frank Moulan steps forward and placing his arm around the old man sings 'The Low Backed Car." Douglas Stanbury enters with a colleen and sings "An Irish Love Song." Following this number, the Capitol Mixed Quartette, grouped around the fence and stile, sing "Kilarney." They exit and William Robyn enters from the house and kneeling beside the old lady on the bench effectively renders "Mother Machree." The finale embraces the entire ensemble in a musical finish.

Strand Theatre

New York City

Plunkett Stages "Sally"

A very auspicious presentation and prologue is given the picture production of "Sally." Mr. Plunkett has gathered up a bit of the East Side, New York, and deposited it on his stage. The setting is a faithful reproduction of a Bowery corner, There is detail galore, nothing has been overlooked, and such settings are unusual in presentation houses. The back drop is a street scene with the low store front, and adjoining houses. At right and left are set tenement houses, with the customary fire escapes laden with bedding, etc. At left centre is a lamp post of the older days, backed by a fruit stand. The set is swarmed with characters, but the over crowding is effective. The hurdy-gurdy back stage at centre grinds out its twanging notes, as the urchins and youngsters dance and play around. Older characters are seen looking out of upper windows, some Italian women appear, a vender pushes in a cart laden with fruits. The street cleaner, the ever present cop, the "tough boys" of the district, all are in evidence. It would be useless to describe the detail in this setting as its faithfulness in reproduction is minute.

The action opens in an early evening light, mellow and cheerful, to the air of "East Side, West Side." A soloist at centre, assisted by a quartette sings "Sally." This is followed with a characteristic dance by the ballet to "Nola" ground out on the street piano. The well known Ray Millers Mound City Blue Blowers are introduced and render three numbers. The action is brought to a finale with the entrance of a singer who sings "Look For the Silver Lining," assisted by a tenor, the two singers cross towards the corner, the lights dim, the lamp is lighted, lamps appear in the house windows, and curtain closes in. The hurdy gurdy picks up the refrain and carries it on through the main titles of the picture.

Rivoli Theatre

New York City

A Fashion Show

A Fashion Show that is unique has broken into a Broadway motion picture theatre, and one of the most colorful and well arranged presentations is given this week in association with a local department store. The gowns are displayed by seventeen attractive girls. Four scenes are used in the action. The first is a fabric drop in one. The drop is painted in blues, with a gilt veinwork, and a marble vein line in bronze and amber towards the base. Two figures—miniature —reproductions in oval frames are right and left on the drop. The bottom of the drop is heavily fringed. The models appear in the 'Ensemble" in various sports frocks, ensemble suits and costumes. White spot is thrown on the girls as they appear from right and left for the cross over. The second scene occupies full stage. A black drop is back stage. Down right is a fantastic set piece representing a staircase, surmounted with two globular lamps. A garden bench is center, and backed by a flowered set piece in front of which is a large plant with pink flowers. Back of the bench is a pedestal with a "Pan" bust, which is flanked by box trees. Three oblong chandeliers hang from centre, right and left center. They are painted to give a mosaic effect, and are trimmed with ribbons which forms a part of the festooning visible at the border. A singer seated on the bench beside a girl sings a song. After the selection, two dancers come down the staircase and render a very effective number. Towards the finale, a singer, dressed in a beautiful gown, appears at the head of the staircase and sings to the conclusion of the dance number. Greens, pinks and old rose with a suggestion of blues form the color scheme for this scene. A pink spot is used on the dancers. After the music the models appear in costumes showing Russian and Chinese influences. Most of the gowns displayed in this scene are afternoon modes. The third scene is very spectacular and is entitled the "Court of Jewels," and forms an excellent background for the displaying of jewel gowns that "mirror the light" and the jewel tones that dominate the fashion colors of the Spring. The black drop of scene two is taken away during the close-in and the opening reveals a gray net curtain with long tinsel strands in the folds. Two columns are right and left of the glistening drop. Some of the girls are seen standing on small dais painted in light tones with metallics thrown in on the surface. The sparkling surfaces of the background are very colorful. The set pieces of the preceding scene are grouped a little more off stage on either side. Towards the finale of this scene the girls come down a run way over right and left of the orchestra pit and cross over the front of the house to the first exit. White flood and spots are played upon them. The colorful treatment of the presentation comes with the next scene when the guests gather in the garden for the Easter Bridal Scene. The columns back stage making the drop appear as four pilasters, gleaming in vari-colors under the lighting from the sides and foots. The base of the back drop is opaque, with spear-point windows cut in to permit the transparency and effect of distance to be achieved. A light blue is given the sky drop back of the transparency or back drop, and the lighting graduates to the ambers and rose from the sides. Various girls enter dressed in wedding garb, and when a singer off stage begins the number "O Promies Me," the bride enters in a gorgeous gown of shimmering silks with pearl rope trimmings. There is the customary grouping for the finale.

Rialto Theatre

New York City

Virginia Johnson, Soprano

Miss Johnson is featured this week in the presentation spot of the program, singing "Danny Boy" by Fred W. Westerly. The setting consists of a black plush drop. In the center is a large shamrock, with a smaller shamrock on the upper parts of the drop, right and left. Long green ribbons hang from the stems of the smaller shamrocks and border-line the drop. A double toned spot is used on the singer, pink for head and shoulders, with green on her costume, which is of the conventional Irish colleen type.

The Piccadilly

New York City

The setting this week represents an interior—a living room. One drop carries the set. A window is painted on the right, a large oval topped window with a blue background, the flowering branch of a tree cutting across it at center. Red draperies dress the scene in heavy folds both right and left. At left is a fireplace, with a vase upon it. A table with lamp, etc., is left of center and beside it, near the fireplace, is a tapestried arm chair. The lighting is subdued, the walls of the room being in buff, a blue-purple diffused over them. Harold Kravitt, basso, is discovered in the arm-chair and sings "June Brought the Roses," by Openshaw. He finishes at center of stage, amber spots being thrown on him from off stage.

Next week article No. 1 in the series, "Pioneers in Presentations," will appear. S. L. Rothafel will be interviewed.

Variations

New Music Notes

New York and Chicago both have little musical families at the organ consoles of leading theatres. In New York City, it is Mr. and Mrs. John Hammond at the Piccadilly Theatre, and in Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford of the Chicago are the favorites. At the Tuesday night organ recital given by Mr. Hammond he was assisted by Mrs. Hammond in an organ-piano duet. Mrs. Hammond, besides possessing a fine mastery of the piano, is also a proficient artiste on the organ. They have become popular radio features. The novel and fascinating form of musical entertainment which Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford offer in their two-organ recital is still attracting large audiences to the Chicago Theatre on Sunday noons. Last Sunday their excellent program which included the "Overture and Habanera from 'Carmen'," two small pieces by Victor Herbert, and a fine and diversified selection of certain Tchaikowsky compositions, provided contrasts, and elicited much enthusiasm.

A musical pantomime has been revived for production which is replete with suggestions and subject matter for presentations. The title of the production, "Pierrot the Prodigal" is being given at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre for a series of special Tuesday and Friday matinees with Laurette Taylor in the title role. The music and pantomime are united in such a way as to lend exquisite beauty and charm to the production. The stage effects are most commendable, and the settings very fantastic. It is one of the most attractive productions of the season. The version can be adapted for presentation production.

There seems to be more interest in the second observance of National Music Week, which will be from May 3 to 9. Many conductors and organists will take advantage of this period to introduce festival programs. A booklet is being distributed by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, 45 West Forty-fifth Street, which will be of special interest, "Music Weeks In The Motion Picture Theatres." It is an excellent opportunity to tie-up with local musical organizations, making the motion picture theatre the center of the musical activities for that week.

The first birthday of the Sunday Symphonic Society was auspiciously celebrated on Sunday, March 15, with a special anniversary program. Josiah Zuro, Director of Presentation for the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres, New York City, is the conductor, and under his direction the various concerts have been successful. The members of the orchestra contribute their services gratis. The idea as outlined by Mr. Zuro is excellent and the Society is doing much in advancing better music.

"Old Timers" Tender Carl Laemmle Surprise

Carl Laemmle was tendered a surprise party at Universal City last week, in connection with the 10 year anniversary celebration of the opening of that studio. Laemmle was asked if he would step into the restaurant for luncheon. Inside he found a number of players who appeared in his pictures ten years ago gathered at one table. It was an old fashion family reunion.

The luncheon brought together a number of old time favorites, among them being: Hobart Henley, Dorothy Phillips, Francis Ford, Grace Cunard, Ella Hall, Eddie Lyons. Lee Moran, Gale Henry, William Franey, Cleo Madison, King Baggot, Rosemary Theby, Marie Walcamp, Henry McRae, Isadore Bernstein, Alice Howell, Edward Sloman, Carmen Phillips, G. Raymond Nye, Lois Weber, Max Asher and Douglas Gerrard.

FILM IN NATURAL COLORS

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Color Cinema Co., Louisville, Ky., after eight years of hard work to develop moving picture film in natural colors, claims that his company has finally achieved success.

Balaban & Katz Lease Big Detroit House for 50 Years

The Balaban & Katz Corporation has entered the Detroit motion picture field it was revealed last week with the announcement that its Michigan subsidiary, the Balaban & Katz Corporation of Michigan, has leased for a period of 50 years at an annual rental of $250,000 a new theatre which is to be erected there by the Detroit Metropolitan Corporation.

The theatre will be housed in an office building which will cost more than $4,000,000 exclusive of the land valuation of about $2,125,000. This step is the first one in plan which will call for a consolidation of the Michigan interests of Balaban & Katz with the Kunsky Theatre Enterprises, owning three theatres in Detroit and erecting a fourth one. The net earnings of more than $1,600,000 equivalent was about $650,000. Balaban & Katz will acquire a stock interest in the Kunsky Enterprises as a part of the deal.

The Balaban & Katz Corporation of Delaware, the Chicago company, in 1924 showed net earnings of more than $1,600,000 equivalent after preferred dividends to about $5.30 a share earned on the 264,206 shares of $25 par value common stock outstanding. Earnings in the six months ended December 31, 1924, after taxes and depreciation were $734,837.

Independents Have a Good Field Abroad, Says Hoffman

After six weeks abroad in the interests of his organization, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions, Inc, has returned to New York. Speaking of his trip, he said:

"In my visits to some of the principal film centers of Europe I found in many instances that the independent market is much stronger than in the United States. You will find the film buyers ready and eager to handle good pictures and furthermore they are not afraid to pay for them.

"Another important fact the independent producer and distributor should bear in mind is that too much of the foreign film business is being sold through agents; the principals who are the ones vitally interested never meet. This I consider a great evil and should be remedied."

Gray Seriously Ill

William P. Gray of Lewiston, Me., president and managing director of the Maine and New Hampshire Theatres Company, New England subsidiary of Famous-Players, is seriously ill at a hospital in Baltimore, Md., according to word received in Lewiston.

He was on his way home from Florida when it was deemed best for him to stop his journey and go to the hospital.

Mr. Gray went to Florida several weeks ago for the benefit of his health.

Mo. "Blue" Author Once Under Arrest

Kansas City newspapers have heaped upon the head of Representative Richard Ray, author of Missouri's bluest Sunday closing law, more ironical criticism than has befallen any public official in some time. The bill, which would close virtually everything on Sunday except the churches in the state of Missouri, has been reported out of the committee on official salaries and fees with the recommendation that it "do pass."

But, the "kick" of the whole story, which has not yet been published by the press, is the fact that Representative Ray himself was arrested in Kansas City about sixteen years ago for violating the Sunday closing law, then temporarily in existence, as manager of the old Olympic theatre. This fact is borne out by files of Kansas City newspapers, giving accounts of the arrest, and by William Werner of Kansas City, who then was Ray's operator.

Schenectady State to Farash Circuit on $300,000 Bid

The State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., with a seating capacity of about 2,000 persons and generally regarded as the finest motion picture theatre between New York and Buffalo, was sold under the hammer Tuesday noon at the court house in Schenectady to W. W. Farley, of Albany, president of Farash Theatres, Inc., which has been operating the theatre as well as two other houses in Schenectady. The final bid was made by David Stoneman, of Boston, Mass., and was for $300,000, Mr. Stoneman during the final few minutes of bidding representing Mr. Farley.

There were three bidders for the theatre, each depositing the sum of $5,000 as evidence of good faith before the bidding started. The three were Mr. Stoneman, who was reported to represent Famous Players, but who in reality is a theatrical man and who has been interested in the property to the extent of holding a mortgage; W. W. Farley and C. R. Crane, a stranger who was reported as representing Proctor interests.

The Farash Theatres, Inc., hold a lease of the house until September 1, and inasmuch as this company, in which Mr. Farley is financially interested, operates the Strand and the Albany theatres, the State will probably be run much as in the past and with William Shirley continuing as manager.

N. Y. COMPENSATION BILL

A bill has been introduced in the New York State Legislature by Assemblyman Meyer Alterman, of New York, seeking to amend the workmen's compensation law to the end that employes of motion picture studios may be included within the range of the compensation provisions. The bill provides that employes receiving not more than $25 per day, or $100 a week, may receive compensation for injuries sustained. If the bill passes it will take effect immediately.

N. Y.'s Republican Senate Balks at Smith's Democratic Censor Appointee

Saxe Buys 24th

Milwaukee theatrical circles, still talking about the recent deal whereby the Silliman circuit acquired five additional outskirt houses, have just received a new surprise with the announcement that the Saxe chain has taken over the Merrill, 1500 seat downtown house heretofore controlled by Ascher brothers.

The Merrill transaction, believed to involve several hundred thousand dollars, is regarded as one of the most important in recent years. It gives the Saxes a twenty-fourth theatre to add to their powerful circuit throughout the state. Also with the addition of the Merrill, nine of the Saxe houses are in Milwaukee which is a number equal to that held by J. H. Silliman and Jack Grauman, who control the Silliman chain and who in last week's deal announced plans for a tenth outskirt house.

DAYLIGHT SAVING IN ALBANY

Following announcement by Mayor William S. Hackett, of Albany, that daylight saving will again be adopted in that city, exhibitors in this part of the state are laying plans for a campaign which may result in a victory in certain places. Schenectady and Troy will also have daylight saving this summer.

Bullish Stand of Legislators May Cause Governor to Make Change in Commission Post —Walker Bill Seems Out This Session

THE confirmation of the appointment of Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert, to the New York State Motion Picture Commission is still hanging fire with the Senate stubbornly refusing to o. k. the Governor's selection. It was said around the Capitol this week that if the Senate persists that Governor Smith may name a Buffalo woman to the position, finding that Mrs. Colbert can not get the approval of the upper house of the Legislature.

There is absolutely no intimation of any public hearing on the censorship repeal bill. Senator James J. Walker, who introduced a bill in the Senate has not made any apparent move toward having a public hearing and the very fact that all bills in the Assembly have now gone into rules, would indicate that there is absolutely no chance of this repeal bill being passed at this session of the Legislature.

The Sunday "blue law" bill which would put the ban on Sunday motion picture shows has been killed in committee, the codes committee refusing to report it out, as was predicted in last week's issue of the World. One or two minor bills of interest to the industry, one relating to film with a hazardous base and the other to inclusion of employes in studios in the provisions of the state compensation law, are still in committee, with only about ten days more during which the Legislature of New York State will function.

An effort to hold another public hearing on the Freiberg children's bill at the State Capitol in Albany, on March 16, came to naught, owing to a long drawn out session of the Assembly. The hearing was to have been held to overcome any talk that the opposition did not have an opportunity of expressing itself at the badly bungled hearing of a week ago, at which two exhibitors appeared on account of the fact that there had been no advance notices of the hearing in the legislative index.

Assemblyman Freiberg stated that he had received no letters or communications of any sort opposing the bill, but that he understood Canon William Chase of Brooklyn was at the State Capitol and would offer opposition to the measure if a hearing had been held during the afternoon. Mr. Freiberg further stated that he expected the bill to go to a vote in the lower house of the legislature by the end of the week and that he had every hope of its passage.

Warner Would Have Hays Get Producers' Angle on Booking

CALLING attention to a recent article over his own signature in which he stated that booking combines were making every effort to force exhibitors to join them under threat that otherwise they might not be able to procure product the combines claim to control, Abe Warner, of Warner Bros., said this week that he was going to the bat and request the Hays organization to take some definite action toward ascertaining the attitude of the producing companies in its membership toward this serious business menace.

Warner's action is attributed to a published report that Balban & Katz, Midwest Theatres, Inc., were about to become active in the Louisville territory, and were telling exhibitors that unless they joined the booking combine, they could not be assured of product of certain producing companies. Warner wants to know if—

"Any single producing company or group of producing companies are backing any booking combine in an effort to force exhibitors to turn over their bookings or sell their theatres under the threat that the pictures the combines claim to control will otherwise be withheld.

"If it isn't the duty of the Hays organization to ask the concerns mentioned in the published reports whether they are in sympathy with any combine forcing the exhibitor to turn over his theatre.

"If the companies are not, why don't they issue an official statement and say so, so that exhibitors will know just where they stand, or whether the implied threats of the booking combines are mere bluff."

"Sometime ago," said Mr. Warner, "I issued a statement telling exhibitors that no boking combine had any authority to speak for us, and advised exhibitors to keep a stiff backbone and not be bluffed. At that time it was suggested that other big companies issue a similar statement.

"Warner Bros. is standing solidly on its own feet, and as a member of the Hays organization, we want to know the attitude of the companies toward combines who are trying to frighten exhibitors into turning over their bookings, or selling out their theatres."

FREIBERG BILL MARCH 27

The Freiberg bill, allowing motion picture theatre owners in New York state to admit unaccompanied children on certain days between certain specified hours and under certain restrictions, will go to a vote in both houses of the New York state legislature between now and the closing date of March 27.

Incorporations

While there were only seven companies incorporated in New York State during the past week for the purpose of engaging in the motion picture business, the charters issued by the secretary of state show substantial amounts of capitalization. The companies formed, with their directors and the amount of capitalization, were: Burr Nickle Pictures, of Medina, $100,000, with Burr Nickle, H. Palmer, of New York City; Charles S. Swett, Medina. Lew-Charles Incorporated, of Hoosick Falls, $30,000, Lew Fischer, Fort Edward; A. Barton, Ticonderoga; Charles Putnam, Port Henry. Wilkdun Producing Company, Inc., capitalization not stated, T. Wilkes, T. Donovan, R. Duncan, New York. Rolou Land Company, Inc., $500, D. M. Rosenbaum, M. Siegel, L. E. Inkeles, New York City. Bijou Films, Inc., capitalization not stated, H. Kepp, L. Kepp, S. Null, New York City. MacGregor-Kilbourne Corporation, $25,000, E. J. MacGregor, O. Kilbourne, S. R. Golding, New York. Triad Amusement Company, Inc., $150,000, A. S. Beck, J. E. Bickel, Brooklyn; S. G. Nissenson, New York.

Legality of Ticket Tax Is Now Questioned in Canadian House

ARE the Provincial Amusement Ticket Taxes in Canada illegal? That is the important question that has been raised in the Canadian House of Commons at Ottawa and the matter is to receive due consideration. The subject was raised by T. L. Church, Conservative member for North Toronto, at the session on March 11. Church asked the Federal Government to look into the validity of the Amusement Tax Act in the Province of Ontario. He claimed that the Province had no authority to impose a ticket tax on theatre patrons under the British North America Act, which is the Constitution of Canada.

Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Federal Minister of Justice, announced that the matter would be considered by the Canadian Cabinet in due course.

This brings up the possibility of the abolishment of the Amusement Tax in all nine Canadian Provinces. Each of them has an assessment that figures out at an average of 10 per cent. on the face value of admission tickets. These taxes have been collected by the Provincial Governments now for almost 10 years, first under the guise of war revenue.

In only one Province, that of Quebec, has there been any deviation. Several years ago, the Province of Quebec cleared itself of current debts, largely through liquor profits, when it was decided to abolish the Amusement Tax as a Provincial measure. It has since been taken up by various Quebec cities, however.

Relations Unhindered by Payment Plan, O'Toole Writes

The direct membership payment plan of the M. P. T. O. A. has brought within its ranks a large number of theatre owners "in many States where definite unit affiliation did not exist," M. J. O'Toole informs Joseph Seider, president of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey, in a letter made public this week.

The letter followed a conference on the effect direct membership in the M. P. T. O. A. has upon State bodies. O'Toole, Seider and Sydney S. Cohen were the conferees.

O'Toole in his letter assures Seider that the relationship between the State and National organization is undisturbed by the direct membership payment plan. He writes:

"Under the provisions of our National constitution the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey will have twelve votes, the number equal to the Congressional representation from your state."

KANSAS CONVENTION IN MAY

At a meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri at the association's headquarters in Kansas City Wednesday, the date of the semi-annual convention, which will be the first meeting of the inter-state body as a unit, was set for May 4 and 5 at Excelsior Springs, Mo., a suburb of Kansas City and a health resort.

Three Amendments Will Be Made to Freiberg Bill

In order to appease certain interests, three amendments are to be made to the Freiberg bill relating to the admission of unaccompanied children to motion picture theatres in New York State. The amendments will consist of one to the end that instead of children admitted between the hours of two and six o'clock, that they must be out of the theatre at the latter hour. Those opposing the bill assert that otherwise unaccompanied children might be admitted up to six o'clock and remain through the evening show.

The second amendment to the bill provides that all pictures shown must first be selected by the New York State Motion Picture Commission. This amendment will not be pleasing to many exhibitors, entailing as it will, needless delay and making probable the necessity of a complete change in the program for Saturday afternoons and holiday afternoons, if the theatre owner decides to admit unaccompanied children.

The third amendment provides that the matron in charge of the unaccompanied children in the theatre is to be licensed by the city authorities who will pass upon that person's qualifications and not leave the selection entirely up to the owner of the theatre.

Assemblyman Freiberg, introducer of the bill will consent to these amendments in the hopes of doing away with opposition and assuring the passage of the bill. In its amended form, however, the bill presents but little inducement, even if it is passed and becomes a law, to the motion picture theatre owners of New York State, arranging matters so that they may admit unaccompanied children.

Ex-Sales Head of United Artists In Alberta Convicted of Forgery

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION this week issued a statement announcing it had brought charges of theft and larceny, in connection with the sales of United's film releases, against George A. Margetts, formerly sales manager of the organization's office at Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

According to Mr. Rafferty of the law offices for complainant company, Margetts was tried on one specific charge in Vancouver, that of forging a check amounting to about $100. He was convicted on this charge and a sentence of six month's imprisonment was suspended because of his present ill health, Rafferty says.

These alleged activities of Margetts in other sections of Canada caused United Artists to sustain a loss of about several thousands of dollars, Rafferty told Moving Picture World.

The statement issued by United Artists says in part:

"According to evidence brought out at the trial, Margetts made many sales of United Artists Corporation releases that he never reported to the home office, forging the corporation's indorsements to checks from exhibitors in payment for film rentals."

PILCHER'S ORGANS INCORPORATE

Henry Pilcher's Sons, pipe organ builders of Louisville, Ky., on the 105th anniversary of the business, incorporated it with a capital of $500,000, the business continuing under the same name and management. The company is known as one of the largest organ builders in the world, and has built and installed many of the fine pipe organs now in use on theatres, churches, etc., throughout the country. The original Henry Pilcher started the business in England, moved it to Chicago, and when the plant was burned in the great Chicago fire he moved to Louisville.

United Artists issues another statement in which it is asserted that a man named Howard M. Williams is under arrest in Vancouver on a complaint which the corporation maintains was made by one Miss Elaine McCarthy of Vancouver. She charges Williams, the statement says, with representing himself to her as a "violin leader." From her story, the statement further relates, it is alleged to have been gleaned that Williams "used United Artists Corporation identity in promoting a traveling orchestra for D. W. Griffith's recently released feature film, 'Isn't Life Wonderful?' demanding a cash bond of $500 on the signature of musicians' contracts."

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its consolidated statement (which includes the earnings of subsidiary companies) reports net profits of $2,500,507.16 for the three months and $5,422,349.29 for the twelve months ending December 27, 1924, after deducting all charges and reserves for Federal income and other taxes.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings amount to $9.89 per share for the three months and $20.08 per share for the twelve months on the common stock outstanding.

Arthur S. Kane with Universal; Resigned Associated Presidency

Holds New "U" Post, that of Contact Executive—Is Medium Between Sales and Production Departments—True Pioneer

ONE of the most interesting happenings of the year in the trade is the realignment which has brought Arthur S. Kane, one of the oldest and best known figures in the moving picture industry, into the Universal fold. Until the announcement of his acquisition by Universal, the trade, it would appear, was ignorant of the fact that Kane had resigned as president of Associated Exhibitors. However, Kane himself, it becomes known, held back the announcement of his resignation in deference to Elmer Pearson and the friendly feeling on both sides with which he is leaving the company which he has guided for the last three years.

This announcement coming from Universal also states:

"Kane entered upon his duties at Universal on March 16. His coming fills a long-felt want and one in which his very exceptional abilities both as a producer and as a distributor will find ample scope. Mr. Kane will act as a liaison officer between the sales force, with headquarters at 730 Fifth avenue, and the production forces at Universal City. He will be styled the Contact Executive. This is an entirely new office for Universal and may be a new position in the film business. It is one requiring just the kind of all-around experience which Mr. Kane has enjoyed, together with the utmost of diplomacy, a quality with which Mr. Kane is superbly endowed.

"In a business in which the production and sales are so closely allied in aim, yet separated by three thousand miles, a certain amount of lost motion, friction and downright working at cross purposes is bound to crop up. Every company in the moving picture business figures that these three thousand miles cost the industry more than any one expense or loss. It is Mr. Laemmle's idea to eliminate as much as possible of this loss and friction by designating a point of contact through which each will theoretically work in harmony with the other. It is axiomatic that no production department deliberately makes pictures which the sales department cannot sell, yet the effect of the present system violates more often than supports this axiom. The difficulty is that the production department and the sales department are not in the close sympathy with each other which would be possible if both were located in the same city. It is quite possible that half of Mr. Kane's time will be spent at Universal City and the other half in New York with the sales department.

"Mr. Kane has been in the motion picture business since 1907. At that time he was in the theatrical business in Topeka, Kansas. But he decided that pictures would soon outstrip the legitimate and that it was the part of wisdom to get aboard the picture ship. He opened the Graphic Theatre in Atcheson, Kansas, one of the first picture theatres in this state, and one of the first west of the Mississippi River.

"In September, 1907, he joined the Orlin Crawford exchange system in St. Louis. Later he came up through the old General Film Company to the position of assistant to the president. Mr. Kane first attracted general attention in the industry through his being appointed general manager of Select. This position required not only the utmost of executive ability, but a high degree of diplomacy. Mr. Kane was later elected president of Realart and as such selected the four stars who made the Realart program as well as the productions in which each was to be starred.

"On March 1st, 1921, Mr. Kane became chairman of the board of the Associated Exhibitors and on March 6th, 1922, president, which position he has just resigned in order to undertake Mr. Laemmle's commission."

Six Arrested for $20,000 Loss

The old game of holding out tickets and reselling them seems to account for losses totaling about $20,000 reported to have been sustained by the Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J., during the past months.

Six persons, mostly employes and ex-employes of the Branford, are reported to have confessed to the thefts. They were held in $5,000 bail each for further examination.

St. Joseph, Mo., Elects

Barney Dubinsky, manager of the Tootle Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., has been elected president of the newly organized M. P. T. O., St. Joseph, which is a chapter of the M. P. T. O., Kansas-Missouri. Other officers elected were: Jack Moore, Olive Theatre, first vice-president; Edward Peskay, Penn Theatre, secretary, and John Egli, Hickory Theatre, treasurer. An executive committee will be selected soon, part of the committee to be considered as a standing committee to look after all urgent business matters that might arise. By-laws also will be adopted at a meeting soon.

Norway Through Fonss Plans Films with a General Appeal

OLAF FONSS, considered Europe's foremost romantic actor and a motion picture director of experience, has arrived in New York City on a mission which he describes as having three purposes: to study the American technique of the motion picture, to study American film acting, and to promote an interchange of Scandinavian and American-made pictures through the establishment of a studio in Scandinavia and the production of films of international appeal, featuring well-known American stars and such well-known European stars as Asta Nielson, Betty Nansen and himself. He also hopes to establish a theatre in Copenhagen.

Mr. Fonss comes with regular ambassador's credentials authorized by the Danish Government and will confer with producers both in New York City and Hollywood. He plans to meet Will H. Hays in a few days. His first visit to an American studio will be at the Paramount studio in Long Island.

American pictures, Mr. Fonss finds, have a marvelous tempo, and it is chiefly in that respect, he believes, that foreign pictures fall short of the mark. He will especially study this feature of production technique and the work of editing which is such an integral part of it. While not wishing to be construed as adopting a critical attitude, and meanwhile expressing profound admiration for American pictures, Mr. Fonss declares that Europe can teach America something about detail and artistry. He showed a letter from the late Thos. H. Ince in which the hope is expressed that America will look to Denmark for "fresh inspirations and ideals."

Mr. Fonss first became acquainted with motion pictures in 1911 when Valdemar Psilander and he were the main powers of the Nordisk Fimskompagni. This continued until 1916, when Fonss was engaged by Deutsche Bioskop in Berlin to play the lead in their Homunculus series. Psilander died in 1917 and Fonss took over the studio. A year later he founded his own film company, the Dansk Astra Film, being both artistic manager and instructor. Post-was conditions caused its decease in 1921 and since then Fonss has played in pictures abroad.

The Dane has been in the theatrical business twenty-two years, the first twelve as leading man at the Dagmar Theatre, Copenhagen, the balance of the time playing leads with such stars as Betty Nansen. He has a splendid physique and strong features that remind of the olden Vikings.

Silliman Says He and Grauman Will Not Stop with Big Deal

THAT Jack Grauman is really the power behind the recently organized Wisconsin buying combine known as the Badger Theatres Corporation, is said to be the opinion of many since the announcement last week of the Grauman-Silliman Milwaukee theatre deal involving about $650,000. Silliman is president of the Badger organization. Heretofore the Juneau is said to have been the only house which he and Grauman have held jointly.

Through the deals, the Silliman circuit will control approximately 13,000 seats and with its ten houses will boast two more theatres in Milwaukee than the Saxe chain which heretofore has controlled the greatest number of houses in the city. However, the Saxe chain is still the largest and most powerful in the state, the Silliman circuit being limited to Milwaukee and minus a place which can compare with Saxe's $2,000,000 Wisconsin.

Still further expansion is promised by Silliman, and although he refuses to make known what theatres the further deals will involve, it is understood that negotiations are being carried on for a first run downtown house, three outskirt houses belonging to Charles Wasicheck and for the building of one more new structure. Thus far the Silliman circuit has no downtown representation.

Announcement of the deals spells the swan song for the Rice and Cohen interests in Milwaukee, where they were pioneers in the movie business. Mendel Rice, one of the owners, has been in Los Angeles for some time where he is engaged in the real estate business. Earl and Alexander Rice, his sons, who have had the active management of the chain, expect to join him on the coast and possibly enter the theatre field there. Nathan Cohen, the other partner, will retire from the exhibitor business.

There are still several details to clean up in connection with the deal and in the meantime the Rices will remain at their posts and, if necessary, will delay their departure for several months until Silliman and Grauman can select someone to manage the places.

Missouri Kills Its Standing Room Bill

Missouri exhibitors are relieved of at least one of their legislative worries, the standing room bill having been killed in committee in the house. The measure, which affected all motion picture theatres, as well as legitimate houses, would have been a death blow to the larger first run houses, such as the Newman in Kansas City, in the opinion of exhibitors.

The status of the censorship bill, which is in the committee on criminal jurisprudence, still is unchanged.

NOW "U"-SCHINE TALK

Universal and not Famous Players are negotiating for the controlling interest in the Schine circuit in Western New York, according to reports along Buffalo's Film Row, where it is said that attorneys for the former company have been in town seeking information on the circuit.

WARNS SYRACUSE EXHIBITORS

Based on complaints received from vaudeville houses in Syracuse, Acting Commissioner of Safety Dennis E. Lillis has issued warnings to motion picture houses which are combining vaudeville acts with their picture programs. To do this is a direct violation of the ordinance under which picture houses operate, Lillis points out.

Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., of New York City at a recent session adopted a resolution opposing censorship. The resolution was directed to Governor Smith and contained the organization's offer to aid him in any possible way in the repeal of this law.

Financing Head on Coast Conferring with DeMille

Frank R. Wilson of New York, president of the Motion Picture Capital Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles this week for a conference with Cecil B. De Mille, F. C. Munroe, president of Producers Distributing Corporation, Hunt Stromberg and other independent producers.

Wilson will remain in the West for two weeks. He will take an active part in the launching of Cecil B. De Mille as an independent producer, according to advices.

The common stock of Motion Picture Capital Corporation, said to be the first organized film finance company, was admitted to the New York Curb on March 12, and its initial public offering of 40,000 shares was oversubscribed before its listing.

CHOUTEAU KILLED IN POLO MATCH

Azby A. Chouteau Jr., thirty eight years old, managing director of the Ritz Theatre in Fort Worth and connected with other amusement enterprises in Texas, was fatally hurt while playing polo in Rivercrest County Club, Fort Worth, on the afternoon of March 17. In the second chukker of a hotly contested game his horse fell with him and the animal rolled over on him fracturing his skull. He died five hours later. Chouteau for many years was connected with the Interstate.

Balaban & Katz and A. H. Blank Affiliate

"Announcement is made this week of an affiliation formed in Chicago between Balaban and Katz and the A. H. Blank Circuit. This coalition unites upwards of 100 theatres in the northwest."

The above is credited to be an official statement coming from the offices of Balaban and Katz. In this connection it is reported that the affiliated circuits have negotiated for a headquarters in the Butler Building, North State street, Chicago and expect to take occupancy on May 1.

Covey Bill Sliding

It would seem that the Covey bill, introduced earlier in the Texas legislature by Representative E. L. Covey, seeking to tax all sorts of amusements, stands no chance of passage at this, the Thirty-ninth Legislature. It was reported favorably, however, and is dying the natural death of countless other measures on the calendar. The bill was aimed at taxing the itinerant vendor of amusement; to put him on a parity, as it were, with the exhibitor who night after night, with legitimate means, seeks to draw the same clientele.

Schwalbe Not With Educational, Says E. W. Hammons

Persistent reports that Harry Schwalbe, former secretary-treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, was to become associated with Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., were again brought to the attention of E. W. Hammons, President of Educational, who is in Los Angeles for his spring studio conferences. Hammons issued the following statement:

"Ordinarily I do not take time to deny rumors, but the rumor that Harry Schwalbe is to become associated with Educational and also that Educational is going to handle feature length pictures has been so persistent that I now wish to deny it emphatically.

"I have never even talked to Mr. Schwalbe nor has Mr. Schwalbe ever talked to me about joining Educational.

"Educational has been built up to a successful national organization upon the foundation of specializing in short length subjects, and I have never even considered releasing the short length pictures through Educational."

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Seel's Clever Prologue to Lincoln Film Brought Record to Mississippi Theatre

WHILE the World War did much to efface the last vestige of sectional feeling, still we consider that in breaking the house records with the First National production of Abraham Lincoln at the People's Theatre, Greenville, Miss., Harry Seel has done something decidedly out of the ordinary.

Throughout the south Lincoln has been well received and has played to a nice business, but it has broken few records, for while the greatness of the man has been acclaimed there is still felt a regret at the passing of the splendors of the old plantation days, and it scarcely is to be expected that the story of the life of Lincoln would clean up.

Seel did it, and as usual he did it largely with a local production.

A Nice Production

He knew that he should have to do something to get in a big business and he felt that he could do it with a prologue, but even he was a trifle surprised when the receipts topped those of America, for which Mr. Seel very recently staged a production that put the United Artists production at the head of the list.

Utilizing sixteen little girls; pupils of a local music teacher, he dressed them in the fashion of the '60s, arranged a routine of old time songs and dances and then added a mammy and a picaninny for the comedy. Put together well, it made a delightful offering, and elicited many expressions of appreciation.

And this was done while Mr. Seel was doing extra duty as temporary orchestra leader and organist. His regular leader is ill and he is holding down her job for her, so that he has less than the usual time for rehearsal.

For the Sea Hawk

Another recent clean-up was on The Sea Hawk. For this he used the male quartet adopted by most theatres, but the selections were Sea Fever and a version of The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground, the new words applying to the black flag, which was run up at the conclusion of the number. Between the two selections the pirates summoned a girl captive to do a hornpipe for their delectation, which gave variety to the presentation.

Mr. Seel never lets a feature go through without some special number if it is only an orgologue. His patrons expect something, and he sees that they are not disappointed.

A Splendid Tribute

Mr. Seel has recently received one of the finest tributes that could be paid a manager. He did not tell of this for publication, but it is so unusual that we want to record it here as an inspiration to other managers.

Some weeks ago he wrote that he had been advised that he was to be given recognition for his work in Greenville. This took the form of an offer of the new Saenger house in Shreveport, which is to be completed early in May. This is the home town of the Saengers and the house is to be the finest in their extensive circuit. The appointment to its management is akin to the captaincy of the flagship of a commercial fleet

When it became known that Mr. Seel was likely to be transferred, every civic and commercial organization in Greenville petitioned him to remain. A similar petition was sent to the home office.

Practical Appeal

This was a remarkable and unusual tribute to the place Mr. Seel has made for himself in Greenville affairs, but this is not the real tribute. The petition merely involved the effort of signing the paper. That did not cost anything. But this was backed by an offer to raise locally a fund that would make up to Mr. Seel the difference between his present salary and that he naturally would receive in the more responsible position.

That means something. It means that he has given Greenville such fine entertainment that they are willing to pay for the privilege of having him remain. In addition to their enthusiastic support of his presentation, they are willing to pay him personally to remain and continue to produce.

It is not remarkable that Mr. Seel writes he is not so darned certain about moving to Shreveport. It is a wonderful tribute to his accomplishments.

Lincoln in Box Was a Strong Attractor

It's not so much what you spend as what you do and how you do it that counts. The result is more important than the investment. J. A. Hutcheson, of the Amsterdam, (N. Y.) theatre, got out a nice display for Abraham Lincoln at small cost.

THE BOX DISPLAY

He put a large cut out in a box, placing it where it would not interfere with the sight lines of the patrons in the balcony. The railing was draped with the national colors. No date card was used, for the screen and the house program took care of this, and the display gained in dignity from their absence.

COLD HOT WATER

The original is about two feet high, done in bright lettering, and it got everyone's attention, though it was not put down in front where it would have the advantage of position. It helped make a big business for four days in a two and three change house. It was good advertising, and inexpensive, at that.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

FAMILIAR Hits from Light Operas of Other Days was the chief of five stage numbers on the program with Richard Barthelmess in New Toys. This incident was built upon six light opera selections from as many operettas, and was given rich settings and costuming. Fourteen minutes were used for it, out of the thirty-four minutes allowed for stage numbers. The overture required eight minutes; a baritone four minutes; a mezzo-soprano four minutes, and a soprano four minutes. The Topical Review took up its usual eight minutes, and "New Toys" one hour and twenty minutes, bringing the whole show to two hours and two minutes.

The orchestra played as the overture the well-known Suppe work, "Morning, Noon and Night." Lights for this were: two flesh pink Mestrum floods of 160 amperes from the dome on the musicians; beaded draw curtains closed across the production stage and lighted front and rear by open box lamps of deep blue, augmented by light green, light blue and magenta spots. The large stage was in blue foots and borders, with transparent windows at either side of light green.

Carlo Ferretti, operatic baritone, appeared on the apron of the orchestra stage for "Vision Fugitive" from "Herodiad," and "Carmena," an Italian folk song, as an enchore. Metalline draw curtains were closed across the small production stage, with same floods from the dome as in the preceding number. Artist was picked out by amber spot from the booth. Transparent windows at either side of light green; one flesh pink flood on orchestra from dome; large stage in blue.

Logan's "Pale Moon" was used with which to build up a "vocal portrait" for contralto. Set rocks and boulders stretched across stage, backed up by neutral blue back drop. Large prop moon was center stage, partly concealed behind a boulder, and lighted from behind by a white open box lamp. Across the front of the moon was a streak of red thrown by a concealed baby spot. Back drop hit on either side by open box lamps of blue. Singer stood on rock, costumed as Indian maiden, and was picked out by moonlight blue overhead spot.

After the Topical Review, with its specially scored music, came the soprano solo on the apron of the big stage. Lyric soprano was picked up by lemon spot from the dome, and sang "Ginnamia" from Friml's "The Firefly." Foots and borders of large stage in blue; two medium blue floods from the booth on musicians; beaded draw curtains closed over production stage and hit by two flesh pink floods from the dome. Transparent windows at either side of light green.

The light opera hits were put on in a marble ball room set, with center stairway leading right and left from a landing. Torchiers on the newell posts, and crystal chandeliers from the flies. Lounges and statues as props at either side of the stairs. Incident opened with baritone in "Graustark" costume, standing on stairway singing "The Last Waltz" to soprano draped upon a lounge. At finish he ascended stairs and soprano came center stage for "My Hero" from "The Chocolate Soldier." Tenor in "Graustark" suit contrasting with the other came on from left as soprano exited right and sang "Beautiful Lady" to mezzo-soprano, who came down the stairs. At finish he sat on chair as mezzo-soprano sang "I Love You So," or the Merry Widow Waltz. As encore a dancing team came down the stairs and did the waltz. Next came "When Hearts Are Young" as duet for baritone and soprano. Then the final number, "Auf Wiedersehn," by the ensemble.

Loose Waves Are Self-Animating

Brown was framing a display on Norma Talmadge in The Only Woman, using the fine 24-sheet as the basis of his art work. This was mounted on rosin paper, stretching the width of the lobby, painted sky blue. In the centre was an irregular opening covered with black scrim on which were painted the star and title, running off onto the support. Back of this was a sky backing, lighted from the rear of the main section.

In front was a set waves, hung from the ceiling by fine wires. The wires were so long, and weight so light that a slight push would keep the waves moving for several minutes, either the doorkeeper or the cashier looking after this detail. It made motion without the cost or trouble of a motor and heightened the effect of the cutout, and that finely designed 24-sheet would sell without any additional aid to most patrons.

FRANCIS M. KADOW BELIEVES IN STRONG, SIMPLE EFFECTS IN HIS BANNERS

The Peter Pan display at the Mikadow Theatre, Manitowoc, Wis., was 21 feet wide and 4 deep. The background is dark green, stippled in black with a flasher on the title lights. For North of 36 three flashers were used to spell out the three words, so that the sign was always light in one section. It drew 500 paid admissions over The Covered Wagon. The sign cost $56 and it costs six or seven dollars to change.

Employment Agency Aided Dix Feature

H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., made a very liberal adaptation of the "society" stunt for A Man Must Live. He handled it so well that he not only advertised the play to extra business but landed a few jobs for the unemployed.

Using a special letterhead of the "A Man Must Live Employment Agency," with a post office box address, he very frankly admitted in the opening paragraph that the stunt was to advertise a picture, the section reading:

"This letter we hope will serve two purposes. First, it is written to advertise a picture coming to the Empire next Wednesday for four days, Richard Dix in 'A Man Must Live,' and, second, in hopes that through it we will be able to obtain employment for some needy person."

It went on to tell the story of the play, explaining the predicament of the hero, and in a third paragraph it went on to say that as the story dealt with the struggle for existence, it had suggested this agency. The recipient was urged to advise the agency of any opening of which he knew, while a slip was enclosed on which the reader could suggest some needy person.

The slip, being the smaller, was apt to be the first read. The interest created was transferred to the letter, and this was read through in spite of the frank admission that it was advertising.

It was sent to a very select mailing list of one thousand names, and it did land a few jobs and many more ticket sales.

Bucked Two

Because a tent show was booked into Corpus Christi, Texas, one of the picture houses booked in a small repertoire show to fight it with. The Amusu booked in Norma Talmadge in Secrets and made so much fuss about it that the receipts did not drop in the face of double competition, and with even receipts it made more money than the other house, for the rental was smaller than the other's salary list.

THIS IS PRETTY MUCH LIKE ANY OTHER DOG PARADE BUT—

The difference is that this was used by the Whiteladies Cinema, Bristol, England, to put over Abraham Lincoln. There were several hundred dogs in line, each blanketed for the Rockett production. It won attention to the picture if it did not fit.

Gets New Angle on a Good Old Stunt

It has already been reported that Howard Waugh, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, got a lot out of a hook-up page on America in which the portrait cut of a president appeared in each space. To win prizes the contestant had to give the name, number of terms served, birth date and date of death, cause of death and political affiliation. The libraries reported an unusual run on the reference books.

It develops that Waugh also used another stunt that got attention. He placed in the window of a jewelry store a large cage with seven hoops, each lettered with one of the letters forming America. There were seven birds in the cage and if you could catch one bird in each ring and get a clerk out to the sidewalk to verify the fact before the birds changed you got a diamond ring. After the ring was given ticket prizes were offered, but the ring was not claimed as the birds were far too lively to be caught long enough to get the ring, though crowds stood in front of the window all day long and each member was there long enough to absorb facts about the picture and the jeweler's stock.

The birds were loaned by a dealer in return for a credit card and the stunt cost only the labor of writing the cards. This is better than the original tortoise idea, because the birds give the spectators more action.

Hotel Stuff

Macon, Ga., has a large hotel, the Dempsey. Thomas G. Coleman supplied it with 300 cards to be hung on the beds, each reading: "This is not The Golden Bed, such as they have in the Paramount picture at the Rialto, but you'll rest easy any night you are in the Dempsey." Each time a room changed tenants a new card was hung up.

It was used by McCurdy, of the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, for Secrets of the Night, one of Universal's "white list" pictures. It was worth the trouble and cost to suggest bigness.

WAUGH'S CORSAIR REALLY RODE THE WAVES IN MEMPHIS

Loew's Palace display was a tank with a very clever model. A fan mounted in one corner and masked in as shown, kept the boat rocking on the miniature waves. The sides were decorated with sketchy seascapes. It was one of his best.

Had Floating Ship for The Sea Hawk

Howard Waugh, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, started his campaign on The Sea Hawk by soliciting ideas from the Pen and Pencil Club, and the result was a vastly effective lobby display.

A well constructed model of a galleass was floated on a tank of water in the lobby. It was anchored fore and aft so that when the breeze from a concealed electric fan hit the sails it would bob about with a very realistic effect. The fan is hidden by the semi-circular box at the right of the cut. All four sides were masked in with panels on which the title was lettered. It attracted the close attention of practically every patron. It was shown for two weeks in advance.

Waugh also distributed the telephone pads already mentioned, and tacked 1,300 14x44 inch cards to as many telephone poles.

With extra advertising and a number of store windows he put The Sea Hawk over to the business it deserves.

Made an Effect for News Reels' Scenes

Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., got the news that Floyd Collins had been found dead after the last edition of the evening papers had gone to press.

He had scenes in the International News, showing the rescue work at Sand Cave. He rearranged the weekly to bring these to the head of the reel, prepared a slide announcing that the rescue workers had penetrated the cave, to find Collins dead, faded the slide into the first scene of reel, without the title, and ran these scenes as slowly as was permissible. At the cost of a little trouble and one slide he gained an effect that left an indelible impression upon those in the audience. It created a feeling that will work for the good of the house for a long time to come. Little things like that will make a lasting impression, and little things like that mark the difference between mere exhibition and management.

Moved the Bed

When he played The Golden Bed at the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, Barry Burke persuaded the local warehouse company to banner its vans "Without a scratch. Moving The Golden Bed to the Palace Theatre."

They couldn't laugh that off, so they went to see the scratchless bed.

Beat Bam

James F. Powers, reading about the new Paramount match hook-up writes from the Bijou theatre, New Haven, to point out that three years ago he used the matches to advertise Monte Christo at the Strand theatre, Hoboken, with the copy "You can't find a match for Monte Christo." That puts him three years ahead of Bam as a match user.

P. S.—And now comes Irwin R. Franklyn, now managing director of the New Broadway theatre, Charlotte, N. C., who explains that he used it at the Dome theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, in October, 1923, for Potash and Perlmutter, with the comment "A striking hit" with title and date.

Well, anyhow, anyone who handles Paramount pictures can get Paramount matches. That part of it is new.

A STRIKING BILL STAND FROM KAMLOOPS, B. C., WITH A STAGE FOR A SPECIAL DISPLAY

This is contributed by M. P. Wetherell. The central portion is set the same as a lobby display and is provided with wiring for lighting effects. The photograph is rather dim, for the light is not strong these winter days up in British Columbia, but you can get the idea, and if you can copy it you'll have as good a display as he gets. He does the work himself, being clever with the brush.

A SLOGAN THAT RUNS IN LIGHT ON THE MARQUISE

The Colonial Theatre, Richmond, Va., has a wide awning and can stretch the message out. It worked particularly well for Oh, Doctor. The framed 24-sheet on top goes nicely into the balcony space and puts the paper where it does real work.

Pages Parkers Into Paradise

Houston, Texas, has a series of seven parking zones, and Al Lever, of the Isis Theatre, used these to put over A Thief in Paradise. He had signs four by ten feet painted and posted at either entrance to the zones. The long way was the horizontal measurement, and the space was divided by a heavy black line. Above this was "Beware of a thief," and below was "Play safe. Park your car inside."

Letting these run for five days, he capitalized the interest on the sixth by advertising that A Thief in Paradise was opening at the Isis. As most persons use the parking zones regularly, this teaser worked strongly.

He also used a diamond shaped card with the word "thief" the most prominently displayed. These were placed inside cars so they showed through the glass of the doors. This was not so good since the car stunt has been overworked by both theatres and merchants.

As a side stunt he put a couple of arcs and a motion camera into the lobby and photographed the entering crowds. The pictures were displayed the following week and the single stunt sold the tickets in pairs.

Kerrigan Sold Books

Making a personal appearance at the Hippodrome Theatre, Buffalo, in connection with Captain Blood, J. Warren Kerrigan agreed to spend several hours one afternoon in the book department of a big store, autographing copies of the novel purchased at that time. His arm ached when he was through, but several hundred copies had been sold and several thousand persons interested in the play, for the store took large spaces in the daily papers to tie in to the engagement.

Reversed

The front display on Quo Vadis, at the Apollo Theatre, New York, reverses the usual idea. It shows a chariot race; which is colorful but not germane to the picture, with the chariots stationary and the background moving. It has about the same effect and involves less building.

The Short Page Was Better Than a Full

That a part page may be better than a full page does not sound plausible, but Charles H. Amos, of the Alhambra Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., demonstrated the fact that a seven column drop of 17½ inches was better than a full page.

He got eight merchants to come in on a co-op, each of the spaces carrying a section of a cut-up portrait of Richard Dix. The idea being to resemble the facial hash and name the star. The latter was not particularly difficult, since each space alluded to A Man Must Live. Neatness served to make the awarding of the prizes easier. A week's pass was given the best paste-up with nine singles for the next in line.

Because this was not a full page, he was able to get it run on page three, along with the telegraphic news, instead of having it thrown to the back of the sheet, as would have been the case had it taken the entire page. On page three you could not overlook it.

As a by-product, each of the cooperators gave plenty of window space to the display of stills and other material on the picture.

Chene Keeps Busy With Local Stunts

H. A. Chenoweth, of E. M. Loew's Music Hall Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., is still busy with local stunts, making for good will and more business. He writes he has a big one coming through. Meanwhile he reports on a couple of special matinees.

One of these was under the auspices of the local lodge of Elks and was given to the children of the poor. The Elks acted as hosts, distributed the tickets, served as reception committee, and were given the lead over the theatre in the newspaper stories. Chene knows that he will get his without trying to hog everything.

Another was a newsboy's special, with the Pawtucket Times, the ostensible object being the showing of a picture made in the Times office. The Boy Scouts turned out their drum corps to act as escort, and there was a parade prior to the showing; which latter lasted about two hours. Just to jazz things up a number of presents, including live rabbits and guinea pigs, were given out.

At both of these shows Chene drew upon his "gang" of amateurs to help out the films. He has collected a decidedly clever troupe, and many of the youngsters have been booked into houses in the nearby towns. The Music Hall has become as much a booking centre as was the famous old "Corner" in New York when Willie Hammerstein ran what is now the Rialto as the Victoria music hall. Amateur Night to Chene means good talent with a local pull, and each time he announces a public amateur night he is certain to pack the house.

Had Them Guessing

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., used the dripping water idea on Hot Water, offering $5 in gold to anyone who could figure out the number of minutes it took the water to drip out of a barrel. No one figured correctly, so there was no award, but the lobby was filled with persons timing the seepage and trying to figure out how long it would take.

As the estimate blanks were handy—and free—there were frequent revisions of the original estimate, but no one seemed to hit it off. Of course the contest was closed before the water ran too low, but it lasted long enough to have the entire town talking.

KID BOXERS WERE A GREAT BALLY FOR DEMPSEY

Advertised to Get Telephone Replies

Using the classified ads to get people to telephone was one of the ways W. G. League took to put over The Fast Worker at the Strand Theatre, Memphis. He advertised "We can use hundreds of fast workers all next week in Memphis. For complete and confidential mention call 6-9538 Monday from 11 to 4."

Those who called were told about Reginald Denny and Mr. League complimented the paper on the fact that he had received more than 300 replies. This, of course, was played up by the advertising manager and got further publicity. Just what the 300 callers thought of the stunt may have been something else. In many places the reaction will be hurtful.

The house orchestra broadcast a concert from a local radio station and a street ballyhoo was employed to go around on crutches with a bandaged leg. On his back appeared the legend: "I got this way trying to follow The Fast Worker."

Two hundred automobile radiator cards were put out and the street cars urged the reader to "take this car to see——" etc.

Endless Chain

Working out an improvement on the telephone stunt, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., called up a limited number of fans, told them about the coming of East of Suez and asked them to ask their friends to spread the word. He got a wide circulation with comparatively little telephoning.

It's strictly small town stuff, but in Sumter the "Oscar White telephoned me that——" was a real stunt.

Appreciating the value of Griffith's name, George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., used three times the usual quantity of paper on Isn't Life Wonderful and not only made better business but got them into the house impressed by the fact that the picture must be good to be so well advertised, so they liked it better than they otherwise might have done.

ANOTHER FOYER DISPLAY FROM ASCHER'S MERRILL

This Milwaukee house makes a specialty of this topside advertising, and seems to make it pay. For Oh, Doctor! a medicine bottle, glass, bandage and clock backed up the title. A nicely bandaged broken heart might have helped here.

Tagged Keys Were Locked Doors Help

Charles Morrison used 600 door keys to help advertise Locked Doors. The keys were purchased for very little from the hardware store, being an accumulation of old keys of no particular use. Every store has a box full that it is glad to get rid of.

Some of these had handkerchiefs tied to them while the rest carried baggage tags printed for Locked Doors. The newspapers carried stories to the effect that some of these keys were as good as passes for the performance, but did not explain that these were the ones with the handkerchiefs. The result was that nearly 600 persons showed up and those who had baggage tags paid their way in.

On the side the hardware store supplying the keys donated a window for a hook-in display of locks.

The stunt served to get extra press stories, and put business far above the average.

SPANISH EXPLOITATION ON THE HUNCHBACK IN VALENCIA

This cut shows the house dress on one of the four first runs of the picture, Madrid, Barcelona and Zaragoza being the other three cities to get the first chance at this presentation of the well known Hugo classic. Note how the sheets are tilted.

Makes Competition of a Puzzle Stunt

George J. Schade, of the Sandusky theatre building bearing his name, has worked out the best use of the crossword puzzle to date. There is none of that "the first" or "the first five" about Schade's idea.

He arranged a crossworder on So Big, which carried the title, house and date. At an announced time he gave these puzzles out to all school children who came for them. All who returned the puzzle, properly worked out, within a given time were given passes to the show. The time was fairly short, but long enough to be fair to the school children who were the only eligibles.

The ticket distribution was large, but Mr. Schade knows that now and then a heavy distribution will make the best advertisement, not to count in the good will of the delighted kiddies. Limit the idea to five or ten—or fifty—and there will be a lot of disappointments, and a disappointed child is not a good advertisement.

Red Heralds

One of Howard Price Kingsmore's stunts on East of Suez was a herald one side of which was done in red ink overprinted in black with Chinese ideographs and "When East meets West." On the reverse in black on white, was the Kipling verse which inspired the title, along with the necessary information as to star, attraction and where and when. The attraction of the red repays the extra printing cost.

An Envelope Stunt

Number ten envelopes (legal size) were printed up with "When is a husband not a husband?" and thrown around where people could see the striking line. The answer was that he was not a husband when he was divorced, and told that Tomorrow's Love was the comedy of a wife who had to vamp her own ex-husband to get him back, adding that it could be seen at the Rialto Theatre, the same being in Atlanta.

It was a good eye catcher and worth the additional cost of the envelope and handling.

Publishers Hook to New York Run

When Colleen Moore in So Big opened at the New York Mark-Strand, Doubleday, Page & Co., the publishers of the book took a 105 by 2 to advertise the novel and the fact that free tickets were to be had with early copies of the book purchased at the stores listed in the display. It was a nicely displayed advertisement and the cut, done from a photograph, was given greater value through the drop-out process, which consists in etching the high lights, as was done with the Valentino cuts on Beaucaire. It had all of the nice display of a magazine advertisement and the style can be adapted for a picture theatre if the copy is written with that end in view. You can get a great many good ideas from the better class magazines if you take the trouble to look them over with seeing eyes. As So Big is still a two dollar book, the publishers could afford a drive, but it goes to show that even the large concerns appreciate the value of the hook-up idea, and it may be useful to show your local book seller. If Doubleday, Page & Co. can cooperate, he can.

Sells Lincoln Story on an Itemized List

Taking a nine and a half inch drop across seven columns, the American Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has plenty of space in which to list the chief events in the picture, and it does it very completely. There is no display of fancy typography, but the space is intelligently set, because it is planned to be read without effort. Breaking the items into two columns makes the text much easier to read. Thrown in single lines across that 33-em space, the type would have confused and few persons would have struggled through to the end. Making it not much wider than a newspaper column and not too wide for the ten point type gives ease in reading, and probably few went away from the space without reading the majority of the talk, and reading it, some of the points simply had to sell. There is appeal to many of the "whys" set forth here, and if one does not make a sale another probably will. It gives a suggestion of completeness and veracity, and the portrait cut helps materially. The smaller cuts relieve the space but probably do not do much selling, and in the lower left hand corner is a special appeal to the school children, which probably backs up other efforts along the same lines. This space would have been better had the printer contrived to give the house name a better showing, but where the story is so completely sold, the 24 point name will get over, for people will look for it in case they do not see it at first. For that matter it is probable that the billboards and accessory advertising established the connection between the house and attraction long before this advertisement was run. We do not, as a rule, favor such large displays, but in this instance we believe that the added space was a good investment in dignity, if nothing else. It made the picture look big because it was so generously displayed. Most spaces of this size probably would carry more cut material. There is just one thing that will sell Lincoln, and that is his own picture and the idea of the story of his life, and this latter may be gotten over more completely in type than in cut. We think that the American did a nice job of proportioning, using neither too much nor too little, but just about enough. We have seen fancier displays on this subject, but not much better advertising, for advertising is a matter of selling and not merely of appearance. At that this is not an unsightly space by any means. It is merely that it is too businesslike to be highly decorative.

Chester Was There

Co-operating with the Baltimore Sun, which runs the Gump comics in that city, the Garden Theatre entertained Chester Gump recently for a knockout. Al Feinman, Universalist, helped to frame the stunt, which included meeting Chester at the station and escorting him to the Garden. For this purpose the Sun had organized the youthful population into a Chester Gump Club the preceding fortnight. Some 5,000 boys and a band of 42 pieces formed his escort and even the other papers had to take notice of Chester's presence.

A NICE BALANCE BETWEEN CUT AND SALES TALK

arouses curiosity as to innocent bigamy. Most Chicago announcements are held down too much. This gives more than ample announcement, and yet the space does not appear to be overcrowded, and holding mostly to small type faces gives a fine display to both star and title.

Ties Hoot Gibson to a Stock Convention

This is only the upper portion of a two twelves from the America Theatre, Denver, but it gives the essential portion of the appeal. There was a stockmen's convention in town and the America advanced The Ridin' Kid from Powder River as the best Western it could obtain for their diversion. We do not believe that the America expected to derive much business from the delegates to the convention. In most instances the delegates are too full of business to go to the theatre, and the entertainment program is planned to use all of their spare time. The big idea was not so much to sell the Hoot Gibson to the convention as to sell it through that appeal. It suggests to the general public, particularly interested for the moment in ranch life, that if The Ridin' Kid is good enough to offer the stockmen, it is good enough for the Denverites to see, so the citizenry goes, and the theatre accomplishes a full attendance without material number of stockmen among those present. This is about the only way to make money out of a convention. Ride on the interest created and sell to the local patrons. The visitors are mostly too busy.

APPEALS TO A CONVENTION

Stilted Display Is Not Much On Looks

We scarcely would offer this example from the Lyceum Theatre, Minneapolis, as a triumph of the compositor's art, and yet it is by no means as bad as it looks, for the copy is well done, though it is fairly thrown into the space. It is sold from the sensational angle, to hook up to the same stars in His Hour, and while The Wife of the Centaur is scarcely in the same literary class with the Glyn bosh, it possesses the same appeal and will draw the same type of audience, though it is possible to add the more intelligent clientele for this. The type placement suggests crudity, yet it gets the announcement over, and since it does that, and the copy is good, it fulfills its mission even though it may not please the eye. His Hour has been so universally profitable to the theatres playing it that the hook in on that story is well-advised, though the present play is a decidedly more intelligent offering and could be sold to many who might not care for the Glyn product. The best sale is made in the eight point in the lower section, though "More than man—less than beast" is going to be a terrific thrill to the flapper.

POORLY SET

Too Much Lettering Hurts This Display

Here is another example of the weakening effect of hand work. It is the announcement of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo. The cut material is unusually good. It seems to be plan book stuff, but it is put into the layout to get a good effect. As an attractor it is all that could be desired, but the hand lettering weakens the smaller talk almost to nothingness. It is not even good lettering. Here is a two dollar attraction, playing back at popular prices. The chief appeal of the advertisement is this fact, backed by the comments of the local critics on the initial run. Instead of giving this the best possible play-up with a strong letter for the two-dollar angle and an eight or ten point for the criticisms, the price angle is played up in a schoolboy handwriting, and you scarcely see the "$2.00," which is the most important point in that section of the space, while the criticisms are lettered in with a careless attention to eligibility. Even the name of Fairbanks does not get the splash that would be possible from a stronger type letter even in smaller size. About half the sale is made on the cuts, and little or none on what is supposed to be the sales argument. Even the prices, set into the oval are obscured. An 18 point bold, upper and lower set straight across the space, to make for easy reading would be worth many times this "ornamental" display, which looks almost to be a part of the cut. Probably other forms of announcement hammered on the prices, but where there are about 44 column inches at the command of the advertising man he certainly should have done better than this. The Thief of Bagdad will sell itself if it is properly advertised, but just because it is one of the outstanding pictures of its day is the very reason why the advertising man should use his very best efforts to put it over with the best advertising he can do. The bigger the picture, the more carefully should the advertising be planned; not because you cannot sell it without the best advertisement, but because you can make so much more money if you give it every chance. You can book in The Thief of Bagdad and do more than ordinary business with a routine campaign. You can double those takings, and do even better, if you back its innate selling power with the best campaign you can devise. And "best" does not mean trick lettering. It means a bold and readable announcement. This space does not measure up.

The stunt suited the style of feature and helped get extra big business.

"The Dressmaker from Paris"

Gorgeous Costuming and Pretty Models Chief Features of This Paramount Production

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Outside of being a gorgeous opportunity to stage a local fashion show, "The Dressmaker from Paris" offers pretty fair entertainment from the story angle, though the plot works to a forced climax through some rather unreal situations which, while effective, test the spectator's credence. If you merely seek entertainment without too much logic you will like the play with its hits at the small-town attitude.

Regarded as a travesty rather than straight drama, it is decidedly good, but the fashion show will probably prove the stronger sales angle. The presentation brings back to the screen Leatrice Joy, who plays a French midinette, or dressmaker's apprentice, whose ambition carries her to the head of a Chicago shop. She plays the earlier scenes with vivacity and shows real strength in her big moments and almost makes the situations seem real. Ernest Torrence has a part different from a majority of his characters. As the country store keeper he employes a capital make-up and plays with sincerity an illogical character.

Allen Forrest and Mildred Harris are featured in the support and these four, with Larry Gray, carry the major portion of the plot, but the real stars are the fourteen models in the fashion show, and they live up to the program specifications.

The "Dressmaker from Paris" should appeal especially to your feminine patronage and will probably please the majority of spectators.

Story

Billy Brent, of the A. E. F., enjoying a leave of absence in Paris, meets Fifi, a dressmaker's shop girl, and they are strongly attracted toward each other. Billy is suddenly recalled to the front. Several years later he is back home in Clarion, Ill., junior partner in Angus McGregor's store and engaged to Angus' daughter, who secretly prefers Allan Stone. Angus goes for a vacation and Billy, determined to shake some of the dust out of the venerable institution, plans a huge sale and a fashion show. The latter is to be staged by Fifi, now operating in Chicago under the name of "Louise." Clarion is beneath her notice, but she sees a picture of Billy on the letterhead asking for a booking and takes her show to the small town. She is received with open arms by the Mayor and the leading citizens, but some of the girls visit a local roadhouse with the local swains, there is a drunken row and one of the boys is hurt. His mother leads the town against the offending troupe and Fifi is found in Allan's bedroom by Angus. She endures his reproaches to shield the daughter, but Angus discovers her fur coat on the sofa and hurries to the rescue of Fifi, bravely proclaiming what he supposes to be his daughter's shame, only to find that Billy wants Fifi and Joan wants Allan, so the teacup tempest blows over in approved fashion.

"Seven Chances"

Buster Keaton's Newest Is a Hilarious Adaptation of a Stage Farce That Is a Riot of Laughs

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In producing Buster Keaton's newest feature comedy for Metro-Goldwyn, David Belasco's successful stage farce, "Seven Chances," was used as a basis and elaborated with a multitude of gags devised by such experts as Jean Havez and Clyde Bruckman, who have outdone all their previous efforts, with the result that this picture is a hilarious comedy with a riot of laughs.

The idea behind "Seven Chances" is the sure-fire comedy situation of a chap who suddenly learns that he must be married within a few hours in order to secure an inheritance. This opens up almost unlimited possibilities for highly amusing situations and not one has been overlooked here.

The picture starts off with laughs where Buster is shown trying during the four seasons to propose, the lapse of time being indicated by the growth of the girl's dog. Then the lawyer with the will is mistaken for a man with a summons and there is an amusing chase. Buster proposes to "the" girl but gets so mixed in his language that she indignantly refuses him. Here the title comes in, for he takes advantage of the chances by proposing to seven girls he knows. Each one turns him down and each refusal is good for another laugh.

Then begins a free-for-all fun fest. Buster starts to proposing to everything in skirts, including a kid masquerading in long skirts, a negress, a dummy in a store and even a Scotchman. The "only" girl changes her mind and a slow-moving negro on a slower-moving horse starts to do a Paul Revere. Buster's chum gives the story to the press and Buster, waiting at the church, finds himself mobbed by hundreds of prospective brides.

The fun gets faster and faster as Buster finally gets the note and starts out to reach the girl's house with the mad mob of women after him, using every means to stop him. He gets hauled up in a steam shovel, jumps into a lake, climbs a hill, leaps a chasm and finally starts an avalanche of stones which chases him all the way down, but to no avail, as another mob of women await him at the bottom. Finally he reaches the house, but gets caught in the gate and drags it after him, winning out at the last minute.

This only gives an idea of the amusing situations, every one of which are good for a number of laughs.

Buster is excellent as the prospective groom and has not overlooked a bet in directing this picture. Snits Edwards as the lawyer and T. Roy Barnes as the friend are also good for a number of laughs. Ruth Dwyer is attractive as the girl.

"A Cafe in Cairo"

Colorful and Dashing Desert Romance Starring Priscilla Dean Provides Exciting Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

From Spain, the scene of her "Siren of Seville," Priscilla Dean turns to Egypt as the locale for "A Cafe in Cairo," her newest Hunt Stromberg production which is being released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Based on a popular novel by Izola Forrester, the story is one of the "desert" type, with many of the elements of the "sheik" picture, but notwithstanding the familiarity of backgrounds and several of the situations, the turbulent romance between an English girl and an American soldier of fortune with the fiery leader of a band of desert brigands as the rival is exceedingly well handled and provides pleasing entertainment.

The story moves rapidly, with an abundance of dash and action, and is in keeping with the vivacious role portrayed by the star. Never for a moment is the interest allowed to lag. Miss Dean gives an excellent performance; in fact, we doubt if she has ever been seen to better advantage. Robert Ellis is thoroughly satisfactory as the American, Harry Woods aggressive and villainous enough to satisfy as the bandit leader, and the subordinate roles are all well handled.

The picture has been given an elaborate production, with a number of striking and elaborate sets depicting the city of Cairo with its bazaars, cafes, etc.; there are stirring desert scenes with hundreds of men in Arabian costumes on fast horses, and a thrilling melodramatic climax in which the hero, bound hand and foot, is dropped into the Nile and rescued by the heroine who dives after him. Then follows an exciting chase in motorboats.

Chet Withey has given this picture excellent direction and succeeded admirably in suggesting an atmosphere of Oriental mysticism and intrigue, and forcefully developing the plot.

In our opinion "A Cafe in Cairo" is the best of Priscilla Dean's recent productions and should provide enjoyment for the great majority of patrons.

"Scar Hanan"

Yakima Canutt, Rodeo Champion, Makes His Debut as F. B. O. Star in an Exciting Western

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Scar Hanan," F. B. O. is offering the first of a series of westerns starring Yakima Canutt who has already made a good impression by his work in a limited number of productions released through other channels.

This star comes to the screen unusually well equipped for heroic western roles, for not only is he an all-around rodeo champion, an expert in riding, broncho-busting, lassoing, etc., exceptionally quick in handling a gat and thoroughly able to give a good account of himself in any of the difficult or exciting situations in which he may be placed, but is possessed of a pleasing personality and an ease in performing his stunts and a naturalness that registers effectively.

The story of "Scar Hanan" follows familar lines and concerns a cowboy who starts out to locate the murderer of his father and avenge his death. Right at the opening the star has a scene with a good "punch" where he demonstrates his ability to ride a bucking broncho and all through the story he has chances for effective scenes, stopping runaways, man-to-man encounters, daring leaps to the back of his horse, and the many other stunts which are expected in a western.

The romantic angle has not been neglected, and in fact there is conflict between the heroine and an adventuress who finally gives him the information that makes his quest successful. Co-incidence has been rather over-played in developing the story, but nevertheless, "Scar Hanan" especially because of the fine work of Yakima Canutt, should prove a thoroughly satisfactory attraction for audiences that like "westerns."

Ben Wilson who has had wide experience in both producing and directing westerns and is familiar with what his clientele wants, has effectively directed this picture, giving it good snap and keeping the interest well sustained.with plenty of action.

Mr. Canutt has a capable supporting cast including Richard Hatton and Francis Ford who are stars in their own right.

"Headwinds"

House Peters and Patsy Ruth Miller in Universal-Jewel Sea Romance

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

A. M. Sinclair Wilt's Saturday Evening Post story, "Headwinds," also published in book form, offered splendid opportunities for adaptation as a motion picture. A sea story, except for a brief episode on the land, there were chances for a director to supply colorful backgrounds and thrilling as well as romantic drama. These Herbert Blache has provided in the Universal-Jewel picture of the same name, co-starring House Peters and Patsy Ruth Miller. The production is pictorially fine, especially in a dream sequence that shows destroyers of the United States Navy pursuing the sailing vessel, coming to grief on the rocks and at last capturing the victim.

As a whole "Headwinds" registers as fair entertainment. Both the director and the chief players seem to have had difficulties with the psychological aspect of the story. This deals with the kidnapping and taming of an impetuous girl by the man who loves her. In the original story the hero was brusque to the point of roughness, as he knew it was fatal to yield one point; in the picture Peters adopts a superior attitude toward the girl, and as a result he does not always enlist sympathy.

Any picture that delineates a change in character—a reformation—requires skilful treatment, just as the psychological story is one of the hardest to write. Audiences are lenient when it is the woman who does the reforming; when it is the man who pulls the strings, many critical eyes are focussed on the screen.

Miss Miller is generally good as the girl who will not listen to advice. She would have been better if she had been given more incident, for then she could have placed less dependency on facial expressions. As it is, she is mostly a foil for Peters.

The dream episode, which is very well done, comes as a surprise and takes up so much footage that it slows up the progress of the plot.

"Sally"

Colleen Moore and Leon Errol Score Heavily in Pleasing Adaptation of Ziegfeld Musical Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Colleen Moore as the star, "Sally," one of the most successful productions of Flo Ziegfeld, one of America's foremost producers of musical comedy, has reached the screen as a First National production, with the added attraction of having Leon Errol, the comedian of the stage version, in the cast.

"Sally" proves to be an excellent vehicle for Miss Moore. As the little orphan girl, so mischievous that the home is glad to get rid of her, who learns to dance but is unable to get a chance and becomes dish-washer in a restaurant, and finally through a trick of fate gets an opportunity to masquerade as a celebrated dancer and makes good, finally becoming a star, Colleen has one of the best roles of her career. Vastly different from her characterization of "So Big," the role of Sally requires vivacity, light-heartedness and ability to dance, and in every phase she gives a fine performance.

As was to be expected, Leon Errol, who was a big hit on the stage, scores heavily. His inimitable stunt of falling over his own feet is a feature of his work and it is good for a laugh every time it is used, but his entire performance registers as it did on the stage, for Mr. Errol is an excellent comedian.

The story of "Sally" is distinctly refreshing, with a pretty little romance between her and another foundling, the adopted son of a wealthy man, the requisite amount of pathos to produce sympathy for the little girl, a number of laughs and a good snap to the production, which has been ably directed by Alfred E. Green.

Due to these points, rather than to any strength of plot, "Sally" should prove a pleasing attraction for the majority of theatregoers, for, like so many musical comedy stories, the plot is light, with little drama and suspense, and serves only as a basis for the other entertaining features.

This picture has been given an excellent production, with a number of attractive scenes, including one in color where Sally finally makes her big hit. In addition to Errol as the grand duke who becomes a waiter, the cast includes Lloyd Hughes, who is fine as the rich chap; Dan Mason, who gives an amusing portrayal of the cafe owner, and Myrtle Stedman as a society woman.

When all the pupils have left Mrs. Du Fey, Mrs. Ten Broeck, a society woman gives Sally a letter to a theatrical agent who only laughs at the awkward girl. Sally, too proud to go back home gets a job as a dishwasher in a restaurant where the deposed duke of Checkogovinia is a waiter. Blair Farquar, one of the customers takes an interest in Sally and finally she gets a chance to dance and makes good. The agent who turned her down has her to pose as a celebrated Russian dancer with whom both the Duke and Blair have been in love and she dances at Mrs. Ten Broeck's reception where the Duke is also a guest. Blair recognizes her and falls in love with her in her swell clothes, but she turns him down saying he did not love her as the poor little girl. Blair keeps her secret but the cafe proprietor exposes her. A big manager sees her and puts her under contract and after a few months makes her a star. Blair sends her flowers and tells her he loves her. She tries to hold him off for a while but finally acknowledges her love for him.

"The Midnight Girl"

Chadwick Offers Pleasing Melodrama of a Poor Girl's Rise to Fame With Lila Lee as the Star

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As its newest production for release on the independent market, Chadwick Pictures Corporation is offering "The Midnight Girl" with Lila Lee as the star and supported by a cast that contains several well-known players, including Gareth Hughes, Dolores Cassinelli and Charlotte Walker, the stage star.

This production directed by Wilfred Noy who also collaborated on the scenario should provide pleasing entertainment for the average theatre patron. It tells a sympathetic story of a Russian emigrant girl who after hardships finally makes good as an opera star in America, and her romance with the son of the impresario who quarrels with his father and starts out to make his own living.

The story introduces several sure-fire melodramatic situations including a quarrel between father and son over the disrespect to the photograph of the boy's mother shown by the vamp, and the climax in which the heroine in shooting at the man who tries to force his attentions on her, wounds the vamp. This brings about a happy ending which however seems somewhat forced on the part of the father and the vamp.

Lila Lee is excellently cast as the heroine and shows to advantage. While Gareth Hughes does good work and is well suited to some of the angles of the role, a more virile type would have been more convincing in the heroic situations. Charlotte Walker gives a fine performance as the mother of the society girl who wants to marry the hero. This role is handled by Ruby Blaine, a newcomer to the screen, who is attractive and gives a convincing performance, and is possessed of good screen possibilities.

Dolores Cassinelli is fine as the jealous opera star, though in type she is so similar to Lila Lee as to cause slight confusion at times. Bela Lugosi gives an exceptionally satisfactory performance in the heavy role of the hero's philandering father.

she is the daughter of a woman he is trying to forget, with whom he has been madly in love. Ann does not know this, but she is determined to win him, and in her innocence, she does some foolish things but artfully used her feminine wiles to capture him. The shock to her mother's pride and the evil insinuations of a fellow passenger cause difficulties, but she wins out at last.

Most of the action takes place on board ship, and this furnishes a pleasing background which director Seiter has used to good advantage to sustain the interest. He has refrained from a chance to introduce melodrama when a fire occurs by having it quickly extinguished; this, however, serves to plant the character of the villain who hides in a lifeboat. The light romantic tempo is maintained throughout.

Due to the good acting fo the players, the pleasing backgrounds of shipboard, a London dock, and Bombay, and the skillful treatment of more or less familiar incidents, the production is thoroughly entertaining and should prove a satisfactory attraction for the majority, although it will stand cutting which will speed up some of the scenes.

In addition to the fine work of the three leading players, Hedda Hopper is capably cast as the mother and William Humphreys as the father and Martha Maddox as the austere aunt give entirely satisfactory performances in minor roles.

Reaching India, Seymour finds his old love for her mother has gone, but Muriel's pride is hurt and she demands the marriage be put off. In the meantime, Gilchrist tells Ann why Seymour proposed to her and why he never told her he loved her mother, and puts this romance in a sinister light. "Gold and the Girl"

Buck Jones' Newest Feature for William Fox Is Actionful Story of a Western Gold Mining Camp

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Buck Jones newest production for Fox, "Gold and the Girl" is a story of the western mining country, with the star as a confidental representative sent to solve the mystery of the identity of repeated holdups of the gold-carrying truck.

The story follows along familiar lines and introdues a romance between Buck and a girl whose uncle is one of the men behind the thefts. This is handled in a pleasing way and the supporting cast includes the clever little dog "pal" whose remarkable stunts add to the entertainment value. He literally "steals" a number of the scenes from the other players.

There is plenty of action of a conventional type, including a number of good fights, a sequence with a good punch where the girl imprisoned in a closet gets out by shooting the lock off the door, warns the hero and both take a wild ride in the gold-carrying truck pursued by the bandits, and a scene with good melodrama where the hero comes upon the party in the cabin just as the girl's uncle has shot himself, and has a terrific encounter with the villain.

Buck Jones shows to advantage in roles of this kind, as he has personality and ability that fits not only the romantic but the heroic angles of the character. Elinor Fair is capable as the girl, Bruce Godron well cast as the villain, and the little dog Pal gave a performance that will endear him to the spectators.

While not so dramatic and with less real suspense than some of his recent offerings, this picture should please Buck Jones' fans and audiences that like actionful westerns.

"The Air Mail"

Paramount Makes a Center Shot With a Melodrama of Fine Construction and Sustained Interest

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

In "The Air Mail," for Paramount, Director Irvin Willat has evolved a fine example of dramatic construction built around the new air mail service, but making this merely the background for a really gripping story that works steadily up to a powerful climax.

The stirring incidents of the swiftly developed climax are so well prepared that never for an instant is the story interest checked by a pause to figure the why of a certain development. Everything is so naturally provided for that the story is never implausible and the fluent movement toward an ever ascending situation carries the spectator with it. So well has the story been planned and handled that it is almost unfair to call it a melodrama, for it will make equal appeal to patrons of finer dramatic taste. It will appeal to all classes of theatregoers and not merely to the lovers of melodrama.

The fine development of the scenario is paralleled by a clever direction that gets the most out of the manuscript, while the acting average would be hard to excell. Four players are featured, but the entire cast is thoroughly competent. There is no weak spot to let down the tension. Billie Dove is a very charming heroine and Warner Baxter, as the pilot, is vigorous and convincing. Mary Brian, in a bit, plays nicely up to Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who makes a thoroughly likeable juvenile.

The scenes are largely laid on the desert and in and around the Air Station at Reno, Nev., the latter being the actual location, loaned by the postal authorities. It is one of the smoothest productions, of any type, that a season rich in good things has brought forward.

They are miles from a drug store and Alice flags Russ and asks him to have the prescription renewed. The following day he plans to bring the medicine and also Sandy, a youngster who hangs around the Reno station in the hope of some day becoming a flyer. There is a fight between the outlaws and the convicts, but in the end both are captured by a sheriff's posse, while Sandy achieves the peak of his desire by carrying the mail to its next station while Russ has been putting the outlaw planes out of commission in a mid-air collision.

"Galloping Vengeance"

Virile Action and Good Suspense in Newest Texas Ranger Story Starring Bob Custer

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Galloping Vengeance," an F. B. O. picture starring Bob Custer, he again appears in the role of a Texas Ranger, and although the story follows along the familiar line of pictures of this type, where an officer of the law sets out to get his man at all hazards, it should please patrons who like virile outdoor stories and do not place too much stress on probability or logical development.

There is plenty of action of the type usually found in westerns, together with a sequence which has more than the usual amount of suspense where the girl seeks to hide her brother when the ranger searches the house. A familiar situation; however, it holds the interest due to good direction and capable work on the part of the players.

A melodramatic climax has been provided in which one of the gang blows up a dam while the hero and villain are fighting in a cave and come near being trapped. The hero not only saved himself but the villain as well, and this results in the confession which exonerates the girl's brother. Some of these scenes, however, are not altogether convincing.

Bob Custer gives a good account of himself in the stellar role, while Mary Beth Milford is attractive as the girl, though some of her emotional scenes are rather theatric. David Dunbar is well cast as a particularly despicable villain, and Ralph McCullough is convincing as the weak brother. Dot Ponedel has an appealing role as a young Indian who aids the hero.

The production details are adequate, with some good outdoor scenes, and "Galloping Vengeance" is up to the standard of the previous features in this series.

The third section, shows women being trained as jugglers in China and the unusual dexterity of the Chinese children. Pathe Review No. 12

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

The chief feature is a motion picture study of the Ainu tribe of the island of Yezo, Japan, entitled "The Vanishing Race." This people are thought to be the original inhabitants of Japan, though in appearance they are more European than Oriental. In the "Visiting Our Own America" series there are Pathecolor views of Los Angeles.—S. S.

"At the Zoo"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

All of Cartoonist Paul Terry's pen animals are given an opportunity to present themselves in "At the Zoo." The smaller specimens are swung into the park by using an elephant's tail as a sling-shot. They land on the back of a giraffe who in turn lowers his head, precipitating them into seats. The farmer arrives in time to get in a row with the monkeys, and get a royal trouncing by Big Brother Ape. —T. W.

"Is Marriage the Bunk?"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"Is Marriage the Bunk?" is a one-reel Hal Roach comedy, featuring Charley Chase. It is composed of a lot of rambling incidents, among which may be found some good laugh provokers. Chase enacts the role of an impecunious husband with a wife whose sister is married to considerable wealth. The rich husband buys another big car and Chase presents his wife with a flivver. The limousine goes on the blink and the flivver flivvers when it attempts to pull it out of a rut.—T. W.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Powdered Chickens"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Century Comedy distributed by Universal, Edna Marian, the featured player appears as a country girl whose father invents a formula to make hens lay. A city chap puts T. N. T. into it. The hens lay all right but the eggs explode and create havoc when anyone picks them up. The opening scene is very effective, showing the girl and her sweetheart when they were tiny tots making love to each other on either side of a fence, fading into the same pair at the present time. There is very little continuity to the action which introduces a scene in which the girl gets into a bale of hay and runs all over the farm with only her feet sticking out, a sequence with an auto the top still covered with crating, which gets mixed up in traffic, and a barn dance with a riot over the sandwiches. All of these scenes introduce considerable slapstick which is mildly amusing, but as a whole the comedy is hardly up to the Century average.—C. S. S.

"Plain Clothes"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

As a detective, more insipid than bashful, Harry Langdon in "Plain Clothes," a Mack Sennett two-reeler, is a howl. The whole comedy is filled with laughs and should add greatly to Harry's staff of fans. The furniture, for non-payment of instalments, is removed, but this detective's ingenuity leads him to sketch chairs and tables on the wall with such accomplishment that he receives a contract to recover stolen diamonds. Harry gets in with the crooks who welcome him because of the effect his innocent "map" should have in convincing pawnbrokers. Even when his "best girl" discloses the fact that he is a private detective the thugs refuse to take Langdon seriously. Somehow or other he gets word to the police, after pocketing the jewels, and the place is raided. Of course he gets the reward and the girl.—T. W.

"A Rarin' Romeo"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Walter Hiers as the character made famous by Shakespeare proves himself to be just the reverse of any illusion a Juliet might have about a Romeo. As an actor just graduated from a correspondence school course, Hiers jumps from an extra to the male lead when the well formed Romeo in the cast falls through a trap door. Hiers' antics in the amateur show by society for charity are about as funny and absurd as anything we have ever witnessed on the screen. In fact the blunderings of the other dramatically inspired ones are just as good and should go over with any audience in the form of convulsive laughter. In the first reel several well worn stunts are used and the burlesque in the second is not new, but all in all the comedy is put over with snap and vim and should amuse and please all.—

"The Fighting Terror"

(Universal—Western—Two Reel)

This Mustang picture distributed by Universal again shows the star, Billy Sullivan in the role of an Australian cowboy who meets with exciting experiences in our own great West, in helping the friends that he makes there. This time, to cover up the sweetheart of a girl he meets, who has "Borrowed" money from a bank and lost it, he enters the prize ring and licks the other fellow. As usual with this series, Sullivan does not figure in the romantic angle. The fight scenes which are handled in a conventional manner are interesting. It is an average number of the series.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 13"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

"Pathe Review No. 13" is headed by one of "The Prettiest Girl I Know" series, entitled "The Would-Be Actress." A cartoon introduced this picture which is followed by Ned Wayburn selecting in a very business-like way material for next season's legitimate stage. "Well Known Nobodies" is devoted to dogs and their instinctive intelligence. The Pathecolor is titled "Outposts of Rome." This review should be accepted as excellent entertainment.—T. W.

"The Amateur Detective"

(Fox—Series—Two Reels)

Fox's Van Bibber series based on stories by Richard Harding Davis concerning the adventure of this young society chap, reaches the eighth instalment in this issue in which "Van" appears as an amateur detective who does his work so well that he recovers a valuable painting even before its owner, the girl's father knows it is stolen. In seeking to make the recovery seem more difficult to impress the girl, he comes near loosing out, and has an encounter with the villain who knocks him out of a window. There is a good thrill scene here as he hangs on the telephone wire and phones for help. There is plenty of action, good snap and amusing comedy in this offering. While it is not quite so speedy as some of the earlier numbers, it is amusing and should please a majority of theatre patrons.—C. S. S.

"Ko Ko the Barber"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

This "Out of the Inkwell" animated cartoon comedy is a hummer, one of the very best that Max Fleischer has made, not only is it based on an exceedingly clever idea but is filled with laughs and very snappy action. Fleischer is shown shaving, and his fountain pen gets restless. He draws a barber shop and the head and arms of the familiar little clown, telling him to finish himself. This the clown does with a piece of crayon, then starts to work. After "trimming" a variety of customers, he takes his scissors and runs amuck cutting up everything he gets hold of. Then he grabs a bottle of hair tonic and pours it on furniture, clocks, the cat, a horse, etc., and even the cartoonist's face, causing all to sprout a heavy growth of hair. Finally he is cornered and put back in the inkwell. There is a lot of snap and entertainment value in this comedy for all classes of patrons.—C. S. S.

"Sailor Papa"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Rolling waters, a small sloop yacht and the tang of the salt air make "Sailor Papa," featuring Glenn Tryon under the Mack Sennett banner, an invigorating and refreshing comedy. The laughs are there, too. All in all it is the kind of a two-reel offering that should be liked by any class of audience. Tryon has an uncle who is violently opposed to marriages and happy homes. In order to prove the calibre of his own sweetheart Tryon's role calls for the uncle accepting an invitation for a trip on the sailboat. The elderly man, quite contrary to his own opinion, proves immune to many wettings, a capsized boat, and the effect of much mauling when the seagoers seek refuge on an anchored brigantine manned by a tough crew. The slapstick comedy on this latter vessel is of a familiar type, but is put over very well in "Sailor Papa."—T. W.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

New York State Showman Treats "Kids" to Free Saturday Films

With an eye to the future and a desire to do his part in community service, Charles Sesonske, owner of the Grand Theatre in Johnstown, N. Y., has a policy of admitting children on Saturdays without charge. A two-hour show is given the kiddies, Mr. Sesonske believing that the patrons of tomorrow are the boys and girls of today and that every effort should be made in educating them to the pleasures that come through high-type pictures. And Mr. Sesonske also feels that he is doing his part toward bettering the community in which he lives. When the children are in his theatre, a 1,450-seat house ranking as one of the best in this section of the state, they are not only receiving wholesome entertainment but they are less liable to the dangers of the streets.

Mr. Sesonske was along Film Row during the past week. He arrived in a new limousine with a chauffeur at the wheel. In discussing situations in his section Mr. Sesonske stated that daylight saving would again become effective on April 27 and that there might be a fight staged before that date. During the past three months there has been an epidemic of smallpox in his town which has rather put the crimps in business, but Mr. Sesonske is one of the type that doesn't have to always see rosy skies in order to smile. He employs an eight-piece orchestra, charges 30 cents and gives over Wednesday night to burlesque. When it comes to the wholesale giving out of passes, Mr. Sesonske admits that he is as tight as the proverbial bark of a tree, declaring that he would rather pay for what he gets from the newspapers and others and have them do the same.

Spring is here. Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand in Albany and the Troy and Lincoln theatres in Troy, and the "George Washington" of the exhibitors round about, saw not only one robin but two or three last week, chirping bold as life around the Hill domicile at West Sand Lake. Of course Mr. Hill did go a bit far when he added that they were building a nest, but then one's enthusiasm concerning spring's advent may be responsible for any little exaggeration. And then, too, Mr. Hill saw a flock of geese northward bound. On the other hand, spring's coming shouldn't be particularly joyous to exhibitors in this section, with daylight saving, automobiles and hot weather in the offing.

Morris Silverman of the Happy Hour and Pearl in Schenectady certainly has his worries. It's this way. When Mr. Silverman accommodates the exchanges by switching dates and then asks some favor, he declares the invariable reply is, "You've got a contract."

Where in the world did Earl Raifstanger of Great Barrington, Mass., find the name "Mahaiwe" for his theatre? Mr. Raifstanger is a live-wire exhibitor and one cannot help admiring the way he handles his business. His desk is never cluttered and he has a system that's hard to beat. He is running his house with a daily change on four days of the week and then holding one picture for two days.

Remember Job and his boils? William Benton of Saratoga Springs and Plattsburg has been in Job's class the past week, and what's more the boil was on his right hand. It gave Mr. Benton a perfectly legitimate excuse to the film salesmen in not signing any contracts.

Elting and Davids, who run the Bardavon in Poughkeepsie, are working out a program that will be followed as their ploicy during the coming summer. At the present time vaudeville and pictures are combined, but whether or not the vaudeville will be discontinued during the summer hasn't become known.

Pedigo Sells Out

Forty-one years in the show business! That's a record to be proud of. It belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Ned Pedigo of Guthrie, Okla. They, with their sons, owned the Pollard Theatre. Ned possibly is the daddy of them all in the exhibiting line in Oklahoma.

Last week they sold their show to Mr. and Mrs. George Carr of Kingfisher, Okla., and will retire for a long-needed rest.

With the Missus along, Lew Fischer and Charles McCarthy appeared in Albany during the past week, all parties concerned doing some shopping. The women looked over the latest in spring togs and the men took a squint at some of the latest offerings along Film Row. Mr. Fischer hails from Fort Edward, but has just taken over Mr. McCarthy's house in Hoosick Falls, adding it to his string.

Perhaps Julius J. Byck of the Rudolph in Tannersville isn't so bad off after all, even though he is deaf and dumb. Mr. Byck, however, doesn't have to depend upon any alarm clock to get up. He was in town last week for a couple of days and was around to the exchanges before some of the managers arrived.

"Pop" Linton has set March 23 as the date for the opening of his new 1,000-seat house in Utica. The theatre is directly across the way from the Hotel Majestic, and with "Pop" at the helm there is no question as to its success.

Without doing any advertising, C. H. Buckley and Oscar Perrin, now operating two houses in Albany and one in Glens Falls, are quietly negotiating for the Strand in Hudson Falls. It was only a week or so ago that Mr. Buckley declared that if things broke right he would be "sitting pretty" three years hence, with six or seven picture theatres under his wing.

W. W. Farley, head of Farash Theatres, Inc., and Jake Golden, handling Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany, were fortunate in being included among the favored permitted to attend the annual dinner of the Legislative Correspondents' Association last week. Mr. Farley secured his ticket by reason of the fact that he is one of the Democratic political leaders of the state, and Mr. Golden because of former newspaper connections. Anyhow, the two had the time of their lives.

Although exhibitors in Schenectady are declaring that the city is over-seated, the Proctor interests came out with an announcement last week that they would erect a new theatre in the business center of the city in the near future. They purchased a site some years ago. The house will cost $300,000. At the present time the same entrance leads to the State Theatre as well as to the Proctor house, each occupying quarters in the Wedgeway Building.

With all the pep of young manhood, Walter Suckno is doing lots of good exploitation these days at the Albany Theatre. In fact, he is the only exhibitor in town with sufficient get-up to put over exploitation in the way that attracts business.

Joe Saperstein of the Griswold in Troy is, according to his own words, "saving all his eggs for the summer." That means that he isn't shooting all his big pictures right now. He is still running an amateur night once a week and furthermore admits that he has no more birthdays.

Joe Braff will once more receive his mail at the Hudson Theatre in Watervliet, having

They're the Same the World Over

Printers on the Troy Record thought they were being kidded last week when Jake Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre, Troy, N. Y., sent in some copy about "Galloping Fish." The printers took a glance at the copy and began to question each other about the possibility of Mr. Rosenthal having made a mistake.

Finally one of the number called up the Rose Theatre and inquired if Mr. Rosenthal was trying to kid them, when they knew perfectly well that "there was no such animal." Mr. Rosenthal explained that the copy was absolutely correct, even though the title might be a trifle ambiguous.

taken over the house from Morte Weiss. The house has been closed for a short time and is scheduled for a reopening late this month.

Bill Smalley has gone a step further in advertising his attractions, having engaged Eddie MacCloud to do the ballyhooing over the entire Smalley circuit. Mr. Smalley put over a good one last week when he sent out letters written in long hand and containing an imitation diamond ring.

There is a hundred dollars, more or less, to the person who could instruct Oscar Perrin, manager of C. H. Buckley's circuit, how he can shave himself. Barber shops take up Mr. Perrin's time, and as he reads this or that ad of a "shave in seventy-eight seconds" he realizes that business success is not all.

The Mark Strand in Albany has booked "Confessions of a Queen" for Holy Week and "The Lady" for Easter Week.

Joe Kallett of Rome and his brother Mike of Oneida, both well known exhibitors, took a run up to Syracuse last week and spent the day with their mother.

There has been so much sickness in the schools of Albany that the Junior Movies, scheduled for March 21 to 28, have been called off and April 4 will mark the close. Out of a class of thirty-eight pupils in one school, sixteen were absent on account of sickness. This fact becoming known to Uly S. Hill of the Mark Strand resulted in the movies for the next two weeks being cancelled.

Probably Mrs. B. M. Taylor, owner of the Richmond in North Adams, Mass., will have some interesting stories to tell when she returns the fore part of the month from a trip to the Orient. Cards received by folks back home tell of the splendid weather and many interesting points visited.

According to A. S. Thornton of the Walden Theatre, Williamstown, Mass., the shift from college students to summer tourists makes him change his policy every six months, for the stars the college boys like in winter are not generally the favorites with the summer people.

All exhibitors attending the luncheon and business meeting of the Albany Zone Committee on Monday, March 23, are requested to meet at zone headquarters in the Mark Strand Building at 11:30 a. m., marching to the Hotel Kenmore at noon where the committee will set up the luncheon. At the business meeting later a secretary will be elected to succeed Benjamin Apple of Troy, resigned. Many matters of importance, particularly along arbitration lines, will be discussed and acted upon.

Figuring out just how many people in Troy read the newspapers of that city, Jimmy Rose, owner of the Bijou and who just recently took over three more houses, is pretty liberal with his newspaper space. In the past no one except those living in the neighborhood of the Bijou ever heard of the house. Mr. Rose has fixed up the theatre and is making a bid for city-wide patronage with striking newspaper ads.

Ben Apple of the King in Troy has a kick to register. On two recent occasions he found reels in such condition that it was impossible to run them. Only last week he found that leaders had been pasted to wrong parts of a seven-reel feature, with the result that when he was supposed to be showing reel two it was reel four.

There is a possibility that Louis Buettner may not rebuild in Mechanicsville. According to all reports, negotiations are on with William Benton as well as C. H. Buckley, each of whom is said to be after the site of the house which was burned a few months ago. The Majestic in Cohoes, a 15 and 20 cent house owned by Mr. Buettner, will close during the summer months, following its usual custom, the Opera House there, a 20 and 25 cent house, remaining open throughout the summer.

Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose Theatre in Troy, has a brand new solid gold watch. Ordinarily this wouldn't mean so much. But Jake's case is different. For years, when money was tight, Jake carried a cheap watch, and then after he made his pile he was afraid to carry a more expensive timepiece, not wishing to take a chance at getting cracked over the bean some night. Having more faith in the Troy police than in times gone by, Jake blew himself last week, and then Lester Smith, the house manager, contributed a chain. Now Jake is as happy as a boy with a new toy, displaying his watch and chain to everyone. Incidentally, Mr. Rosenthal's daughter, Celia, has recovered from a recent operation for appendicitis but may not be seen in the box office for some time.

Well, it has come at last. Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre, is buying his cigars in Tampa, Fla. He is still adhering to his pipe, however, and possibly wondering why his supply of tobacco is diminishing so fast. Perhaps Ben Stern, who gave him a jar at Christmas and who is bragging that he hasn't bought any tobacco since along in December, can explain.

The Lincoln in Troy is planning to get out a booklet which will be sent to thousands in that city at frequent intervals in telling of coming attractions at the Troy and Lincoln theatres, which are under the same management. With his newspaper training, Tony Veiller of the Lincoln will handle the booklet in first-class style.

Exhibitors in this part of the state are being greeted by a real millionaire film salesman in the person of Fred Kavanaugh, Jr., of Waterford, son of the owner of the big knitting mills there and in Cohoes. Mr. Kavanaugh at one time ran the Casino in Waterford and is covering his territory in one of the eleven cars from the family garage.

Fennyvessys to Spend $450,000 on New Rochester, N. Y., House

Rochester, N. Y., is to have another large picture theatre. Paul A. and Chester Fennyvessy, 22 Ramsey Park, real estate and theatre owners, have purchased property in William street and Ajax alley, about 250 feet from Wast avenue. On this site will be erected a theatre seating 1,500 which will cost $450,000. Ground will be broken soon. The lobby will be an arcade running through from 38 William street to Ajax alley. The latter thoroughfare will be bridged over with an ornate marque, giving access to the theatre, which will have a frontage on Ajax alley, Tallinger alley and Hempstead place.

The site of the theatre auditorium, with 158 feet frontage on Ajax alley, 60 feet on Tallinger alley and 80 feet on Hempstead place, has been purchased for approximately $60,000 from John P. Gleichauf, while the property fronting in William street and Ajax alley, with a depth of 100 feet, was bought from Max Russer for $75,000. The house will have a commodious foyer but no entrance lobby, the semi-detached arcade from William street to Ajax alley taking the place of this feature. The fact that tickets will be sold in the Arcade will obviate any jam at the theatre entrance. The house will have one balcony, seating 500 and reached by a mezzanine level of unusual design. The auditorium will seat more than 1,000.

J. H. Michael, chairman of Buffalo Zone and manager of the Regent, Buffalo, who is a member of the legislative committee of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., journeyed to Albany last week to attend a hearing on the bill introduced by Assemblyman Freiberg of Buffalo designed to admit children to picture theatres under certain conditions. On his return to Buffalo Mr. Michael expressed himself as confident the measure would be passed.

Binghamton clergymen have declared their firmest opposition to the adoption of the proposed ordinance, permitting exhibition of pictures on Sunday, which is now before the common council.

Charlie Hayman, proprietor of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, and treasurer of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., headed a large delegation of Cataract City residents who gave Miss Catherine Daul and Miss Hazel Sinclair, winners of the Strand-Gazette Hollywood Popularity Contest, a rousing send-off for the Coast film capital the other night. The popularity stunt brought the Strand much valuable publicity.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria Theatre, Buffalo, is putting on an elaborate Spring Fashion Show this week in which he is using twenty-four living models who promenade in the latest attire for milady. The show is a tie-up with community merchants.

A permit to the McNaughton Realty Company, Inc., for Shea's new Buffalo theatre shows that the house will cost $1,500,000. It will be in two measurements, the front 43 feet in Main street, running back 191 feet. The Pearl street structure will be 143 by 183 feet. The building will be terra cotta and two stories high.

James Wallingford of Buffalo has taken over the operation of the Hippodrome Theatre on Pine street, Niagara Falls. Mr. Wallingford is a veteran Buffalo exhibitor, having managed a dozen or so houses in the city in the past twenty years. He also is operating the Allendale, Buffalo, with pictures on Sunday.

Manager Vincent R. McFaul is looking forward to another record-breaking week at Shea's Hippodrome when he will present the annual Spring Fashion Show, in co-operation with Buffalo's big Hengerer store, the week of March 23. An elaborate stage setting is being built. Two dozen or so living models will display some $50,000 worth of the newest modes. These fashion shows have been unusually successful spring and fall.

Ohio

Among the latest additions to the list of Ohio's picture theatres is the New Broadway, which recently opened at Cleveland in a strategic location at Broadway and Cable avenues, just east of the busy East 55th street corner. The house, which seats 1,500, is the fourth of a chain of "round-the-corner" houses to be opened and operated by the Broadway circuit, of which Dr. B. L. Brody is president. M. W. Korach, formerly assistant manager of Keith's Hippodrome, is managing the new place.

J. R. Williams, James Reed, C. H. Bott, Harry A. Weller and Frank E. Weller, stockholders in the Zane Theatres Company, Zanesville, Ohio, have filed suit against the company and F. E. Conway to foreclose a mortgage of $15,000 said to be due on the property.

Philip Honeyman, former professional golf star, who now is manager of the Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, was a busy man around police court recently. He appeared in the role of plaintiff against one Charles Streeton, assistant manager, against whom he swore out a warrant, Streeton having suddenly disappeared from the theatre a short time before with something like $200 on his person which, it is alleged, belonged in a drawer in Honeyman's desk.

A. A. Grill, who recently took over the only picture house at Prospect, Ohio, from Helen Fleak, was formerly a traffic policeman at Delaware, Ohio. Grill advises that he is learning how to "cop" the coin.

News of the Texas Theatres

H. B. Robb and Ed Rowley, of R. and R. Enterprises of Dallas, have become owners of the Lyric Theatre at San Angelo and also have taken over leases on the Palace and Crystal in that city. There's an interesting story back of the deal in question. Robb and Rowley embarked in the show game in San Angelo about ten years ago. Since that time they have acquired thirty-three shows in various parts of West Texas, besides the three they have just bought here. They have come to be known as the "movie maggots" of West Texas. Starting on a shoestring, they ran it into the proverbial bankroll that a greyhound can't jump over. The present deal involved, for example, $50,000. They purchased the shows from Frank Roberts and Johnny D. Jones. Johnny Jones, however, will by no means retire but will assume managmeent of all three shows for the new owners. Mr. Roberts will erect a modern new hotel in San Angelo. In 1922 he bought the Lyric and Palace theatres from Southern Enterprises, Inc., consolidating them later with Mr. Jones' Crystal.

Another deal of more than passing interest to Texas and southwestern exhibitors is that whereby Ray Stinnett, president of the Capitol Amusement Company, Dallas, has relinquished control of his Breckenridge, Texas, houses to Dan Victor of Abilene, Texas, and Ray Landis of Cleburne, Texas. No price was named, but it is understood that Ray made a handsome profit on the deal. The deal included the Palace, National and Alhambra theatres and the Court Airdome. In turn, Mr. Stinnett purchased the Yale Theatre in Cleburne from Mr. Landis. He will book the latter house direct from Dallas and doubtless will shoot many of his first-run Capitol pictures directly down to Cleburne.

Ray may be likened to one of the meteoric boys in the business, for this correspondent remembers him as a plain ordinary manager just a few years ago. He got his first real start in Breckenridge during the unprecedented oil boom of a few years ago when a sleepy village became a roaring city of 75,000 people overnight. All were bent on amusement and Ray reaped a harvest. At one time he could have sold out his Breckenridge holdings and made a young fortune. Instead, he elected to hold on. One by one his numerous competitors quit, until he had the situation sewed up. The boom subsided but Breckenridge, like Tulsa, had gained too great a start to disintegrate. It still is a mighty good town, with a steady, contented citizenship.

Manitoba Ball Soon

The Manitoba Moving Picture Exhibitors Association, with headquarters in Winnipeg, has announced that its annual moving picture ball will be held in the Winnipeg Auditorium on Thursday, April 16, under the direct auspices of the organization. Arrangements are in the hands of President D. L. Fisher, managing director of the Garrick Theatre.

Manager H. M. Thomas of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, has consented to loan the Capitol Theatre orchestra of twenty-five pieces, under Earle C. Hill, for the function to provide music for the dancing.

Canada

The Third Annual Winter Fair of London, Ontario, was held in the spacious lobby of the Capitol Theatre, the manager of which is T. W. Logan, during the week of March 9. The big event, which is conducted in co-operation with the London Free Press, consisted of a score or more of diverse exhibits of merchandise, from perfumes to electrical goods. The Winter Fair in the lobby of the theatre has come to be a permanent fixture and is well attended by patrons and others. Various merchants issue special tickets for the combined fair and performance.

There are reports at Toronto, Ontario, of a proposal to organize a Film Board of Trade for the purpose of looking after arbitration cases between exchanges and between exchanges and exhibitors. The project is being sponsored by Col. John A. Cooper, Canadian secretarial manager of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association.

The exhibitors of Montreal were more than ordinarily interested in the death of Mrs. A. K. Sperdakos, widow, at her residence, 1459 St. Urbain street, Montreal, a few days ago. Mrs. Sperdakos was the mother of four sons, two of whom are theatre proprietors. Athanas Sperdakos is the manager of the Fairyland Theatre, Montreal, while William Sperdakos is the manager of the Mount Royal Theatre, one of the new houses of the city.

Two of the greatest picture houses in Toronto are offering all seats at matinee performances, with the exception of boxes, at 25 cents. Manager Clarence Robson adopted this policy at the big Hippodrome while Manager N. K. Miller took the same step at the Toronto Pantages.

Manager Joe Franklin of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, experienced a new thrill the other evening when he was prevailed upon, without warning, to "go on the air" through Station CHXC, a broadcasting studio that is operated by J. R. Booth, Jr., Ottawa. Joe was equal to the occasion and seized the opportunity to put in a good word for the Keith house, its fine pictures and vaudeville. He was busy for a couple of days acknowledging the tributes of friends who had heard his aerial address.

Manager Len Bishop of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, has found that music pays. During a recent special presentation the Regent made use of an orchestra at all performances and the effect made a visible impression upon Mr. Bishop, with the result that, starting with March 16, the theatre has a full orchestra at matinee performances. For some time past the organ has done duty for afternoon shows with the exception of the one recent special week.

St. Louis Exhibitor Adopts Novel Angle of Ballyhooing

Joe Greene, the genial manager of the Lafayette Theatre, Jefferson avenue near Lafayette, one of the St. Louis Amusement Company's chain of neighborhood houses, has given the outlying managers of St. Louis something to think about since taking charge at the Lafayette. He sold his patrons from a new angle; that if it's worth while they will see it at the Lafayette.

On primary election day other theatres in St. Louis loudly proclaimed they would furnish election returns to their patrons. Joe kept his peace. But on election night when he had his usual capacity audience comfortably seated he flashed on the screen.

"Whether or not we ballyhoo it to you, you know that if it's election returns or anything else worth while, it it's good, you'll see it at the Lafayette. Returns of today's election follow."

Then followed complete and up-to-date minute returns in the big city primary elections held on March 13. A clever bit of institutional advertising. It showed showmanship class.

Two masked youths at 9:30 p. m. on March 8 held up Nicholas Doxas of 1138 North and South Road, St. Louis County, Mo., manager of the Pageant Theatre, 5851 Delmar boulevard, in the theatre office and escaped with $75 which he was preparing to put in the safe preparatory to closing for the night. The theatre is owned by the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row during the week were: H. C. Tuttle, Des Loge, Mo.; A. Keusse, New Athens, Ill.; S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Princess Theatre, Alton, Ill.; Billy Sohm, Belasco Theatre, Quincy, Ill.; R. D. Horsfield, Union, Mo.; C. C. Calvin, Washington, Mo.; D. Cridchelow, Temple Theatre, Alton, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. Hall of Dupo, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Rogers, Cairo, Ill.; Arthur Donnellson, Salem, Mo.; Steve Brady, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Burglar who broke into the Roosevelt Theatre, 810 North Leffingwell avenue, St. Louis, Mo., March 13 and carried away the safe obtained $207 in cash and some tickets to the show. The safe was found in St. Louis County several hours later.

Jim Drake, manager of the Gem Theatre, was among the also rans in the Republican primary. He sought to be alderman from the 23rd Ward.

Buddy Harris and Richard Bennett in the Ivan Abramson production "Lying Wives"

William H. Barnhart has taken back the Globe Theatre at Atwood, Ill. Ferris Brothers and Arthur of Lovington, Ill., had been running the house. Barnhart opened on March 14 with "The Reckless Age."

W. A. Donaldson, formerly in the show business at Harmony, Ind., and Grant City, Mo., was seen along Picture Row this week. He now conducts a restaurant at Salem, Mo., but has the exhibition fever again and is on the lookout for a good house.

R. C. Williams of West Salem, Mo., has taken over the Puritan Theatre at St. Francisville, Mo.

Mrs. I. W. Rogers of Cairo, Ill., was hostess at a theatre party on March 14. George White's "Scandals" was the attraction.

Kansas

The first few weeks of the arrangement between the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri and Newell & Wallace, representative of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, indicates that the plan will be successful, according to C. E. Cook, business manager of the exhibitor body. Exhibitors are obtaining their licenses to play taxable music and members of the M. P. T. O. K-M. are receiving their 20 per cent. rebate, as per the agreement.

Samuel Carver, formerly of Bridgeport, Conn., who succeeded Jack Stebbins as manager of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City downtown house, has made an auspicious start. Each week the attendance has grown larger, and there hasn't been much exploitation, either. Just good pictures.

Charles Sears, owner of the Sears circuit in Missouri, had no fear of walking down Kansas City movie row in a "scorching" new necktie. Some one had the nerve to tell him that it was lent.

Children of all nationalities and creeds lined the sidewalk for more than a block in front of Frank L. Newman's Newman Theatre, Kansas City, last Saturday to attend the childrens' special free matinee. And Mr. Newman received some valuable publicity, also making a news reel of the event himself, which was shown in his theatre.

The Liberty Theatre of Sedalia, Mo., has been purchased by William H. Mueller from Thomas H. Johnson. The house recently was completed at a cost of $165,000. Jack Truitt having formerly operated the theatre under a lease.

Weary, Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Lawrence Brenninger, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; W. C. Bearse, Peoples Blue Mound, Kas.; Charles Sears, Sears Missouri Circuit, Nevada, Mo.

R. R. BIECHELE

President of the M. P. T. O., Kansas and Missouri, whose untiring efforts resulted in the passage of the anti-news reel censorship bill at Topeka. He is manager of the Osage Theatre, Kansas City.

D. Filizola, manager of the Empress Theatre, Fort Scott, Kas., tried a new one the other day and it worked. He had several good pictures booked, so inserted a "reader" advertisement announcing that, just like a merchant, he was over-stocked with good merchandise and that he was going to give a bargain in showing from four to six different films each week. Fort Scott is a town of about 25,000 and pictures usually run three days, at least. So Mr. Filizola drew the crowds.

Connecticut

Mrs. Burrus Chides Patrons

"THERE is only one way to get good or better pictures shown in Crete, Neb., and that is to patronize them when they are shown and get your neighbor to patronize them," according to Mrs. Burrus, exhibitor and member of the Crete Woman's Club, who read a paper recently before the club on the picture situation.

Mrs. Burrus pointed out that the exhibitor is not eager to show shady pictures, but said that the shady kind and the extreme western features were the only kind audiences in Crete would patronize. She said:

"This was proved conclusively at our recent showing of 'Abraham Lincoln,' a picture which cost an enormous price and one that was lauded in the papers throughout the country, including the 'Congregationalist.' People were urged from the pulpit to see this picture. When that picture appeared in Crete, not enough attended the first night to pay for the advertising, let alone other overhead; hardly enough to pay the running expenses of the theatre. This is only one example. Other pictures of the same type brought here have been given the same kind of reception.

"We as exhibitors would derive a much greater amount of enjoyment in showing only the better pictures, but it is an indisputable fact that in order to exist as a paying business in Crete, we must resort to melodramas or the oversweet sentimental romances with no real contribution even as literature, or else the 'shady' pictures with enticing titles."

News from Massachusetts

An attachment of $50,000, placed on the theatrical properties of George W. Allen, Jr., in New Bedford, Mass., by Morris and Kopel Cohen, has prevented a sale of all of Mr. Allen's holdings that virtually had been completed. The Cohens bring an action of contract, asserting that they have a right to enforce at law a claim that they have an interest in the stock of Allen-Charette, Inc. The corporation has an authorized capital stock of $350,000.

The Allen theatres were to have been taken over by Thomas J. Charette, a former partner of Mr. Allen; Simon Beserosky and Zoel Roy. Mr. Allen's properties consist of the Capitol, Comique, Allen's, Orpheum, Casino and Colonial theatres in New Bedford and the American and Princess theatres in Fairhaven. It was reported that the deal would involve $500,000.

Mr. Charette now owns the Eagle and Strand theatres at Oak Bluffs and also a theatre at Onset.

In announcing the deal, Mr. Allen stated that he had made no definite plans for the future, other than that he intended to take a long rest. "After carrying the burden for fourteen years I feel I am entitled to a vacation," Mr. Allen said.

The Reuben Brothers of Springfield have purchased a vacant lot in Athol and plan to erect a business building that will contain a theatre for picture shows.

Well, Jack Magann has a nice little theatre and we extend him best wishes for success. Jack now is the manager of the new Strand in Somerville, which was opened on Washington's Birthday.

Manager Laurence "Buddy" Stuart of the Fenway Theatre in Boston is just as busy as ever. His prologue features are the talk of the movie-going folk of bean town.

Charles J. Cotter of Lynn—of course, every Bay State exhibitor knows this Charlie—has just bought a brick block in Westfield. Mr. Cotter formerly conducted the Strand Theatre in Pittsfield.

Theatrical interests are reported to have their eyes on an excellent location at Tremont and Boylston streets, Boston, as the possible site for a picture theatre. The Masonic Lodge had planned to utilize the location for a new temple.

Fire in the basement caused slight damage in the Strand Theatre in Chelsea. The blaze occurred nearly an hour before the starting time of the show.

Well, well, if here ain't another "lady manager." Miss Formento has charge of the Carey Theatre in Lee and 'tis said she's a shrewd one when it comes to dickering with the bloodhounds of the Boston exchanges. Manageress Formento knows the game from A to Z and keeps her little theatre on the amusement map of Lee all the time.

Chelsea Theatre, Inc., of Boston has been granted a charter of incorporation. The capital is $25,000. The incorporators are: Isadore Katz, Maurice B. Holsberg and Harry M. Sagal, all of Boston.

E. M. Loew has one employe who certainly is busy all the time. Harold Hunt is the man. He is chief projectionist for Mr. Loew's nine theatres and it's up to him to see the projection equipment is in such condition as to put over the right sort of a picture on the screen. Mr. Hunt also is the chief projectionist at E. M. Loew's Capitol in Lynn. Mr. Hunt unearthed a number of slides such as were used in the days of the nickleodeons and also two old single-reelers, and these were used as the basis for "An Old-time Movie Show" presentation at the Capitol the week of March 16.

Detroit had an unusual display of first-run pictures in the various downtown and outskirt houses last week; in fact, all records for the number of first-runs in one week were smashed beyond recognition. From the normal number of five or six the showings jumped to an even ten. This was due to an overflow of feature material held in the various exchanges and the efforts put forth by exchange managers to get their product working in order to realize from the subsequent runs.

The Ferry Field, Regent, Orpheum and Miles—all houses in the Charles H. Miles string, which ordinarily play pictures second run, started the week with new pictures and the results were so good that it is probable that the management will seek out first-run material now wherever it is available. The New Detroit, a dramatic theatre, playing "The Passion Play," a production staged by the Freiburg Players in Freiburg, Germany, also helped bring the number of first-runs up to record proportions.

One of the society events of the Detroit theatrical season was the marriage a few days ago of Claude Cady, prominent Lansing exhibitor, to Miss Ann McGuire of the same city. Mr. Cady, who at one time was president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, was tendered a banquet at the Wolverine Hotel, Detroit, by H. M. Richey, manager of the exhibitor organization. The ceremony was performed in Detroit and the Cadys are now enjoying a wedding trip through the South.

Several new theatres have opened with the break in winter weather. The new Koppin Theatre, called the Amsterdam, situated at Grand River and Birwood, enjoyed a phenomenal opening business last week. The new Tivoli, Woodward avenue near Church street, was opened last Saturday night. The opening of this house gives Joseph Cosco, the proprietor, a string of four.

The site will be 275 by 275, giving the new house three street entrances and one alley frontage.

The boys along Film Row extend their sympathy to Will Gray of the Rex Theatre at Pittsburgh, Ill., who lost his young daughter recently after a short illness. In addition he has been forced to close the house to two nights a week owing to the slack work of the coal miners. The slack work in the mining districts has affected the houses materially and in several instances exhibitors have closed to await better conditions. Last week the Grand at Odin, Ill., and the Moonshine at Wayne City, Ill., were closed.

The Lucille Theatre has been incorporated by Elmer D. Miller, Simon Simansky and Joseph Simansky with a capital of 200 shares of non-par value. The officers of the company are at 752 South Wabash avenue.

When a thug attempted to hold up Thelma Nicholson, cashier of the Randolph street entrance to the Randolph Theatre, last Thursday, she kicked the door shut in his face and refused to hand over the money in the cash drawer. The gunman ran around to the front and pointed a revolver at her, but she ducked and pressed an alarm that brought House Manager Bachman to her assistance. The burglar disappeared in the Loop crowd.

San Francisco

A new theatre ordinance legalizing standing room in theatres under certain restrictions has been introduced into the Board of Supervisors, San Francisco, by Supervisor Ralph McLeran, and after having been passed to print has been referred back to the Building Committee. The new measure applies only to Class A buildings and contains the usual prohibition against standing or sitting in aisles on both sides of which regular seats are placed. In all other aisles or passageways theatre owners would be allowed to stand persons, provided a five-foot passage be maintained. Recently the Grand Jury has been investigating the alleged overcrowding of lobbies of picture houses and has caused the existing ordinances to be strictly enforced, causing considerable loss to theatre owners and inconvenience to the public.

In explaining the proposed ordinance Supervisor McLeran reviewed the long-standing controversy between Grand Juries and authorities over the standing of overflow crowds in theatre lobbies.

"The existing laws were adopted before the construction of today's Class A theatres," he said, "and every new Grand Jury investigating the theatre situation causes the arrest of some theatre owner for allowing patrons to stand in the lobby. The case is promptly dismissed in the police court and the practice continues. My ordinance seeks to legalize a practice which continues daily. All the new Class A theatres are built with lobbies inside for waiting patrons to stand."

B. C. Endert of Endert's Theatre, Crescent City, Cal., a visitor at San Francisco, announced that he planned to rebuild this house, wrecked by a recent storm. C. C. Everett of the Palace Theatre, Fallon, Nev., was a recent visitor, as was also Frank Parker of the Lyric Theatre, Modesto, Cal., who returned a short time ago from an eastern trip. Other visitors on Film Row have been Leslie Hables of the Reeljoy Theatre, Kings City, Cal.; Sam DuBois of Dos Palos, Cal.; Gus Johnson of the Star Theatre, Newman, Cal., and Frank Purkett of Fresno, Cal.

The Acme Theatre, 1249 Stockton street, San Francisco, conducted by I. L. Marks and his son Ralph, has been reopened, following the refurnishing and redecorating of the house made necessary by a recent fire. New equipment makes the theatre virtually a new one.

M. E. Sebastian, for three years assistant manager and treasurer of the Golden Gate Theatre, San Francisco, has gone to Los Angeles to affiliate with producing interests.

The Lurie Theatre, Oakland, Cal., operated during the past two years by Louis R. Lurie of San Francisco, under the management of E. A. Brehany, has been purchased by Gabriel Laskin, who has been operating theatres at Houston and Fort Worth, Tex. The transfer will take place May 1.

Los Angeles

Fred Miller, former owner and general manager of the California, Miller and other Los Angeles theatres, has left on an extended tour of the East. He will stop at Detroit, Milwaukee, Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington and New York to see how their presentations compare with the ones he puts on in Los Angeles and Glendale. A large delegation of Los Angeles friends were at the railroad station to bid him farewell.

Miller is building two houses here, the Circle Theatre at Carthay Center, which will seat 2,000, and the Miller Theatre at Figueroa and Santa Barbara.

When the Mission Theatre closed, Jeff Lazarus, of the Grauman's downtown theatres, grabbed up Tense Herbert, the attractive cashier, and put her to work at the Metropolitan. Miss Herbert is the young woman who, when two highwaymen poked their pistols into her face while she was counting up the cash at the Mission, shoved all the money on the floor and rang the alarm gong for assistance. The robbers secured only a trifle more than a dollar.

Mike Gore of the West Coast has appointed Harold Horn manager at the Criterion. Horn has had a wide experience in California.

Sid Grauman celebrated his birthday in true Irish fashion on March 17. A number of his friends honored him with an Irish party at Eddie Brandstatter's well known Hollywood Montmartre Cafe, and it was announced that Sid officially changed his name for the one day to Michael Erin Grauman.

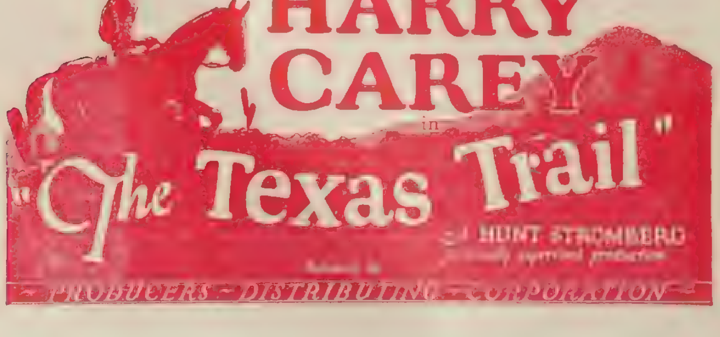
Mark M. Hansen, manager of the Larchmont, will soon start work on increasing the capacity of his house to 1,400. The improvements will include a balcony, and the stage will be remodeled to take care of vaudeville acts each week.

Warner Brothers have given up their lease on Grauman's Rialto and the house went back to Paramount attractions this week. Warner Brothers had been using the Rialto for several months for their first-runs in this territory. Immediately upon giving up the Rialto Sam Warner made a deal to show his first-runs at the Forum.

It is rumored along Film Row that Jack Root, formerly manager at the Mission, will soon take over one of the big Broadway houses. Root will neither admit nor deny it.

Work has been commenced on an $80,000 theatre at Pacific Grove, Cal., for the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises. The house will seat 1,000.

Splendid success is being had with the De Luxe Kiddie Matinees at the U. C. Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., launched recently under the direction of Manager Frank C. Burhans. The program and project is approved and endorsed by the Berkeley Federation of Parent Teachers' Associations and the Congress of Mothers. The children are taken care of by Boy Scouts and a committee of mothers.



Seattle

Ray Grombacher and R. E. Neal make a good team when it comes to exploiting pictures. Hoot Gibson's "Let 'Er Buck" was one of the first features to go into the Casino since the amalgamation. The boys rigged up an old fashioned "hitchin' post" out on the street in front of the house and announced that anyone riding up on horseback and hitching his or her horse to the post would be admitted free to see the picture. The stunt attracted considerable attention.

Hugh McCreedie's new Venetian Theatre, a beautiful house, opened in Portland, Ore., March 12. Quite a bunch of the boys went down from Seattle to offer congratulations and be the guests of Mr. McCreedie at a banquet after the show.

J. A. McGill has announced the opening of his new house in Port Orchard, Wash., for April 18. His opening ceremony will be in conjunction with the dedication of the K. of P. Hall in which his new theatre has been built, and of the new state library. Dedication exercises will be held in the theatre. Hundreds of Knights will be in town, and the Navy Yard Route of steamships has arranged to provide special boat service. Bands from Seattle and Tacoma will be in attendance.

Again the Vaudette, Tacoma, has changed hands. E. C. Wallow, who recently purchased the house, has sold it to J. P. Bertram.

L. J. Wagner will open the Orpheum, Cottonwood, Idaho. John Knott was the former manager.

Easter Sunday has been set for the opening date for G. E. Bessenger's new Madrona Garden Theatre.

Frank Graham and A. F. Cormier, of the Twin Cities Theatre Company, Centralia and Chehalis, Wash., were visitors to Film Row this week.

W. D. Gross, owner of the Coliseum, Katchikan, Alaska, is down again for a few weeks, arranging his summer bookings.

John Hamrick, owner of Blue Mouse theatres in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland and president of the Washington M. P. T. O., was awarded a tribute in the New York Morning Telegraph recently by the publication of an article reviewing his life and telling of the grit and determination that pulled him through to his present success. Mr. Hamrick's history is an interesting one, and was reviewed by Moving Picture World during the days of its "Old Timer's" series. He is a conservative, clear-headed, right-thinking showman, honest and sincere in his efforts, and has earned the esteem of competitors and associates alike. Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick have just left for a trip to California.

Possibilities of Seattle obtaining another circuit of vaudeville are under discussion with the recent activities of the Western Vaudeville Managers Association to include this city in its newly organized coast-to-coast chain of high-class, popular-priced vaudeville. Western branches were established several months ago in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake and other large southern cities. It needs only the addition of the Northwest to make it one of the largest circuits in the country. Conrad Holmes, general representative of the association, arrived here last week to facilitate this proposed extension in Seattle and other Northwestern cities.

Maurice Oppenheimer of the Hippodrome, Spokane, has gone to 10 cents admission on a first-run policy.

KENTUCKY THEATRE BURNS

The Cozy Theatre, of New Haven, Ky., was recently burned in a blaze which destroyed the theatre and three other business buildings and a residence. The total fire loss being in the vicinity of $50,000, partly insured.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. A knockout for a small town. Full of hokum but they certainly eat it up. A great many told me that it was the saddest picture they ever saw. Not all the way through but in spots. Boost it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. A great picture that is worthy of a showing in every theatre in the United States. Many remarked that it was the finest picture ever shown in the town and that is taking in lots of territory. Excellent tone. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal ninety-nine per cent. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,045 feet). Star, George Billings. Best picture in past twelve years. Better than "Birth of a Nation" and far ahead of "Covered Wagon." Big business three days. Could have run a week. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,045 feet). Star, George Billings. We had a tie-up with the schools. Just made out although roads and weather bad. Picture pleased. George Billings looks and acts just like Lincoln. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,045 feet). Star cast. This is a great picture and one that everybody should see. Due to local conditions failed to draw for us. Lost a little money on the picture. If you can tie up with schools, book it and you should clean up. Tone good. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

BORN RICH. (7,511 feet). Star cast. Just fair. Town of 9,237. Admission 10-25. Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

CHRISTINE OF THE HUNGRY HEART. (7,500 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Nothing extra and patronage only fair. Can't see much excuse for woman changing her mind so much. Would class this as only fair. General class, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. "Classmates" went over with a bang; kept up all week. It was about time Dick was placed in a modern vehicle, as he was about through with our patronage in costume plays. This picture is one hundred per cent. Silverman Brothers, Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pennsylvania.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Here's one that will go over anywhere. Acting of Barthelmess very good. It was some jump from the jungles back to West Point, however. Think they should have done better toward the end. Had good crowds two days. General class, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

CUP OF LIFE. Star, Hobart Bosworth. Played it on Saturday night and it is fast moving enough to please the Saturday patrons. We call it a very good picture. Tone good. Audience appeal good. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

CYTHEREA. (7,400 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. A slow moving drama which did not please here. Acting of cast very good but such stories simply do not go over here. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. One of her best. Went over pretty fair but paid too much for it and took a loss. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Opened up real big, but flivvered out towards the end. The flapper crowd knocked it, claiming Colleen was not in right cast. Silverman Brothers, Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pennsylvania.

TARNISH. (6,821 feet). Star, May McAvoy. A picture that gave excellent satisfaction to the women and drew well. It gives the men a few hearty bumps, but they don't complain. Points out a good moral. First National in this section has become a one hundred per cent organization under the present management. It's one hundred per cent service and merits patronage. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio.

Fox

HEART BUSTER. (4,500 feet). Star cast. A real picture with a real star and a real director. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. H. Lloyd, Colonial Theatre (400 seats), Post, Texas.

HOODMAN BLIND. Star, David Butler. Print received in bad condition. Many of subtitles short. Bought as a special, played as a special, result, poor attendance. This picture is far from being a special. David Butler has many friends here but many more like this will kill him. Fox made us pay too much for this and several other 1924 "specials." A good print may please as a program picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Red Ink usually marks a loss—but here's a chance for you to use it to indicate coming profits:

If your red ink bottle isn't all dried up from disuse (which I hope it is), grab the pen that goes with it and make a big red cross on the back of this issue of Moving Picture World before you file it.

Why? Because it contains the Index to reports that have appeared since the Christmas Issue; and that means an easy way to pick up all the tips on a picture and see whether it will be likely to make you dip your pen into black or red after it's run.

And while it's on your mind, help the other fellow to dry up his red-ink bottle by sending tips. VAN.

JANICE MEREDITH. Star, Marion Davies. Exceptionally good. Agricultural class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre (380 seats), Jerome, Idaho.

NELLIE THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Considered this quite good but it failed to draw. Business in general was poor on the days I ran it. Agricultural class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre (380 seats), Jerome, Idaho.

REVELATION. (8,732 feet). Star cast. For us one of the biggest drawing cards of the year. Did big business for two days. Do not run this without advertising it big. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. N. Russell, Russell Theatre (500 seats), Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

BORDER LEGION. (7,908 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. A good program show. There is a lot of shooting in this show that might prove objectionable to parents with small children. Tone, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

BORDER LEGION. (7,908 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Pretty hard boiled. If they'd shoot more with their cameras and less with their guns it wouldn't look so much like the World War. Tone, doubtful. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

"During New Year's week we played a double program.

"During the day we played 'Dante's Inferno' and each night, starting at 10 o'clock, we played 'The Last Man on Earth.' (Both Fox pictures).

"And I am here to tell you we just knocked them over.

"Fancy having over a thousand people waiting outside to get in your theatre after 10 o'clock at night!

"We played to a tremendous week's business with the two pictures.

" 'Dante's Inferno' is a beautiful picture and seemed to please our large audiences.

" 'The Last Man on Earth' drew big. People, having heard it was quite risque, came by the hundreds, expecting to see—I don't know what!—but they came, and we stood them up at every showing.

"There is really nothing to 'The Last Man on Earth'—it is just a silly, impossible picture—but the customers liked it."—Jean Darnell, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

here. Pola Negri is poison to the box office. In addition it is a darn foreign costume picture. The reports said it was extra good so I boosted it big, built a special lobby, and advertised the other stars going easy on Pola but the people couldn't be fooled. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,455 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This good farce comedy drama pleased a Saturday crowd of mixed patrons. I used a two reel comedy to start show with as patrons should be in at start to get it properly. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. General audience appeal. Farmers town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. Good picture but did not compare to "The Covered Wagon" either in box office receipts or in the favorable comments of my patrons. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. This is a very delightful comedy. Torrence always pleases our patrons. Wish we could get more like this one. Good audience appeal. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Missouri.

SHADOWS OF PARIS. (6,549 feet). Star cast. A very good feature. Worth seeing and pleased the patrons. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. A picture crammed with thrills and action. An ideal small town picture. The scenes showing the American Navy in action will get the crowd. Acting of entire cast very good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star cast. One of the good ones. Anna Q. Nilsson at her best and James Kirkwood in a great dual role. Story has audience appeal, and while at times is inconsistent, that does not hurt it. Several good scenes in it, particularly one with an injured knee. Flood scenes extra fine. Double photography best ever. Tone fair. Special, yes. Audience appeal A-1. General class, city of 16,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Pathe

CALL OF THE WILD. (5 reels). Star, Buck (dog). This picture follows the book as close as any I have ever seen. My patrons remarked particularly about this. FLAMING FORTIES. Star, Harry Carey. Another good one for Carey. Can't say anything but good for these pictures. And unlike a great many westerns, they have real stories to work from. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (180 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. Star cast. Pretty jazzy at the start and too much weeping in the middle and a happy ending. Run it when the "gud" folks are away. Tone, doubtful. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, depends on class. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

NOT ONE TO SPARE. (5 reels). Star cast. Nothing to this one, too tame for almost any moving picture audience, would be all right to run for a Sunday School class but folks that go to picture shows want more action. The sentiment was there and it was well acted but it was not what they want. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Spécial, no. Poor audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

BUSTER KEATON

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's famous comedian is visiting in New York City with his wife (Natalie Talmadge), in connection with the opening of "Seven Chances," his latest comedy, at the New York Capitol.

Twenty Specials from Arrow; Whitman Bennett to Make Ten

ARROW announces an affiliation with Whitman Bennett, under the terms of which, during the coming year, it will release to the independent market ten Whitman Bennett productions.

Such pictures as "The Lost Chord" and "Lena Rivers" illustrate his capabilities. His production plans for the coming year are pretentious. He is now engaged in selecting stories, production executives and players. Arrow says:

"The ten Whitman Bennett productions represent just half of the pictures which we will release during the coming year. Present plans call for a schedule of twenty pictures all told. And you may believe that the additional ten will stand on an equal footing with Mr. Bennett's ten productions, if it is humanly possible to make them do so.

"The stories from which they are to be created are all of a high degree of excellence, the work of well known authors.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Pictures, and Whitman Bennett, who will produce ten features for Arrow release.

Columbia Pictures Announces Series of 6 Special Features

THE Columbia Pictures Corporation announces that it will make a series of six special productions this year in addition to their series of Six Columbias and Six Perfection Pictures. This series will be released under the brand name of Waldorf Productions. The titles of these Waldorf Productions will be as follows: "Sealed Lips," "The Penalty of Jazz," "The Thrill Hunter," "The Fate of a Flirt," "The Price of Success," "An Enemy of Men."

These pictures will carry the weight of the experience that the C. B. C. organization has gained in the years that they have been producing pictures for the state right market.

Special emphasis will be placed on the box office value of the titles and the exploitation possibilities in the pictures. A number of well known writers have been consulted and special stories have been written for this series.

There will be new and lavish sets and new ideas in production. These will be carried out as far as possible and still keep the cost and the consequent rental charge within reasonable limits. This series will in every way embody the determination announced by Joe Brandt to have every dollar spent do one hundred cents worth of work on the screen.

The very best stars available to the independent market will be engaged and with the stories and directors will give the exhibitor and the public something desirable from every point of view.

The Columbia Pictures Corporation bases its claims for next year's productions on its ability to keep its promises which can be definitely checked by consulting the box office records of its past productions.

Miller and Steen Releases

Add Six Two-Reel Comedies to Their List for State Rights

A. G. Steen, president of Miller and Steen Distributors, Inc., of 1650 Broadway, New York, handling the Hunt Miller Western Productions, also will handle a series of high class two-reel comedies for the independent field.

Walter Hiers, now being starred in productions of full feature length, shares stellar honors in these distinctive two part features, with Billy B. Van, now headlining in vaudeville on the B. F. Keith-Orpheum time, while in support are Bert Byron, another big vaudeville headliner and the Beaumont Sisters, all laughmakers of established reputation.

The series, made about a year and a half ago, but never released, was originally made for theatrical presentation in longer length, but have been re-edited and titled in two-reel form.

Dempsey and Taylor Sign

Jack Dempsey, the heavyweight champion of the world, and Estelle Taylor, his wife, will be co-starred in the forthcoming Associated Exhibitors' release, "Manhattan Madness."

A Freak Record

"Charley's Aunt" has achieved a freak record in Baltimore in breaking three house records, although presented at but two theatres: the Century and Parkway. The explanation of this curious anomaly is this: Arthur Price, manager of the Aurora Theatre, directly across the street from the Parkway, reports that the overflow from the capacity crowds that attended the Parkway during the showing of "Charley's Aunt," kept his house continuously filled and broke the weekly record of his theatre. This, we believe, is something quite new and novel in the way of a moving picture record.

"Doug" MacLean Signs with Paramount for a Series

PARAMOUNT will release a series of Douglas MacLean feature comedies over a period of years, it was announced jointly yesterday by Mr. MacLean and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

After considering a number of flattering offers from various companies, the young comedian signed a contract yesterday afternoon in the Paramount offices. Mr. MacLean, who came to New York direct from Honolulu, where he went for a vacation after the completion of his latest picture, "Introduce Me," will spend another few days in New York before returning to Hollywood to begin work on the first picture under his new Paramount contract.

"I do not have to say how happy I am with this new arrangement," Mr. MacLean said. "My first outstanding picture, 'Twenty-three and One-half Hours' Leave,' was released by Paramount, and I am glad to be back again with this great organization. I shall continue making my own pictures, with our own producing organization, as I have the last four comedies we produced. But with the resources of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation backing me and assisting me, I am confident that I shall be able to give the public better pictures than ever before.

"One of the big helps in production which I expect from Paramount is in the acquisition of proper story material. With Paramount's big producing organization helping me I am certain to experience little trouble in the future in obtaining the kind of stories suitable for feature comedies."

S. R. Kent and Jesse L. Lasky, speaking for Paramount, were equally enthusiastic over the closing of the deal.

"Few players have come to the front so rapidly as has Douglas MacLean in the last year," they said. "Whenever he has had good story material he has demonstrated, time and again, his worth both as a comedian and as a box-office attraction. 'Twenty-three and One-half Hours' Leave' is among the most successful pictures ever produced. 'The Hottentot' was another great box-office success, and he has increased this reputation with 'Going Up,' 'The Yankee Consul,' 'Never Say Die' and his latest picture, 'Introduce Me.'

"We are now making preparations for a big campaign on Mr. MacLean's Paramount pictures, as we expect to have two in our group for next fall. Mr. MacLean is now considering several excellent stories and plays, and we look forward to announcing their titles in the course of the next few weeks."

"Manicure Girl" Cast Complete

With the engagement of Hale Hamilton for one of the principal parts in "The Manicure Girl," Bebe Daniels' latest starring production for Paramount, the cast is now complete. Supporting Miss Daniels are, Edmond Burns, Hale Hamilton, Dorothy Cumming, Charlotte Walker, Ann Brody, Marie Shotwell, and Mary Foy. Frank Tuttle is directing.

Praise Fox Film

National women's organizations with combined memberships of more than 20,000,000 women have gone on record through their national officers as approving the new William Fox epic "The Man Without a Country" now in its second month at the Central theatre, New York City.

Douglas MacLean faces the "Mike" with Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand theatre and chief of the Plunketteers, broadcasting every Monday night over Station WEAF and WOO, Philadelphia, the stage musical-ballet numbers and overture and a special studio program. MacLean's visit and talk over the radio was a tie-up with his new comedy, "Introduce Me," the feature at the Mark Strand last week.

Sering D. Wilson & Co. Will Have Their Own Exchanges

"REALIZING the growing demand for our short subjects in color," says Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., in a statement issued this week, "we have increased our releases to 104 subjects a year, and to assure the exhibitors of the country 100 per cent co-operation, we will open our own exchanges in the key cities."

"Kid Noah," a series of color cartoons depicting the antics of the son of old man Noah of Ark fame, is one of the new releases. There will be twenty-six of these cartoons available for the year. "Musical Melodies" and six "Specials" will increase the product of short subjects in color. In addition to these new features, Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., have the "New Redhead Satires," "Ebenezer Ebony," "Color Shots," "Karlo Kolor Komics" and "The Wonder Book."

"The public has long been demanding something that is a novelty and a feature in short subjects and we believe we can give it to them and make our product the talk of the short reel market," said Mr. Wilson, commenting on the proposed changes.

"While our plans for exchanges are just in work, we have opened a New York office, and Harry Danto, for twelve years with Famous Players, and an authority on short subjects, will handle this office.

"It will be in 729 Seventh avenue, Suite 510, and we hope to have our exchanges throughout the country in active working condition in a very short time."

It is hard to be cross with pretty Edna Marion, Century Comedy star, even if she does ask such puzzling questions as "What is an African animal in three letters starting with Y." The answer is yes.

San Francisco Critics Give Lavish Praise to Nazimova

DECLARING Nazimova to be in a class by herself as an emotional actress, San Francisco picture reviewers gave lavish praise to Vitagraph's "The Redeeming Sin," produced by J. Stuart Blackton, during its run, which has just closed, at the California Theatre.

The critic of the Call and Post said in the course of his review: "After all, there is only one Nazimova. Given a representative vehicle through which to express her artistry, no woman in the world can challenge her for sheer emotionalism. 'The Redeeming Sin' gives 'Queen Alla' and her associates (principally Lou Tellegen and Carl Miller) splendid opportunities for characterization."

Said the Bulletin: "Perhaps it's her personality—maybe her great dramatic ability, but no matter what the asset, the magnificent Alla Nazimova may be credited with being as pleasing a motion picture star as any of the bright folk working before the grinding camera today."

The Shan Francisco Daily News said: "There's some excellent acting done at the California this week, where Nazimova is starred in 'The Redeeming Sin.' Nazimova is able to bring to the silver sheet almost as much of her magic histrionic power as she does in speaking parts. As a petulant, cantankerous little spitfire, she holds you by her cleverness as a mime. Opposite her plays Lou Tellegen. His characterization seems flawless and entirely truthful."

The Wheeling, W. Va., Intelligencer said: "'The Redeeming Sin' attracted capacity crowds to the Court Theatre yesterday. The scenes are executed with all the skill and artistry which have stamped Nazimova.

The Wheeling News: "'The Redeeming Sin' is one of the season's most pronounced film sensations. It is a colorful story, crammed full of action, with an alluring romance threading its way through the plot and thrills and comedy abounding. The great Nazimova is supported by an excellent cast."

Langdon in "Plain Clothes" Listed by Pathe, March 29

"PLAIN CLOTHES," a new Harry Langdon comedy, and "A Sailor Papa," with Glenn Tryon, head the list of Pathe releases for the week of March 29th. In addition to these subjects the program offers an exciting chapter of the Patheserial "Idaho"; a one-reel Charley Chase comedy, entitled "Is Marriage the Bunk?" and the weekly numbers of Pathe Review, Pathe News, Aesop's Film Fables and "Topics of the Day."

In the comedy, "A Sailor Papa," Blanche Mehaffey heads the supporting cast, which consists of Al Hallett, Noah Young, Leo Willis and Dick Gilbert. Ted Wilde and Fred L. Guiol handled the direction.

"Plain Clothes" was directed by Harry Edwards from a story by Arthur Ripley and Frank Capra. Mack Sennett has provided an unusually good cast, including Claire Cushman, Jean Hathaway, Vernon Dent and William McCall.

"Lawless Laws" is the title of Chapter 5 of the Patheserial "Idaho," a thrilling drama of the gold-rush days.

The single-reel comedy offering for the week is Charley Chase in "Is Marriage the Bunk?' a Hal Roach production. The picture was directed by Leo McCarey and carries a cast headed by Katherine Grant, Marie Mosquini, William Gillespie and George Rowe.

The principal subject in Pathe Review No. 13 is an instalment of the "Prettiest Girl I Know" series, entitled "The Would Be Actress." In this instalment Ned Wayburn, one of the best known directors of musical comedy, shows the procedure followed in selecting young ladies for stage appearances. Other subjects of the Review are "Well-Known Nobodies," a picture story of some of the canine heroes of the movies, and a Pathecolor presentation of the "Outposts of Rome."

"Topics of the Day," No. 13, and Pathe News, issues Nos. 28 and 29, complete the Pathe program for March 29th.

Third Popular Play Selected as Screen Material for First National Player

Corinne Griffith will be seen on the screen in three pictures made from successful stage plays in succession. The first of these is now completed and a print is en route to the First National offices. It is "Declasse," from the Zoe Akins play in which Ethel Barrymore achieved one of her biggest theatrical successes.

The second, "Modern Madness," is well along in production. It is the play by Hartly Manners in which Laurette Taylor had a conspicuous success a few seasons ago under the play title of "The National Anthem." Al Santell is directing this picture. In support of the star are Kenneth Harlan, Harrison Ford, E. J. Ratcliffe and Edgar Norton.

The third play purchased by First National for Corinne Griffith Productions is "Forever After," by Owen Davis. Production will start about the middle of April. The director has not yet been chosen. In play form, "Forever After," proved a popular vehicle for Alice Brady.

Ginsberg Corporation Will Release Banner Productions

NEGOTIATIONS have been completed whereby the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation becomes the sole sale and distribution medium for Banner Productions throughout the world. This is the first of the producing units that has lined up under the Ginsberg organization and will consist of six feature pictures. A second group of six pictures of an entirely different character will be produced along sound commercial lines, with the sole object in mind of making pictures that can be sold profitably by the exchanges and exploited successfully, at the same time pleasing the exhibitor and his patrons.

Samuel Briskin, of Banner Productions, is very optimistic as to the outlook in the independent field:

"The features of Banner for the season of 1925-26 will eclipse anything that we have offered in the past, and will, we feel assured, compare favorably with anything that can be offered, regardless of the source. Our arrangements with Mr. Ginsberg, whereby his organization becomes our sales, distribution and exploitation medium, leaves us entirely free to devote our energies to production. Mr. Davis and myself are particularly pleased with this arrangement, and being thoroughly familiar with Mr. Ginsberg's plans, the personnel of his company and his knowledge of the foreign and domestic market, we are assured of a maximum distribution for our product.

"The independent field today has become too highly specialized to allow the producer to concern himself with the many problems of distribution. Where the producer devotes his time and ability to financing production and distribution, it affects the type and character of the pictures he makes, and it also affects the possibility of his getting maximum distribution, because no one organization on the independent market can take care of three, so important, factors, without affecting one or the other. The poor selling on the part of the producer made it necesary for some exchanges to pay a great deal more for product that it would have cost under an efficient system of distribution.

"Our experience last season convinced us that with successful distribution it would mean a great saving to the producer and to the exchanges as well, but up to the present time there was not a distributing agency in the field to which we cared to entrust our entire output.

"We feel confident in saying that with the formation of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation a great advance has been made in the specialization of the independent market, and will do much toward making it a commercially sound proposition."

"Our standing in the independent market will command the attention of other independent producers who will watch the experiment with interest, but we personally feel that a great many of our troubles have been eliminated.

"The logic of the absolute separation of production and distribution has been apparent from the first, the only question being that of a medium with a specialized organization to handle sales. Our thorough investigation of the Ginsberg corporation has resulted in our having no hesitancy in placing with them our entire product."

"While we have practically completed our selection of books and plays it is our wish to defer a complete statement until Mr. Davis, who has left for the West Coast, has an opportunity to confer with the Banner production staff as to principals and casts, and the possibility of one or two changes of titles."

Pathe Serial Booking

E. O. Brooks, After Tour, Says Serial Market is Booming

After a tour of the Middlewest, E. O. Brooks, sales manager of the Pathe Serial department, has returned to New York enthusiastic over the ever growing popularity of serial productions with the motion picture fan.

Mr. Brooks reports that everywhere along the line, South and Midwest, there is an unparalled enthusiasm over the Pathe serials in current distribution, which include "Into the Net," "Ten Scars Make A Man,' 'Galloping Hoofs," "Idaho!" and "Sunken Silver."

According to Mr. Brooks these serials are forcing their way into literally hundreds of theatres which have heretofore been regarded as "non-serial" houses.

"There is no such thing," states Mr. Brooks, "as a non-serial house when the Newman, Kansas City; the Missouri, St. Louis; Goldburg's of Omaha, and others too numerous to mention; are now heavily featuring either 'Galloping Hoofs,' or 'Idaho,' in the advertising."

Mr. Brooks, during his trip, visited Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Milwaukee and Chicago.

Metro Signs European Director

Celebrated as one of the most successful European directors whose work up to the present has been wholly abroad, Benjamin Christianson has been placed under contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and has gone to the company's Culver City studios in California. He will confer there regarding his first picture with Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives make no secret of the fact that they expect Mr. Christianson to be one of their best box office directors, as the Danish producer has made not only films that have attracted the attention of the world to their artistry, but pictures that have been international successes. He has a shrewd knowledge of box office values, as in addition to his production activities Mr. Christianson is managing director of the largest cinema theatre in Copenhagen, a government appointment.

Vitagraph's "Captain Blood" Is Highly Praised by Newspapers

"'CAPTAIN BLOOD,' by Rafael Sabatini, is in a class by itself, setting a new standard of screen excellence and leaving no object of comparison by which to draw conclusions," said the reviewer of the Fairmont (W. Va.) Times, following the opening of a run of Vitagraph's David Smith production at the Virginia Theatre in that city. He continued:

"It is to the screen what Shakespeare's plays are to the stage and Dickens' works to literature. It is a screen classic in a rare setting, because 'Captain Blood' will leave for posterity a screen literature which will be remembered through the ages."

In Cincinnati, where "Captain Blood" has just closed a successful run at the Lyric Theatre, it was acclaimed by large audiences and enthusiastic critics as an outstanding screen attraction. The Cincinnati Enquirer said, in the course of its review:

"'Captain Blood,' the latest Sabatini novel to find its way to the screen, has all the qualities that made so many of his other novels such delightful film entertainment."

Said the Cincinnati Times-Star: "'Captain Blood' is rich in romantic adventure, colorful atmosphere and picturesque characters. David Smith, who directed, had a keen eye for pictorial beauty and vivid photography. J. Warren Kerrigan, in the title role, was graceful and courtly in his dressed-up moments, and Jean Paige was sweet as Arabella Bishop."

The Lethbridge (Canada) Herald said:

"If you like adventure in which strong men and beautiful women figure, you will like 'Captain Blood,' which opened at the Empress Theatre Monday and will continue all week. There is not a dull moment in 'Captain Blood.' The photography is beautiful, the scenes broad and sweeping, the atmosphere virile, the acting excellent."

"The Adventurous Sex" Listed

"The Adventurous Sex," the second Howard Estabrook production to be made at the Tec-Art Studios, New York, for distribution under the Associated Exhibitors banner, has been definitely set for release by that organization on March 22.

"The Adventurous Sex" is based on an original story written by Hamilton Mannon, and was adapted for screen presentation by Carl S. Clancy. Clara Bow, Earle Williams, Herbert Rawlinson and Harry T. Morey enact the film's leading characterizations.

Associated Exhibitors' Eastern Production Still Booming

EASTERN production of pictures for Associated Exhibitors continues to boom. St. Regis Pictures Corporation has started to work on a new picture at the Tec-Art Studios, which will be based on a story entitled "Headlines." The actual work of building the sets and arranging the studio space has begun, but the selection of the cast and director cannot be announced until later.

Tom Terris will begin work next month on the first of a series of productions which he has contracted for with the Associated Exhibitors. He will produce them in the East, and the first will be a screen adaptation from the story "My Buddy's Wife," by T. Howard Kelly, which appeared in a recent issue of The Smart Set Magazine. J. W. Schleiff, formerly with the Selznick production forces, is in charge as production manager for the Tom Terris Productions.

Whitman Bennett has started work on his second production for the Associated Exhibitors. This picture will be made at the Whitman Bennett Studios at Yonkers. The three leading roles are being played by Lionel Barrymore, Johnnie Walker and Marguerite De La Motte. The story is Dana Rush's adaptation of LeRoy Scott's famous novel, "Children of the Whirlwind," which had enormous success when first issued by Houghton Mifflin & Co., and which is now being republished in a cheaper edition. The story may be described as a "Regeneration crook play" and shows both extremes of New York life—the poor and very rich.

Four Centuries Listed

Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian and Beth Darlington Among the Stars in March Releases

Four comedies are included in the series being released during March by the Century Film Corporation. The comedies include two reelers starring Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian, Beth Darlington and the Century Follies Girls, and Buddy Messinger.

In the order of releases they are "Don't Worry," a Wanda Wiley comedy, "Powdered Chickens," an Edna Marian Comedy, "Raisin' Cain," featuring Beth Darlington and the Century Follies Girls, and "Clear the Way," with Buddy Messinger.

Louis John Bartels, star of "The Show-Off," current comedy hit of Broadway's stage, signs a contract with Fred Hamlin, impresario of Broadway motion picture publicity. The contract calls for five years' service under the sponsorship and agency of Hamlin. Incidentally, Bartels passed 100 plus in his screen tests. A series of comedies will likely be written around Bartels.

"The Ten Commandments" Ready for Wide Release

UPON the return this week of the last of the ten road companies which have been touring the United States and Canada with "The Ten Commandments," the opinion was expressed by Paramount officials that there is no territory in the country which has not been pioneered and prepared for the general release of this production.

A check-up of the money spent in newspaper advertising alone by the ten touring companies approximates $500,000, while the amount of paper posted is estimated to be more than a million sheets. This does not take into account the regular posting, done by the managers of legitimate theatres where the picture was shown, of which no complete records are available.

As for newspaper and fan magazine publicity, a survey made by the Paramount publicity department at this time reveals that it had exceeded not only in bulk but in editorial comment the amount of space newspapers gave "The Covered Wagon" after a thirty week period on the road.

In many of the key city engagements "The Ten Commandments" broke all records for runs of legitimate attractions, as many of the key cities, or exchange centers, are good for only one or two-week stands for even the best legitimate road shows. In New York "The Ten Commandments" played 62 weeks; Los Angeles, 31 weeks; San Francisco, 8 weeks; Vancouver, 3 weeks; Chicago, 20 weeks; Philadelphia, 20 weeks; Boston, 14 weeks; Cleveland, 8 weeks; Detroit, 5 weeks; Washington, 5 weeks; Cincinnati, 5 weeks; Kansas City, 4 weeks; St. Louis, 4 weeks, and Pittsburgh, 3 weeks.

Many theatre managers expressed the opinion that the remarkable business done at the box office was partly the result of the exploitation that had been given the picture by the managers of the road companies.

European exhibitors have stated that they look forward to phenomenal business with "The Ten Commandments," because of the attention attracted by the fact that on the continent the production is being accorded a remarkable reception in Prague, where it opened February 28.

Jackie Coogan's 'The Rag Man' His Best, Declare N. Y. Critics

JACKIE COOGAN'S eagerly awaited new picture, "The Rag Man," has opened in New York at Loew's State Theatre, where its showing has evoked enthusiastic praise from the New York critics.

"All day long lines of people stretched up and down Fulton street from the box office and not a seat was allowed to cool between noon and the closing hour," said the Brooklyn Eagle of the Metropolitan showing. "As for the picture, it is one of Jackie's best, filled with human touches that gave him his first big boost up the ladder of fame when he was seen with Chaplin in "The Kid."

"Jackie is himself again," comments Louella O. Parsons in the New York American. "How the children did laugh and applaud the infinitesimal hero in the clothes many sizes too large for him! I confess I was completely disarmed by these youngsters. Never have I seen so many children. Certainly Jackie Coogan is the logical candidate to entertain them."

"The picture is so ingeniously contrived," states the New York Herald Tribune, "as to be almost constantly entertaining. The dramatic moments are made pleasing by Jackie's sure emotional skill. In addition there is an ingratiating portrayal of the old junk man by Max Davidson and a set of consistently amusing titles."

"Jackie Coogan," says the New York Evening World, "comes back into his own in 'The Rag Man,' the kid resuming his garb of an east side ragamuffin. The result is a most entertaining film, which is crammed full of laughs. His work is excellent and he causes a grand series of guffaws. 'The Rag Man' is bound to exert a tremendous appeal, particularly in family theatres throughout the country."

Vitagraph Film Goes Big

"The Beloved Brute" Wins Enthusiastic Praise From Newspaper Critics

Following the opening of a run at the Albany Theatre, Albany, N. Y., the Union of that city said of Vitagraph's "The Beloved Brute," produced by J. Stuart Blackton:

"After witnessing 'The Beloved Brute' one is inclined to feel that it has been an evening well spent. There is such a variety of action that the subject appeals to all classes. There is not a dull moment in the entire production, and the scenic backgrounds offer strong appeal to all lovers of the beautiful."

The Albany News said: "The wrestling match staged by William Russell and Victor McLaglen is a corker. It is far better than the professional fight pictures, because you get more details of the action than in the famous bouts that are screened. 'The Beloved Brute' is a picture that interests."

"On the Go" Ready March 10

Louis Weiss, managing executive of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation announces that the negative and print of "On The Go," the seventh of the Buffalo Bill, Jr., series of eight action-stunt thrillers, produced by Lester F. Scott, Jr., arrived from the coast early this week and that prints will be ready for the exchanges, March 10th.

"The Happy Warrior"

J. Stuart Blackton to Produce Hutchinson's Story for Vitagraph

A. S. M. Hutchinson fans, and particularly those who have been delighted by the pictured version of "The Clean Heart," will be glad to know that Vitagraph is soon to put another Hutchinson novel on the screen. J. Stuart Blackton will start production work on "The Happy Warrior" as soon as he has finished "Tides of Passion," the special on which he is now engaged, a statement from Vitagraph general offices in Brooklyn says:

Marian Constance, scenario writer, is now finishing the script for "The Happy Warrior," under the eye of Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, who is in Hollywood. Mr. Blackton produced also "The Clean Heart."

Gibson Starts New Play

"The Daughter of the Don's" in which Hoot Gibson will be starred, has just gone into production at Universal City under the direction of Herbert Blache. Gibson's last picture, "Spook Ranch," was recently completed at Universal City under the direction of Edward Laemmle.

Must Vitalize Screen Art, Vidor Tells N. Y. Critics

IF motion picture art is going ahead, then motion picture production is in immediate need of being vitalized, King Vidor stated emphatically on his visit to New York this week.

Mr. Vidor, one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayers' star directors, completed "Proud Flesh" just before leaving the West Coast on a flying trip to Broadway with a party that included Eleanor Boardman and Harry Behn, featured player and continuity writer of "Proud Flesh," and Laurence Stallings and Mrs. Stallings.

"I have every faith that the screen will come into its own," Mr. Vidor told interviewers, "but not until an absolutely distinctive technique is evolved. However, we are coming closer to the day when there will be screen stories told by an individual screen technique that could not be told on the stage in play form or in a book. The motion picture is a distinct art form, and should create its own stories out of itself.

"Personally, one of these days I am going to do a picture that has absolutely no story at all, a sort of glorified news weekly and travelogue in one. You've been to a theatre at times when it was not the feature film that stood out in the program or entertained you most, but a reel of some particular news event or a scenic, perhaps, that gripped you as much as any feature film you ever saw.

"It is a matter of great personal satisfaction to me that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production heads, Mr. Mayer, Mr. Rapf and Mr. Thalberg, while the shrewdest showmen in the business have vision enough to want new ideas. It costs money to experiment, but these men are of such a mind that if one of their directors comes to them with something entirely new and dangerously radical from a conventional standpoint, they will stand behind him and let him go ahead and do the thing he wants."

Mr. Vidor returned to the West Coast early this week after several days in New York reviewing Broadway play successes.

Two Special Features On Warner's List For March

TWO of Warner Bros. best pictures are scheduled for release during the month of March. "Recompense," the sequel to "Simon Called Peter," by Robert Keable, which has created a sensation wherever previewed or shown privately, and "My Wife and I," by Harriet Beecher Stowe, who wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are on the list.

"Recompense" was made under the direction of Harry Beaumont, who is responsible for "Beau Brummel" and several of the best of the Warner Bros. productions. This picture is said to be the best thing he ever has done. Marie Prevost and Monte Blue, who have the leading roles, also do their best work and have gained fresh laurels by characterizations that are said to be amazing.

The prologue of the story takes place during the closing days of the war, and the scenes at the front are stirring. Most of the story takes place in the African trading post country which introduces a new locale to the screen. Robert Keable, the author, praised the Warners for a faithful production of the South African atmosphere.

Supporting Mr. Blue and Miss Prevost are George Siegman, Charles Stevens, William C. Davidson, John Roche, Virginia Brown Faire, John Patrick and Katherine Lewis.

"My Wife and I," directed by Millard Webb with Irene Rich in the lead, will be remembered by all readers of Harriet Beecher Stow. It is a story of marriage bonds and domestic bliss growing sickly and withering under the onslaught of younger charms and stolen joys. And it shows that the domestic problems are very little different today than in the time the book was written.

Supporting Miss Rich are a cast of popular favorites consisting of Huntly Gordon, John Roche, John Harron, Constance Bennett and Tom Ricketts.

Scenes from Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, "The Gold Rush," a United Artists release. In the center panel Chaplin is shown with his new leading lady, Georgia Hale.

Would Abolish Death Penalty

B. P. Schulberg's special production, "Capital Punishment," which has created widespread interest wherever the film has been released, was the cause of the introduction of a bill in the Utah legislature this week for the abolition of the death penalty in that state. Senator Goggins of Salt Lake City, attended a special preview of the feature and was so impressed by the vital and realistic manner in which the theme was presented that he has become the champion of this new measure now up for consideration before the Utah lawmakers.

Show "My Wife and I"

Everything that a picture can have to make it a success as entertainment and at the box office, including Irene Rich, Huntly Gordon and John Harron, is contained in "My Wife and I," a modern adaptation of the Harriet Beecher Stowe novel, shown at the Warner Bros.' New York office this week. Sam Warner's recent wire from the coast, "here is a big time picture," was borne out by all who saw it screened.

"Shore Leave"

Dorothy Mackaill, at present playing the lead in First National's production of "Chickie," has been engaged by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., to play opposite to Richard Barthelmess in his next production for First National release, "Shore Leave."

Three Added to Cast of Ben Hur

Mitchell Lewis, Evelyn Peirce and Leo White have been added to the cast of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Ben Hur," which Fred Niblo is completing at the company's Culver City studios.

Lewis has the role of Ilderim, the Sheik. Miss Peirce, until lately an extra girl, when she was signed to a long-term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is playing the part of an Egyptian slave girl.

Leo White is cast as Sanballat, the bookmaker, but the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announcement does not state what kind of a bookmaker Sanballet is.

Notice is called to the fact that "Ben Hur" introduces an entirely new type of Sheik to the screen. Mitchell Lewis' Sheik is the character in the Lew Wallace novel and play as the author pictured him. He is unlike any of the Sheiks the screen has so far seen.

Fred Niblo is making rapid progress on the remaining scenes of "Ben Hur," which is being filmed by arrangement with A. L. Erlanger. Ramon Novarro, May McAvoy, Francis X. Bushman, Carmel Myers, Kathleen Key, Frank Currier, Claire McDowell and Nigel de Brulier are among the cast.

Features Wonder Horse

Featured with Tom Forman, the famous stunt rider, in the fast-moving series of twenty-four two-part western dramas, produced by Hunt Miller Western Productions, Inc., which are being released in the independent market by Miller and Steen Distributors, Inc., is Platinum King, a wonderful dappled grey stallion, whose intelligence is declared to be little short of human. He is a thoroughbred with a long line of eminent forbears in racing history, and on his account is a blue ribbon winner at the Ambassador Horse Show in Los Angeles.

"She Looks Like a Queen"

The figure of speech "she looks like a queen" is said to be literally true in the case of Beatrice Prior, film actress who is appearing in Erich von Stroheim's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "The Merry Widow," with Mae Murray and John Gilbert. Miss Prior is a natural prototype of Queen Marie of Roumania. In the Monteblancan court scenes of "The Merry Widow" the actress is playing her double without makeup.

Warners Sign Syd Chaplin

The latest star to put his signature to Warner Brothers' contract is Syd Chaplin, brother of the famous Charles. It is the intention of the Warners to put out Mr. Chaplin in a series of special productions along the line that have made him famous. Books and plays will be obtained for him if possible. If not, authors who write stories that will fit his personality will be obtained.

Educational Comedy Stars Busy in Fine Arts Studios

ALTHOUGH the producing season is drawing near a close, there is as yet no letup in the activities at the Fine Arts Studios, Los Angeles, where many comedy units of the Educational program are at work.

Mickey Bennett, young juvenile star, who has been signed to appear in Educational-Juvenile Comedies, arrived last week, and a few days later was at work in the Juvenile comedy in which he will make his debut on the Educational program. No title has been chosen for this comedy as yet.

Lloyd Hamilton is finishing "Waiting," for which a huge cabaret and restaurant set has been erected. Hamilton will appear as a waiter and general handy man around the cafe.

Lige Conley has finished "Night Hawks," the shipyards picture on which he has been working, and will soon start on his next comedy.

Eddie Nelson is working in his first Mermaid Comedy, "Going Great," with Virginia Vance, Robert Kortman and Jack Lloyd in support. This will be a college picture, with the recently signed Mermaid star in the part of a country boy.

Larry Semon is producing a comedy for Educational releases on the Fine Arts lot, and is half way through the picture. No title has been chosen.

Al St. John is putting the finishing touches on the second Mermaid Comedy he will make for Educational. It has been titled "Rapid Transit," and an innovation in the form of a trolley car, with all Pullman improvements, will be a feature of the picture. Ruth Hiatt and Babe London will be seen in support.

"Havoc," Sixth of Fox Series, 1925-26, Goes Into Work

WITH five feature productions completed for general release next season, work has been started at the Fox Film Corporation West Coast Studios on the sixth, "Havoc," the English stage success which played several months on Broadway and later toured the country.

George O'Brien has been cast in the lead. Rowland V. Lee, who will direct the picture, is busy in conference with William Fox and Casting Director James Ryan, deciding on the rest of the cast.

Edmund Goulding wrote the scenario for "Havoc" in England, where he went to confer with the author, Henry Wall.

The Fox schedule for next season is headed by "The Iron Horse," the John Ford picture now playing at the Lyric Theatre, New York, and Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood.

"As No Man Has Loved," a Rowland V. Lee production, from the Edward Everett Hale story, "The Man Wiithout a Country," is now playing at the Central Theatre, New York, and the screen version of "The Fool," Channing Pollock's celebrated play, will have its first showing on Broadway within a few weeks.

In addition to these, John Ford has completed two more productions, "Kings of the Turf," a racing picture with Henry B. Walthall, and "Once to Every Man," in which George O'Brien is featured with Billie Dove. The last named picture is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story by Larry Evans.

With these five productions out of the way, the Fox staff is turning its attention to "Lightnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "The First Year," and other John Golden plays for which William Fox paid more than a million dollars.

John Ford will direct "Lightin'." "Seventh Heaven" will be in the hands of Emmett Flynn.

F. B. O. Changes Titles

"If Marriage Fails?—" is the new title of the second C. Gardner Sullivan production which the well known scenarist and producer is making for F. B. O. distribution. "If Marriage Fails?—" was formerly known as "Mock Marriage" and is listed as one of F. B. O.'s specials on the 1925 program.

"Tearing Through" is the new title of the next Richard Talmadge production for F. B. O. distribution. This fast moving stunt drama was formerly called "Yellow Faces" and comes from the pen of Frederick Stowers.

Star Guest of Honor

Priscilla Dean Receives Press Representatives at Luncheon

Priscilla Dean, star in the Hunt Stromberg Productions released through Producers Distributing Corporation, was the guest of honor at a luncheon tendered her at the Biltmore Hotel in honor of her arrival in New York to appear at the Colony Theatre with her current picture, "A Cafe in Cairo."

Miss Dean's personal appearance act is an elaborately staged "break-in" that is introduced during the screening of "A Cafe in Cairo." When the action on the screen reaches an intensely dramatic moment in one of the big Egyptian settings the picture is stopped, the screen lifted and the star and her supporting company continue the action in person on the stage.

Miss Dean's New York engagement follows appearances in Kansas City, Milwaukee, Detroit, Toledo, Toronto and Pittsburgh and in each of these cities she scored decided triumphs.

Christie Has Big Plans For Features and Comedies

WITH the return of C. H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Corporation, to Hollywood, it is announced that a larger program of feature comedies as well as a continuance of the popular two-reel pictures will be launched during the month of April to continue throughout the year. Mr. Christie has been in New York arranging schedules of delivery of forthcoming Al Christie features to Producers Distributing Corporation which will release the production through the United States and Canada.

While in the East a New York office for the Christie company distributing department was opened at 2 West 42nd Street, with Carroll S. Trowbridge as general representative. This office is now taking care of the contracts for foreign distribution of "Charley's Aunt," which is being marketed in the foreign territory through Simmonds-Kann Enterprises as selling agents.

In addition to the coming program of Al Christie features, the Christie company will not only remain in the two-reel field but will enlarge its production schedule in this line of work during the coming year. Mr. Christie stated, "During the current year's schedule of two-reel comedies two star series have stood out and broken records for the number of bookings in this country. These are the Bobby Vernon and the Walter Hiers comedies which are produced by separate units in our studios and which have been released through Educational Film Exchanges. Bobby Vernon launched his star series following a long period of success in our own two-reel comedies and a rapidly increasing popularity with audiences."

Three studios will be utilized in Los Angeles in the making of pictures. Al Christie features will continue to be produced at the original studio in Hollywood. From six to eight different producing units will be making features at the Christie-Hollywood studios on Santa Monica Boulevard and the extensive program from Mr. DeMille will take up the entire producing facilities at the Culver City studios.

"Charley's Aunt" in Sixth Week

Keeping steady pace with its New York and Los Angeles runs "Charley's Aunt" is now in its sixth week at the Orpheum in Chicago with business holding right up to record figures.

This big feature from Al. Christie is also in its sixth week on Broadway after moving from the Colony to the Cameo Theatre in New York and at the Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles.

MAHLON HAMILTON

Star of many features has leading male role in "Idaho," the Pathe serial.

"Boomerang" An Exceptional Picture, Says J. G. Bachmann

DAVID BELASCO'S stage success, "The Boomerang," one of the year's most important film contributions from an independent producer, offers the exhibitor an unusually exploitable picture, says J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions which has just released this feature.

"'The Boomerang" is foremost among the Belasco hits," asserts Mr. Bachmann. "It was bought for a tremendous sum because beyond a doubt it is the best known comedy that David Belasco ever produced. It holds third place on Broadway's long run record—and what is still more important, has been presented in almost every town in the United States and is still a favorite with stock companies.

"Some years ago the play manuscript was fictionized so that now the picture reaps a twofold benefit from the stage play and the book. There are a cast of eight well known players headed by Anita Stewart and Bert Lytell. Incidentally, this is the first time either of these players has worked in an independent picture.

"And not the least valuable exploitation angle is the fact that everybody wants to see comedies. 'The Boomerang' combines dozens of hilarious situations with a high class story that allows many big sets and much fine staging. Those who remember the way Gasnier handled the comey sequences in 'Poor Men's Wives,' will look forward especially to 'The Boomerang'—and they won't be disappointed."

Next Thomson Picture

"The Bandit's Baby," an original story by Leete Renick Brown, will serve as a vehicle for Fred Thomson following his current F. B. O. production, "That Devil Quemado," according to B. P. Fineman, F. B. O. production chief. It is a story of the proverbial open spaces, with plenty of action and comedy for Fred and his big white horse, "Silver King."

Start on "The White Monkey"

Arthur H. Sawyer, supervising director of Associated Pictures Corporation, accompanied by Director Phil Rosen and Arthur Hoerl, well-known scenarist, have left for Atlantic City, where they will prepare the treatment and continuity of "The White Monkey," recently acquired by Sawyer-Lubin for Barbara La Marr's next picture.

New Jobs and Titles Created at Cecil B. De Mille Studios

NEW jobs and titles are cropping up every day at the Cecil B. De Mille studios as the work of organization progresses towards the point of actual production.

Bertram Millhauser has been elevated to the position of production editor.

Lou M. Goodstadt as casting director of the De Mille studio, is now busy on the important job of building up the new De Mille Pro-Dis-Co stock company which will form an integral part of the extensive production plans laid out for the De Mille and Hollywood studios.

G. Wallace Forge has been named comptroler while Louis Lemieux will be purchasing agent.

In other sections of Los Angeles the De Mille activities are evidenced by the signs of moving. Leatrice Joy and Florence Vidor are finishing pictures under other arrangements. Lillian Rich, Robert Edeson, Vera Reynolds, Julia Faye, Barbara Bedford, and Edmond Burns are gathering their grease paint, powder and mascara together preparatory to joining the De Mille clan at Culver City.

Along writer's row at the Lasky studio, Jeanie Macpherson, Bertram Millhauser and Beulah Marie Dix are packing precious manuscripts and sharpening new sets of pencils in anticipation of the dozen scripts which must soon be ready for the two personally directed Cecil B. De Mille pictures and the ten supervised productions which De Mile has contracted to deliver during the coming year; while Jeanie Macpherson is already working on an original story which will be De Mille's first personally directed picture through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Stromberg Starts Special

"The Romance of an Actress," With Elaine Hammerstein, to Be Chadwick Release

Hunt Stromberg, producer of "The Fire Patrol" for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, started work last week on "The Romance of An Actress," another special production for the same company. This picture will be released immediately upon completion as the seventh of the famous Chadwick Nine.

Stromberg is personally directing this Langdon McCormack play. The story, which was adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates, is a dramatization of the life of a great stage favorite.

Elaine Hammerstein plays the leading role. Theodore Von Eltz plays the leading role opposite her.

"Private Affairs" Completed; Released in April by Producers

"Private Affairs," Renaud Hoffman's second release on the current program of Producers Distributing Corporation, was completed this week at the Hollywood Studios and Hoffman is now personally editing and cutting the subject into final form to send to New York City.

This feature will be the producer's most pretentious offering to date. There are twelve leading characters in the play portraying as many different types of men and women and the action of the story embraces as much light comedy as the subtle pathos for which Renaud Hoffman became noted in his previous productions, "Not One to Spare," "The Legend of Hollywood" and "On the Threshold."

In theme the story deals with the humorous and pathetic mix-ups that occur when a package of mail, long lost in a small town post office, is found and the letters delivered to their respective owners.

Under its superficial veneer of entertainment this story by George Patullo as published in the Saturday Evening Post, is one of the most vivid portrayals of the flight of time. It pictures in startling relief the great changes that take place without our realizing the transition in life.

Prominent in the cast are: Gladys Hulette, Robert Agnew, Mildred Harris, David Butler, Arthur Hoyt, Betty Francisco, Willis Marks, Charles Sellon, Hardee Kirkland, J. Frank Glendon, Frank Coffyn and Charles W. Mack.

"Private Affairs" is scheduled for release b. Producers Distributing Corporation on April 20.

"Fighting the Flames" Coming

A wire from Jack Cohn states that the print of "Fighting the Flames" has been sent on its way east. This is the seventh of the series of eight Columbia specials for 1924-25.

As its name implies this is a fire picture. The cast is headed by William Haines and Dorothy Devore, who are supported by Frankie Darrow, Charlie Murray, David Torrence, Sheldon Lewis and William Welsh.

Premier of "Recompense"

The New York premier of "Recompense," the Warner Bros. production of Robert Keable's sequel to "Simon Called Peter," will take place at the Piccadilly Theatre the week of April 18. This is the story featuring Monte Blue and Marie Prevost with an all star supporting cast.

Betty Compson and Jack Holt, featured together for the first time in Paramount's "Eve's Secret," stage a little tableaux of their own

Many Special Productions For Associated Exhibitors

FOLLOWING over six months' carefully laid plans and preparations Associated Exhibitors, through its general manager and secretary, John S. Woody, announces the first group of pictures to be released during the season 1925-26. This group, the first of three similar groups, will consist of twelve special productions, of which ten are already completed or in actual production. Two more units, for which stories, directors and cast have already been selected, will go into production before the first of April.

In the case of each of the three groups of pictures to be released during 1925-26, announcement of complete details on each production will be made six months prior to the period of release. In connection with the first group, to be released beginning September 1, 1925, the prints of all productions included in it, together with complete advertising material and accessories will be available three months prior to release.

The investment on the part of Associated Exhibitors to effect the working out of this new plan of operation exceeds two million dollars, in productions, prints, advertising matter and in the advertising and publicity campaign to be inaugurated in connection with this release policy.

The pictures already completed and in work for the first group of twelve Associated Exhibitors specials, are:

"Manhattan Madness," which will be used as a starring vehicle for Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, and Estelle Taylor. "Manhattan Madness," to be produced by Oscar Price, was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey. This was originally made by the Triangle Company and was the most famous of the Douglas Fairbanks pictures. It will be made on an elaborate scale with a cast of screen celebrities in support of Jack Dempsey.

"Keep Smiling" will be the first of a series of Monty Banks comedies. It will be a worthy successor to "Racing Luck," which established Monty Banks as one of the most capable of the screen comedians. Supporting the star in this production are Anne Cornwall, who played the lead with Douglas MacLean in "Introduce Me," Robert Edeson, Stanhope Wheatcroft and David Torrence.

"Fifty-Fifty," produced and directed by Henri Diamont Bergere is an Allan Dwan story, written directly for the screen. It will star Hope Hampton with Lionel Barrymore, Louise Glaum and Arthur Donaldson in the supporting cast. This picture was produced in New York.

"Ship of Souls" is an Emerson Hough story which that famous author personally stated he considered a much greater novel than "The Covered Wagon." Lillian Rich and Bert Lytell are starred in "Ship of Souls," supported by such well-known players as Tom Santchi, Bessie Eyton, Earl Metcalfe, Russell Simpson and Lillian Leighton. It was made under the direction of Charles Miller.

"Children of the Whirlwind," from the famous novel by LeRoy Scott will be directed by Whitman Bennett and will star Lionel Barrymore with Margaret de la Motte and Johnnie Walker in support. The picture was produced at the Whitman Bennett Eastern studios.

"The Greatest Thing in Life" was written and directed by Lewis Moomaw, author and director of "Chechahos." In the cast of this new epic film are Tom Moore, Eileen Percy, Chester Conklin, Mary Alden, James Mason and Sazu Pitts.

"My Buddie's Wife," a Tom Terriss Production, was adapted from the Smart Set Magazine story of the same name, written by T. Howard Kelly. In the leading role will be Glenn Hunter.

"Headlines" is an original story by Dorian Neve and will be the second of the series of St. Regis Pictures. It has been adapted to the screen by Arthur Hoerl and will be directed by E. H. Griffith, who also was responsible for "Bad Company," the first St. Regis Picture. Negotiations are now under way with Miss Anita Stewart to play the leading role in "Headlines," which is a metropolitan newspaper story. It is also planned to have Virginia Lee Corbin and John Bartels, star of "The Show-Off," one of New York's biggest hits, in the cast which will be of an all-star variety.

"Hearts and Fists," by Clarence Budington Kelland, is being made under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

In a statement made by John S. Woody, vice-president and general manager of Associated Exhibitors, in connection with the announcement of the coming season's policy, he said:

"Associated Exhibitors in its effort to serve and co-operate with the theatre owners of the country has demonstrated its sincerity of purpose in investing the huge amount of money necessary to furnish them with information regarding the productions which they can be assured will be delivered to them as scheduled. The policy which we have inaugurated, and which will be adhered to relative to all future product, will enable the exhibitor to see for himself, three months prior to release date, every Associated Exhibitors production.

"Because of the time this allows in the preparation for release, a definite and concerted advertising and publicity campaign, national in scope, is being inaugurated, the effects of which will be of value to every first run theatre which plays this product, for behind that run will already have been put six months of concentrated effort, made possible only by the fact that we shall always know definitely, that far in advance, every detail in connection with each Associated Exhibitors picture.

"The fact that we are prepared to show our product to every exhibitor three months in advance of the date we are asking him to play the picture should demonstrate conclusively the fact that we are willing to stand on the merit of the picture alone."

In the first group of productions is included "The Miracle of Life," an S. E. V. Taylor production, from a story written expressly for the screen by Olga Prinzlau.

Nazimova, starring in Vitagraph's "The Redeeming Sin," a J. Stuart Blackton production

Madge Bellamy in "Lightnin'"

Madge Bellamy has been selected to portray the role of Millie, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Jones in the Fox Film Corporation screen version of the John Golden stage success "Lightnin'."

Scenes from the Hunt Stromberg production for Producers Distributing Corporation, "Beyond the Border," in which Harry Carey is starred.

DOROTHY DEVORE

Warner Brothers' star rests after her Daily Dozen for radio inspiration.

Elsie Ferguson Signed

To Star in Vitagraph's Forthcoming "The Unknown Lover"; Prominent Players in Supporting Cast.

Elsie Ferguson is to star in "The Unknown Lover," a Vitagraph special now being produced by Victor Hugo Halperin, for release on the current schedule. Announcement that this actress has been procured for the central role in this production has just been made by Vitagraph.

In Miss Ferguson's supporting cast will appear such well-known players as Frank Mayo and Mildred Harris. Also, a role has been assigned to Count Morner, the husband of Peggy Hopkins Joyce.

The interior scenes of "The Unknown Lover," which is an original story, are being made at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn. The story is a colorful one, with an absorbing plot and a wealth of action.

Brandt Rounds the Circle

Joe Brandt is now on the road, taking advantage of the swing toward the independent producers to place his next year's product. He has a fine line of product to offer the various territories. There are three series, of six pictures each. Six Columbias, six Waldorf productions and six Perfection pictures.

He will touch all the key cities in his round and when he returns there will be a number of territories closed for next year's product. He was sold 100 per cent last year on the Columbia and Perfection series, and since exchanges have done very well with his pictures, he anticipates no difficulty in placing his future production.

Special Edition of Hale Story

A special edition of Edward Everett Hale's story, "The Man Without a Country," illustrated with pictures from the new William Fox photoplay "As No Man Has Loved," the screen version of the story, has just been published by Grossett & Dunlap. The new edition is the fifty-first printing of the famous classic. Besides the Hale story, it includes a story describing the photoplay.

Rowland, of First National, to Announce Big Specials

WITH the assurance that the First National product for the remainder of the year will more than fulfill promises made early in the season, Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, Inc., has returned from his quarterly visit to the West Coast studios, where for three weeks he was in conference with the company's western representative, John E. McCormick, and the producers of pictures distributed by First National.

Mr. Rowland states that, in addition to the regular lineup of star production and those made by all-star casts, he soon will announce a number of super-specials of extraordinary caliber. These super-specials, plans for which are now being developed, will come as a surprise to exhibitors. The program for coming months is so far advanced that definite steps are being taken toward the preparation of next year's output, which promises to be even more extensive than that of the current season.

Among coming releases made on the West Coast, Mr. Rowland spoke with particular enthusiasm of "Sally," the famous Ziegfeld musical comedy starring Colleen Moore; "The Desert Flower," on which production has been temporarily suspended because of Miss Moore's unfortunate accident; "Fine Clothes," the Louis B. Mayer-John M. Stahl production; Edwin Carewe's production of "My Son," starring Nazimova, and the two Corinne Griffith pictures, "Declasse" and "Modern Madness," the latter an adaptation of the successful play, "The National Anthem." Mr. Rowland saw enough of these pictures during his stay on the Coast to be confident of their superior quality. "Sally," now having a pre-release run at the New York Mark Strand, is generally conceded to be the finest thing Miss Moore has ever done.

Speaking of the ever-present questions of stars and their development on the screen, Mr. Rowland referred to the recent elevation of Milton Sills to stardom as being entirely in accord with First National's policy and the logical outcome of popular favor won, through a series of fine performances in really good pictures.

"Good pictures develop stars," said Mr. Rowland. "This is a business of personalities. There is no getting away from it. The task of the producer is to select players with personalities that appeal to the public and then to supply them with stories that reveal these personalities to the fullest degree. The result will be automatic if the players and the stories are right. Certainly it has been proven frequently enough that stars cannot be manufactured when the public is not ready to accept them, also that actors of real ability have been submerged by the wrong sort of story material.

"There has been no variation in First National's policy in this respect. Colleen Moore became a star only after a long period of preparation during which she proved her fitness beyond a doubt. Reports from exhibitors in all parts of the country gave full assurance of Miss Moore's standing with the picturegoing public, achieved not through any excessive boosting, but rather by reason of an unusual personality and outstanding ability, as shown in pictures of popular appeal. The same is true of Corinne Griffith, who gradually developed to the maturity of her powers and has found full recognition in a place among the best-liked actresses of the day. Since 'The Sea Hawk' there has been no question about Milton Sills being one of the surest box-office assets on the screen, and naming him as a First National star is merely a reasonable recognition of this fact. I am confident that other stellar material is being developed in the First National organization in the same manner.

"To talk about a star system is beside the point. It is not a matter of system, but of common sense. The public selected the favorite players even in the early days of single reel pictures, when some of the more conservative producers tried to ignore personalities by refusing to disclose the name of the actors. Certain players stood out and in effect became stars, despite efforts to maintain a standarized product in which the actors were on an impersonal level.

"I attribute the success of First National's production policy to a sane recognition of all the elements contributing to a strong box-office attraction. Every picture cannot be 100 per cent, but every production may be so balanced that it will contain definite assets of popular appeal on which any exhibitor may rely. When it comes to the point of selling his entertainment to the public, the average exhibitor must rely on just two things, the title of the picture and the name of the star. If the story does not happen to possess a particularly wide appeal in his community, he still has the star to bank on. We are in a business of personalities, and as long as this is the case it is only reasonable to select the most popular players available and display them to advantage. A popular star is the best insurance an exhibitor can have. The task of the producer is to find and develop the right kind of new material."

Metro to Star Ramon Novarro

Ramon Novarro, it is stated in an announcement this week by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and production head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will be starred in a series of unusual productions following his appearance in "Ben Hur."

Novarro is under a five-year contract to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer organization and his future activities will be centered in the making of super-special features.

Three stories from three popular novels have already been selected as starring vehicles for Novarro, and work on the first will be started shortly after "Ben Hur" is completed.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Saturation Point

There is a great deal of talk going the rounds among supply dealers and projector manufacturers to the effect that now that there are less theatres and larger ones being built, the "saturation point" has been reached in the matter of projectors.

Once upon a time I worked among a bunch of Germans. Every once in a while I heard one of them say: "Raus mit 'im," which I understand to mean, in effect, throw the blighter out. And that's exactly how I feel about the man who talks "saturation," as applied to projectors.

Do you ever hear of an automobile salesman yawping about "saturation?" You do NOT. When Mr. Man becomes "saturated" with a new machine, he is let alone until said machine has been run for a year or so, whereupon Mr. A. Real Salesman planks himself down in close proximity to Mr. Sat Urated and unlimbers his well oiled talk machine, inquiring pointedly as to whether or not Mr. Sat Urated proposes and intends to run that old, worn-out bus for the balance of his natural life, and if so why so, because every mile he runs it it is losing him real honest-to-gosh coin, and he should have a brand new twelve cylinder road burner, and NOW is the time to get it and just sign on the dotted line please and so forth and so forth, etc., etc., etc. AND the first thing you know Mr. Sat Urated actually signs on the dotted line, smiling while he is doing it and thereafter.

No Saturation Point

But the motion picture projector manufacturers, or some of them at least, have built "saturation" in the sweat of their brows. Not so long ago one manufacturer got very peeved with me because I objected to him trying to convince the exhibitor that the projector (HIS projector, of course) could, would and did last from ten to fifteen years —and probably could be made to give really splendid results even longer.

Now that sort of talk is rank foolishment. IT MAKES FOR SATURATION, BUILDS SATURATION AND CREATES SATURATION. It is wrong from any and every viewpoint, and I am glad to know that projector manufacturers have at last awakened to that fact.

I have long insisted that at least in all-day theatres the projectors should be renewed at least every three years. I have pointed out the fact that the new, perfect, up-to-date projector would make possible sufficiently improved screen results to sell the three or four extra seats per day necessary to pay for such an installation every three years.

Recently a projector distributor wrote his home office saying: "I have recently visited a dozen theatres in which the projectors were literally falling to pieces."

"Economy"

The theatre manager who "economizes" in the matter of projector repairs, or by keeping old, out-of-date projectors in use merely because they will still project a fairly good screen image, is merely snooping around behind the barrel with a tea cup, catching the few pennies which leak out at the spigot. Those pennies he can actually SEE. They are visible to him, and he pats himself upon the chest as he pours them back into the cash drawer, BUT while he was out back, the bung slipped out and a great lot of dollars leaked away. This, however, he could not actually SEE, so he continues the penny saving, and thinks he has performed marvelous wonders.

Put into plain words, the spigot leak he "saves" is the cheap carbons and the dupe projector parts he buys or the forcing of the projectionist to use a projector part long after its usefulness has ceased.

The bung hole leak is the money which fails to come in at the box office because of the relatively punk screen image due to the very punk condition of the projection equipment.

From Alabama

N. R. Newman, Projectionist Rainbow Theatre, Opelika, Alabama, says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: For some while I have been reading the "Film Damage" articles in the department. Personally I well know I am not what I ought to be in the matter of projection knowledge, but I do read the department every week and study and try to do the best I know how.

What I cannot understand is how any one can manhandle film and make such splices as some of those shown in the articles named. It is entirely beyond me. Certainly they either know little or nothing about projection, or else they just plain don't care. I am unable to understand men who do things like that.

I well know that it is rather hard to get many theatre managers (mis-managers you mean, don't you, brother Newman.—Ed.) to buy needed projector repair parts, though thanks be I am myself working for a man who is willing to get any and everything necessary to improve projection in his theatre.

Well, anyhow it must be true about film damage, for I see it in the department and it was written by you, and I have never yet seen where you were wrong.

Often Wrong

You are wrong there, brother, because I am often wrong. This old world has yet, so far as I know, to produce the human who never makes a mistake. I try to make as few as possible, but the field of projection is a very wide one, insofar as concerns the range of knowledge it includes, and to expect any one man to cover it without error is expecting altogether too much. However, I thank you cordially for your "vote of confidence."

As to the chap who manhandles film—well, it really is not always the fault of the projectionist, because some theatre managers place film rewinding and repairs in the hand of "Jimmie-the-Usher," who knows next to nothing about films or projection, and cares for only one thing, viz: to get the job done.

Other operators of theatres, mis-called managers, will dig up fifty dollars extra money for a special feature, and then raise concentrated hallelujah because the projectionist wants a new intermittent sprocket, when any one with eyes can plainly see that there are still some teeth on the old one, or will "save" a dollar or two by purchasing some "cheap" carbons, which will, in the end, lose the theatre twenty-five dollars at the box office, because people are not so keen to pay good money these days to see a picture with dull brown corners, perfectly beautiful (????) rainbow effects every once in a while, and watch the screen go black occasionally as one of those "cheap" carbons break off, to the accompaniment of language no decent printer would print.

As for yourself, why, brother Newman, the man who works, reads and studies his profession will get along, and eventually get ahead, too. It is the self-satisfied, I-know-it-all BOOB who is the real ignoramus, and who will, in the long run, lose out.

Mirror Screen

Some while ago I asked whether or not it would be possible for an audience to see a picture at all, if a plain mirror were used as a screen. Only one man has attempted to answer—P. E. Thomas, Creston, Iowa, who says

Dear Richardson: I have been watching the department with keen interest for the past few weeks, hoping to see an answer to your query in connection with Bluebook School question No. 169, published in January 17 issue. To date no one seems to have been willing to tackle the job of answering your question as to whether or not a motion picture could be seen on a plain mirror screen, therefore I beg the privilege of expressing my own views on the matter.

First I will say that, while it might be in some small degree possible for a mirror to show a picture, it would be entirely impracticable to use a plain mirror for a screen. I submit the accompanying diagram, Fig. 1, in proof of that statement. The diagram is presumed to represent an auditorium having a 100 foot projection distance, with a plain mirror screen accommodating a 16 foot picture. The projection angle is 12 degrees. This is a fairly acceptable lay-out where a screen of accepted type is employed.

It is a well known fact that the reflection from the polished surface of a mirror is direct; also it is partially from the polished surface of the face of the mirror, and partly (mostly) from its silvered back surface, the latter being responsible for the so-called "glare," which I think is due to the refraction of the light rays prior to being reflected from the silvered back. Furthermore a mirror has the power to reflect approximately eighty-eight per cent. of the picture light, which same would all be reflected to a certain restricted area, as shown by figure 1.

It is thus seen, Figure 1, that under the conditions shown, only those seated within the area indicated by the broken lines could possibly see a picture in any event. The width of the picture and the angle of incidence set up by the diverging light beam would govern the viewing angle, which same would, under the condition shown in Figure 1, be about seven degrees from the normal, or zero plane.

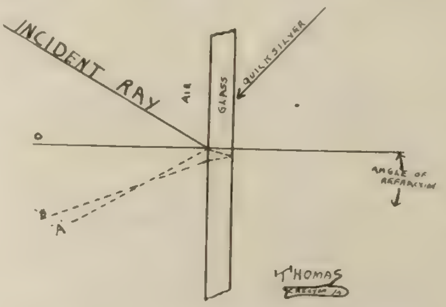
Since it is by reflection of light from the screen that the image thereon is made visible, with a mirror and its characteristics of direct-reflection, the eye would have to receive the reflected rays in order to render the image visible. Hence with 88 per cent. of the picture light being reflected to the area as shown, the resultant contrast of the image would be beyond the power of the eye to record, thus overtaxing its process of adaptation.

If a light source of low brilliancy were employed, similar results would be attained, owing to the contrast, the ratio of same being proportionately as great. If, on the contrary, the glare caused by the double reflection (i. e.: the reflection from the face of the mirror and also reflection from the back, the latter which to some degree would be refracted, as I will attempt to explain diagrammatically.)—would subdue the photographic shades, rendering only the highlights of the image visible, hence no picture. The seats outside of the area where the rays from the mirror are not reflected would doubtless see only a virtual image of the beam of light from the projection room.

There, Brother Richardson, is my theory on why a mirror could not show a picture. It is not submitted as a correct answer, but is hoped that the fine sand can be sifted from the coarse and thus something made of it. Me old frind Dinty Moore, Taunton, Mass., recently sed in the columns of this department: "If one wants to learn the various problems pertaining to projection, and get the greatest amount of good out of things, one will just have to show his ign-runce, even though it be embarrassing when it appears in print. I back-fired on question 101 of the Bluebook school, and the Hon. Editor said I got lost in the bushes. That was quite correct, nor was it the first time it has happened. BUT it's a cinch that I'll NOT get lost on that point again, hence it was well worth while."

Stuck!

Gentlemen, Im stuck. I don't think Brother Thomas' analysis is the right one. A mirror won't show a picture. It will merely reflect the image of the auditorium and audience, plus an image of the lens as represented by a bright spot of light. I believe the reason is that—no, I'd only get tangled up if I tried to explain. Was going to say that it was because in order to see a picture the light must be diffused, and thus rays reach the eye from every point of the mirror. That won't wash, though, because unless light did reach the eye from every portion of the surface of the mirror we could not see the image of the audience, as we certainly would.



Greatly exaggerated diagram of the "double reflection," Reflected ray —A— on an angle equal to the angle of incidence.

Reflected ray —B— refracted upon entering from air to the glass mirror, reflected from the silvered back on an angle equal to the angle of incidence, again refracted upon entering the air from the glass.

I am here and now offering this as a subject for debate by the American Projection Society, and asking that distinguished body for an explanation as to exactly WHY we see the image of the audience and lens, and not the image projected there by the lens. Mind you, gentlemen of the A. P. S., I'm NOT asking for an answer you have secured from some outside source. I can get that myself. I want to see whether or not YOU, as a body, can give this explanation, and if you cannot, then you are officially invited to get extremely busy in and on the Bluebook School, as it will be evidence that you still have at least something to learn about the things you are handling.

Later—I think I've doped out the correct answer, but all the same I still ask the A. P. S. to answer the question and explain to us exactly WHY a picture projected to a plain mirror is invisible.

Has An Effect

A letter came from a projectionist out in Long Island inclosing one he had just received from the manager of the New York City Exchange supplying his service. For obvious reasons I withold names. It is, however, concrete evidence that this department has a real effect in getting YOU better prints. In other words, were it not for the fear of my giving publicity to their methods and the knowledge that they cannot influence this department, bad as your service sometimes is, it probably would be quite a bit worse.

This projectionist had evidently written the exchange proposing to send in to this department evidence of punk service unless said punkness ceased. The exchange sales manager wrote at considerable length, and wound up with this: "We trust that after giving you the facts in the case you will refrain from writing the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World about the matter, and assure you that we will see to it that you receive good prints of all subjects in future."

Of course I do not hold that this department can stop all film service abuses. That would be expecting very much too much, BUT I do hold that the exchange managers, knowing that the department is here and ready to do battle for you has a beneficial effect.

Like the Dodo

Recently I had an inquiry as to where repair parts might be obtained for the American Standard Projector.

I was obliged to advise the inquirer that, like the Dodo, the American Standard is just plain extinct. Repair parts cannot be gotten for them, nor would it be a practical thing for a machinist to attempt their repair. They are therefore of no use to any who may have them stored away, as I think this inquirer has. Pull them out, call in the junk man and wipe them off the slate.

Sprocket Hole Shape

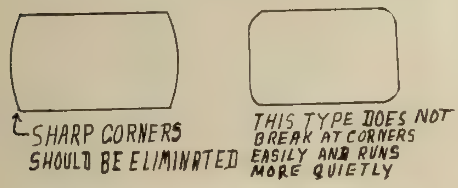
John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

Enclosed find two film samples. The dark one is O. K. It is sent merely for purposes of comparison.

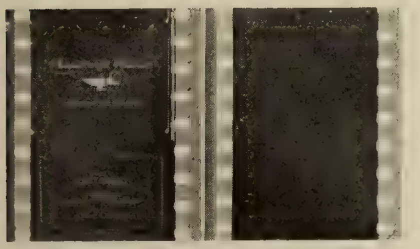
Very often we get film which, by comparison with other films, is very noisy in its passage through the projector. This can mean but one thing, viz: that in its passage through the mechanism it is meeting with more oppositon than the film which runs more quietly.

Opposition to passage means undue friction of some sort, and friction means excessive wear to the part causing it.

Examination of the films causing the most noise discloses the fact that they have a different shape sprocket hole from those which run more quietly. The one piece of film has the type of sprocket holes found in the more noisy film. Apparently the noise is caused by the sprocket hole clinging to the teeth of the sprockets. Moreover, this type of sprocket hole will, and does break more easily than does the one with rounded corners. The two types of hole are shown in the samples of film attached; also, more clearly, in the sketches.



SHARP CORNERS SHOULD BE ELIMINATED
THIS TYPE DOES NOT BREAK AT CORNERS EASILY AND RUNS MORE QUIETLY



Important!!! Important!!!!

Unless I am in error, the matter of sprocket hole shape is now before the Standards and Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, of which I am a member, representing the projection interest.

I would appreciate comments upon this matter from ALL projectionists, IMMEDIATELY or as soon as possible, as the committee meets the last of this month, and the Spring Meeting of the S. M. P. E. is in the early part of May. Especially note if your experience as to noisy film agrees with that of Brother Griffith. We all know the sharp corner cracks readily from excessive strain—too much aperture tension usually. This is an indication of structural weakness, of course, as Griffith says. LET ME HEAR FROM YOU, if you have any interest at all in matters concerning YOU and your profession.

Live Advertiser

I nearly fainted when I saw the projection department last week—March 21 issue. It so happened that I had a long article devoted exclusively to the Power Projector, and then the Power Company bought two whole pages of advertising space, stipulating Projection Department location, in which to run that S. M. P. E. paper of mine.

I give you my word of honor, I knew absolutely nothing of that advertisement until I saw it in the paper. At first I felt like spanking McGuire, the Power's advertising manager, but when I had cooled off I could not but admire the crust of him. The thing was an S. M. P. E. paper, and he therefore had a perfect right to use it if he wanted to, and that, too, without consulting me. Evidently he thought best NOT to consult me, for which, now that my ire has subsided, I don't in the least blame him. I could not have prevented him from using the paper, nor would I have wished to, BUT I probably would have objected to its location, because of the fact that some narrow minds might think I was in collusion with the Power folks to boost Power projectors.

But in that I would have been wrong, I guess. McGuire saw the added value to him of having it located in the midst of the projection department. That it made the department look like a Power's "Ad" was nothing in his young life—or perhaps it was a lot at that, AND ANY OTHER PROJECTOR MANUFACTURER HAD EXACTLY THE SAME RIGHT IF HE CARED TO EXERCISE IT.

The paper itself was thought well enough of by the S. M. P. E. that it, by unanimous vote, ordered its publicity committee to give it the widest possible publicity—a thing never yet done with regard to any other paper read before that distinguished body.

There are things therein contained which I can recommend every one connected with the motion picture industry to read. IT EXEMPLIFIES THE SLOGAN ADOPTED BY THE NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY: "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS." I am glad the Power Company used it, because its general publication was and is needed. McGuire certainly is a live wire advertising man.

S. M. P. E. Program

I am in receipt of the following partial program of the Spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to be held in Schenectady, N. Y., Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, May 18, 19, 20 and 21. The meeting place has been changed to the Hotel Van Curler.

The program is not as yet completed, a tensative program is herewith given to which will be added additional papers and demonstrations. The tentative program of papers to be read at the spring meeting is as follows:

"Machine Development of Negatives and Positive Film."

"Paper by F. H. Richardson of a Historical Character."

"Paper by T. K. Peters, Motion Picture Photography, Title not as yet received."

"Static Marking on Motion Picture Film."

"An Improved Sensitometer Secter Wheel."

"Student Psychology."

"Educational Motion Pictures."

"Paper by Roger M. Hill, U. S. Army Motion Picture Service."

"A New Reflectometer, by Dr. Frank Benford."

"Artistic Utilization of Light in Photography of Motion Pictures."

"Installation of Tungsten Lamps for Color Motion Picture Work."

"Mfg. of Special Motion Picture Lamps."

"Colored Lighting Effects in connection with Exhibition of Motion Pictures."

You will notice that the program is evenly balanced for all branches of the industry, and that our Papers Committee with its very able Chairman, Dr. Renwick predicts that the meeting will be full of exceptionally interesting and valuable technical optical, studio, lighting and projection information of a very important nature.

Same Trouble

Richard Kuester, Brooklyn, New York, reports the same carbon trouble complained of by brother Budge. To date only these two have reported this fault and it is not feasible to go at a manufacturer very strong on only two reports, or complaints. If any of the rest of you have had trouble, get busy and let us hear from you—that is if you want it remedied.

Bluebook School— Answers 216-220

Question No. 216—Tell us of what film consists and how it is manufactured.

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J.; Richard Kuester, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Ont.; Ralph W. Boone, White Pigeon, Mich.; P. E. Thomas, Creston, Ia.; Allie Baron, Lodi, Cal.; Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Ia.; H. C. Mallery, Castle Rock, Wash.; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Ia.; Charles Armentrout, Mason City, Ia.; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, Cal., and Harold E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Wis., all made more or less good on this one, though a few of you either have not studied that section of the Bluebook to much purpose or you were surely not wasteful of words. Some of you did not seem to understand the question, which asks not only WHAT the film is, merely as a strip of celluloid, but what it is composed of and how it is made. The purpose of these questions is, in part, to BROADEN such knowledge as you may already possess by compelling you to dig in a bit and study.

I have concluded to combine the replies of Brothers Bennewitz and Keuster, as each deals with a portion of the question very well and fully. Kuester says:

Motion picture film is a strip of celluloid having the highest degree of transparency obtainable. It is 1⅜ inches wide by 5½ to 6 thousandths of an inch thick. On one side is a coating of photographic emulsion, which is included in the before-named thickness. To each linear foot of film there are sixteen photographs, each approximately ¾ of an inch high by ⅞ of an inch wide. There are four sprocket holes on either side of the film to each ¾ of an inch, linear measurement, making a total of 64 perforations on each side of the film to each linear foot, or a grand total of 128 to the foot, counting both sides.

In the process of manufacture the film originally is in sheets about two feet wide by from 250 to 300 feet in length. While in this shape it is coated with photographic emulsion suitable to the use it is to be put to. It is then run through a "splitting machine," which divides it into strips of 1⅜ inches wide.

After the emulsion is put on the film it must thereafter be handled under ruby light only, the same as all other photographic material carrying unexposed and undeveloped photographic emulsion. The next step in manufacture is to perforate the film, which may be done at the factory, or by the producer. The latter is the usual mode of procedure for film used by motion picture producers.

The final development of the exposed positive and negative film is essentially the same as any careful photographer uses for his films, except that, due to its length, it must be handled mechanically.

Bennewitz says:

In the manufacture of film, ordinary cotton, the same as cloth is made from, forms the base. This cotton is thoroughly cleaned, and is washed with caustic soda to remove all impurities. It is then thoroughly dried, so that all moisture is removed. Next it is treated with a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acid for the purpose of making it soluble in alcohol. (Don't know as I ought to publish that last. Should our public servant bosses find out about that w-i-c-k-e-d, naughty alcohol, they prob'ly would stop film from being used. It m-i-g-h-t smell of the nawsty stuff, y' know.—Ed.) The cotton, when nitrated, is known as cellulose nitrate. After nitrating, the acids are drawn off and the nitrated cotton is washed to remove all traces of the acid.

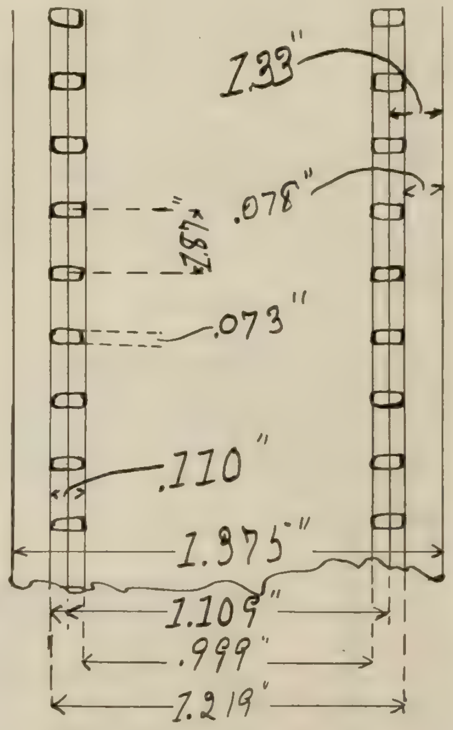
It is now placed in large tanks of water, where it is drained and rinsed for a period of weeks, after which it is dried in centrfugal "wringers."

The nitrated cotton is now ready for the solvents, which are contained in "mixers," into which the cotton is fed through chutes. Large paddles churn the cotton and the solvent together until it is mixed to a consistency of honey, which is called "dope." This dope is then placed in a machine, from which it comes in the form of long, wide sheets, which, when dry, becomes the familiar transparent celluloid film which carries the photographs we project to the screen.

Note: This Editor is unable, from memory or available data, to check up closely on all Brother Bennewitz's statements, and there is not now time to have it checked up before printing. I know much of it is correct, and assume the rest to be. However, I shall have it checked over by Eastman people and if any minor inaccuracies occur I will advise you later.

Question No. 217—What is the standard thickness of film? Give the standard dimensions of sprocket holes, as adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Everyone agrees on the figures, but Kuester made the most complete reply, which is as per the drawing.



Note: Please don't be critical with this drawing. On the one Kuester made the figures were too small to show up in print, and I had not time to make a to-scale drawing myself, that being quite a job. It is all out of proportion, yes, but the figures are correct, and that is all you really need.

Question No. 218—Name as many as you can of the various causes of damage to sprocket holes.

Armentrout says:

Film irregularities, such as poorly made splices, which are apt to buckle the film on the sprocket, and thus damage themselves. Emulsion deposit on aperture tension shoes or magazine valves or sprocket idlers which fail to turn. This latter may not actually damage the holes themselves (working edge thereof), but it will damage the film between and thus weaken the edge of the hole.

Improperly adjusted projector mechanism is a prolific cause of damage. This includes a too heavy tension at aperture or at take-up, improperly adjusted sprocket idlers, greater tension on one side of aperture than on other. Sprocket idler bracket spring too weak. Faulty projector mechanism, due to worn sprocket teeth; worn stripper plate, though of course the latter would have to be very badly worn to damage the sprocket holes. Crooked or otherwise poor reels, badly worn magazine spindles causing reel to hang crooked in magazine, which under some conditions might result in damage to sprocket holes at upper sprocket.

Over-speeding of projection (a prolific cause) and careless, rough handling of the film, which may result in actual damage to sprocket holes.

Whitt says:

Sprocket hole damage may be caused by many things, some of which are: First, hooked or under-cut sprocket teeth; second, a too heavy aperture tension; third, over-speeding of projection, which is of course closely allied to second cause I have named, since over-speeding compels heavy aperture tension; fourth, a too heavy take-up tension; fifth, reels out of round, which causes or may cause a jerk every time the reel revolves—this may occur either in upper or lower magazine, or in both of them; sixth, sprocket idlers riding on the film; seventh, sprockets being out of line with each other, or out of line with magazine valves; eighth, loosing lower loop, which causes heavy jerks which are likely to rip out the holes entirely.

Bennewitz says:

Hooked or worn sprockets; sprockets out of line; marred sprocket tooth or teeth; OUTLAW SPROCKETS; improperly adjusted sprocket idlers and shoes; improperly adjusted film guide rollers; abnormal aperture tension; greater tension on one side of aperture than on other; upper or lower loop too short; emulsion deposits on tension shoes and film tracks; abnormal tension on upper reel spindle (late model projectors); no tension on upper reel spindle (old projectors); high projection speed; bent reels and bent reel hubs.

Dobson says:

By damage to sprocket holes I take it you mean any damage which will weaken or otherwise injure the sprocket holes, so that the film will have to be withdrawn from service sooner than it should be necessary to withdraw it. (Not necessarily, Brother Dobson. I mean ANY damage which will, either then or later, tend to injure the results upon the screen.—Ed.)

Sprocket holes will be injured by a too-tight tension at the UPPER magazine spindle, especially toward the end of the reel, where the strain is heaviest. Too-tight aperture tension, which causes the intermittent to exert abnormal pull, and thus train the edges of the sprocket holes. Last, but not least, bad splices, which may cause the film to climb off the sprocket, and ride on its teeth, which same indent the film, or even punch new holes, pulling the fabric of the film all out of shape, to the injury of the holes themselves. I might also say that emulsion deposits cause a lot of damage to new film.

Mallery is brief but expressive. Perhaps he really covers it all, but still his answer don't win the sugar-coated tommyhawk. He says:

Damage to sprocket holes is caused by: Poorly kept projectors, PLUS an unconscious "OPERATOR" or a Dado manager.

Hanover says:

Damage to sprocket holes may be caused by (A) Upper reel out of round or bent, so that it rubs magazine wall intermittently, thus producing a continual jerking, which sets up a very heavy pull at upper sprocket at or toward last end of reel. (B) A too tight tension on reel in upper magazine, or none at all, which latter is the worst of the two. (C) Upper magazine out of line with upper sprocket. (D) Upper sprocket not in perfect line with aperture, thus twisting the film to some extent, with possible, though improbable, damage to sprocket holes. (E) Hooked teeth on upper sprocket. (F) Too heavy tension at aperture, or more tension on one side than on other. May be due to just pure don't care Adam on the part of an "Operator," or to fact that projectionist is compelled to overspeed projection. (G) Worn or hooked intermitten sprocket teeth, or poorly adjusted intermittent idler or shoe. (H) Too short upper or lower loop, or loosing lower loop. (I) worn or hooked teeth on lower sprocket, or badly adjusted idler. (J) Poorly made splices, which cause film to "ride" the sprocket, with resultant damage we are all familiar with (K) Too much take-up tension.

Question No. 219—Name as many as you can of the principal causes of damage to the film itself—the film stock as differentiated from the sprocket holes.

Johnson, Bennewitz, Dobson, Mallery, Burnett, Boone, Fell, Thomas, Kuester, C. A. Anglemire, Nazareth (who also made acceptable replies to all the rest of this list, except the first two), Burnett, Boone, Hanover, Johnson and Mallery all made good, or fairly so, anyhow.

Thomas says:

Excessive re-winder speed. "Pulling down" in process of rewinding, mis-aligned rewinder reels. Oil, the presence of which on film causes dirt and grit to adhere to it, besides the direct effect on the projected image. Improper storage. Heat at the projector aperture. Rough handling during shipment AND at the exchange. Improper packing for shipment. Uneven shrinkage caused by improper laboratory proceedings. These are a few of the various ,causes I think of just now which inflict damage to the film itself.

In addition to this various others named: (1) Crooked reels, causing film to rub the reel sides in rewinding. (2) Reels with too-small hubs. (3) Mr. To-Hell-With-Everything-But-My-Own-Convenience operator and his li'l punch, scraper or sticker. (4) Rain, caused by pulling down and other improper procedure, as well as to some extent by things we cannot control. (5) Too rapid rewinding, especially when rewinder elements are out of line, or reels are crooked, or the end of the film is left to slap around a dozen or two times at the end of the rewinding. (6) Badly made splices which cause the film to "climb" and ride the sprocket teeth, sometimes, when Mr. Machine Operator is working on that radio set he just MUST deliver that night, for long distances. Oil squirted on projector on the theory that "too much is just right," which flys or runs off, gets on film and raises His Satanic Majesty's Dominions with things generally. (7) Machine operators instead of projectionists. (8) Failure of theatre management to supply needed projector repair parts. (9) Scratches caused by deposit on magazine valve or sprocket idlers which do not rotate.

Question No. 220—Exactly what is the thing we call "Rain" in film.

This question was correctly answered by every one named. Every one agrees that Rain is dirt-filled scratches in the emulsion of the film.

Note: There are two or three things I would like you all to make note of. First, read the question until you understand clearly just what it asks for. Don't go wandering all around the cow pasture on something which, while perhaps allied to the thing under consideration, really has nothing to do with the actual question. For instance: Nearly every one told what "rain" is; also nearly every one went on to explain what caused it, which was not asked for.

Now, I DON'T want you to be too economical with words when answering the question, BUT I did NOT ask what CAUSED rain, but merely what it WAS or is. Your answer is NOT condemned on that account, but you do make me do a great amount of unnecessary work reading a lot of immaterial stuff. However, I'd rather you did that than be too darned brief, so there you are.

Another thing: PUT YOUR NAME AND NAME OF CITY ON EVERY SHEET OF YOUR ANSWERS, PLEASE.

Mazda Dope

James J. Hobdell, Projectionist Central Squarè Theatre, Boston, Mass., contributes the following dope on Mazda equipment:

Perhaps you might find space in our valuable department for the results accruing from tests and experiments a projectionist and his assistant have just made which may be of value to the users of Mazda equipment.

It has long been the cry of Mazda users in this vicinity that they were unable to get the T-20, 900 watt Mazda projection lamp far enough down in its socket to secure the same brilliancy of illumination at bottom of screen as at the top. Put it in another way: they could not get as much of the filament image above the cooling-plate aperture as they could get below the same, thus causing a lesser degree of brilliancy at bottom of screen than at top.

Filament Coils

There should be no question in the mind of anyone who will experiment with the height of the filament-coils in various Mazda lamps but that the manufacturers are very much in error in the matter of placing said filament-coils at the absurd height of (in many cases) 5¼ inches from top of filament-coils to extreme lowest point of lamp-base. See Figure 1.

With such a height it is an impossibility to center the filament images upon the cooling plate vertically. We discovered one lamp in which the filament height as above described was only 5 1/16 inches, and even at this lesser height the images were still slightly lower than they should be for maximum results.

This brought us to the conclusion that a height of five inches top of filament-coils to extreme lowest point of lamp-base, and 4½ inches bottom of filament-coils to lowest point of lamp-base is the only proper solution to the problem. A Mazda user will understand that very little can be done to bring a too-high filament-coil down in the socket, whereas a too-low filament-coil can be brought up practically ⅜ of an inch by means of the center contact in socket.

I will explain our method of lowering lamp, of course taking a lamp with absolute minimum height of filament-coils. First, if there is considerable of a "knob" at A, Figure 1, as is usually the case, you may file off about 1/64 of an inch of same, but NO MORE, since this metal must carry full current, hence must not be weakened too much. Now dis-assemble lamp socket into its component parts, as per Figure 2. Take center contact, Figure 3, out of socket, which may be done by removing screw from copper terminal strips of opening F, Figure 2, corresponding to opening E, Figure 2, but on opposite side of socket.

Next unscrew center contact sleeve, shown at F, Figure 3, from underneath socket. If it will not come out that way, screw it all the way in and take out from interior of socket. Entire center contact can now be taken out of socket and dis-assembled by removing spring E, washer D, copper strips C, and washer B, if any. If washer B is found, discard it as unnecessary, thus gaining at least 1/32 of an inch. File off the concentric rings, A, Figure 3, which are also unnecessary, gaining about 1/32 of an inch, and file off about half the thickness of washer D, Figure 3, gaining another 1/64 of an inch.

Must Be Done Carefully

These things must be done carefully, and according to the projectionist's best judgment, remembering to leave metal enough at all these different points to carry a 30 ampere current.

In the base of the socket under A, Figure 2, will be found a hard rubber-composition into which washer D, Figure 3, fits. This rubber-composition is for insulating purposes, yet you may scrape it off a 64th of an inch (scraping carefully with a broken safety-razor blade) without impairing its insulating properties. Now re-assemble the various parts and you will find you have made a considerable gain in the matter of lowering the filament-coils.

When setting lamp up in lamp-setter, turn split-ring C, Figure 2, so that small wire connection B, Figure 1, will fit into opening D in ring C, Figure 2, thus eliminating the interference of clamp B, Figure 2, with wire terminal B, Figure 1. When buying lamps try to get only those with not more than a 5 1/16-inch distance top of coils to bottom of base, until such time as the manufacturers adopt a 5-inch height.

Passed Along

I don't feel competent to check up on this article, but Friend Hobdell certainly writes as though he knew what he was talking about, hence the matter is passed along for your consideration.

I might add that I have a letter from an exhibitor in St. Louis, Mo., this morning, asking what I think of the future of the electric arc, the high intensity arc, the low intensity reflector type arc and the Mazda incandescent lamp for projection. He especially wants to know whether or not I think the low intensity will or will not entirely displace the Mazda incandescent lamp for projection.

I have had a number of such inquiries lately, some from exhibitors, some from theatre managers and some from projectionists. In nearly every case such inquiries have been contained in letters asking for other projection engineering information, for which a fee was enclosed. I have replied to them substantially as follows:

My Reasoning

In my opinion there is a permanent field for the high intensity arc in motion picture projection. The high intensity will prevail where conditions demand a very high screen brilliancy. I believe there will be great improvement in high intensity through carbon chemicalization for the purpose of softening the present very harsh light tone.

In my opinion the low intensity, or reflector type of arc will almost, if not entirely, displace the ordinary arc in theatres where a screen brilliancy in excess of that the Mazda incandescent can supply is demanded, but where not so intense a brilliancy as is provided by the high intensity is required.

In my opinion the Mazda incandescent will continue to be used in that great number of theatres where conditions create no necessity for a greater screen brilliancy that it can supply, and where the difference in initial cost as between the Mazda and the reflector type equipment is an important item. Under suitable conditions the Mazda incandescent supplies plenty of screen brilliancy, and the illumination is of a soft, pleasing, very restful tone.

Bluebook Helps

J. C. Jones, Projectionist Pastime Theatre, Leeds, Alabama, writes:

Dear Mr. Richardson: This is my first letter to you. I have a Blue book, which I find to be the best book I have ever examined. It is a great help to the Projectionist and to the "Machine operator." If every one of the latter class owned one it would be a great source of benefit to projection as a whole, as well as to the film exchanges themselves.

Personally I am not one of the famous "know-it-all" chaps. Have had seven years experience in shooting stars and starlets at the "silver sheet" though, and naturally, not being, or aspiring to be a solid ivory top, I have managed to accumulate considerable information about our profession, which same I try to apply intelligently. However, I don't care how much a man may know, he is never too old to learn more.

I am not yet a union projectionist, but hope to be in the near future; also while I don't yet belong to the Bluebook School, I am going to come in as soon as I read up a little more in the Bluebook.

Never Mind "Reading Up"

Never mind the "reading up." If your answers are not right you will know it when the right one appears, and they won't be used, but at least you will have made every effort to answer the right way, and THAT is how one really learns. As to your non-membership in the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P.

Doubtless you will land on me when I say that I've had the ideas I shall set forth for years, but my back is wide, broad and strong, so I should worry. The trouble has been that, whereas I have the ideas all-righty right, I'm not a writer man and, like Brother Dobson, who belongs to the same local, I do, I can't puttem on paper (You seem to be doing fairly well, thus far—with some assistance from the Editor—Ed.)

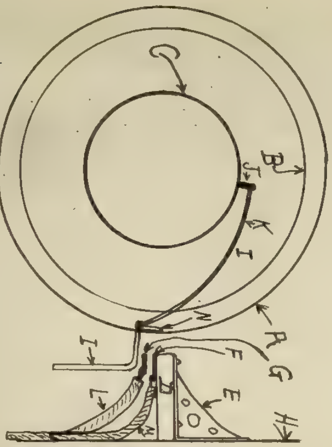
I have it set so that I have time to get the idle lamp going and change over before the stickers or punch marks put in by machine operators show up. Stickers, punch marks, etc., surely do indicate not only the machine operator, but a darned LAZY one at that.



A Magazine wall—Simplex. B—Reel. C—Film roll. D—Piece of wood one inch thick by suitable width. E—An ordinary iron wall bracket to hold D to wall. F—A metal contact attached to D, to which latter circuit wire M is soldered. H—Projection room wall. G—A metal contact attached to opposite (back) side of D by means of a hinge, so that when I raises sufficiently, F and G will be brought into contact, thus completing the battery-buzzer circuit through wires M-L. I—I is a galvanized iron wire, about No. 8 I would think—I have no iron wire gauge by me—which is bent about as shown, except that a bend which does NOT show in the drawing is where it passes through N, which is half of an ordinary flat iron hinge attached to the magazine wall by two small bolts. I think you will get the idea easily enough. The wire is thrust through the half hinge —through where the hinge pin was before the hinge was disassembled, and bent as shown afterward. J is a bit of felt which drags on the film roll. I think a light, felt-covered roller would be better. At point K a sufficient amount of solder wire is wound around part I tightly, to supply the weight necessary to the operation of the device, but no more.

You probably will think the model I send is very crude, and it is too, but those I use are not. You will notice that no insulation is required. I have one buzzer and two dry cells in series with a 3-wire bell switch. By the way, Brother Charles Dentlebeck approves of it.

I have had the gas plyers to remove and replace intermittent sprocket taper pins recently described for years.

The operation of the device is pretty obvious. As the roll of film decreases, the shoulder formed in the lower part of I strikes G, raising it into contact with F, whereupon Mr. B. Uzzer gets exceedingly busy. I don't quite know what the 3-way switch is for, but presume it is so that one buzzer and battery may be used for both projectors.

One important thing is not shown in the drawing. The blade of an ordinary table knife is thrust under the magazine door hinge, in such manner that the knife handle will strike the lower arm of part I when the magazine door is opened, thus automatically raising the upper end out of the reel. Warning: Patronize Woolworth. Don't purloin the wiff's silver knives.

The device is simple, and within its limitations, all right. Only two small holes need be drilled in the magazine wall, and one short slot—the width of the wire forming part I-I and ¼ inch deep. Frankly I like the one shown several weeks ago better, because it will give a "light up" and a change-over signal, whereas this only can be made to give a single signal. This one is, however, more simple and more easily made. Many thanks for your kindness in sending the model, description and drawing.

A. P. S. Chapter?

From a projectionist in the northwest comes the following:

> Have noticed reference to the American Projection Society several times, and would like to know whether or not it would be possible to form a chapter of that organization here.
> I am for ANYTHING which stands for the elevation of our profession. Have subscribed to the American Projectionist, having incidentally and accidentally found a copy of it in the trash can of the theatre. It was the first time I had ever heard of it, though I found later that a sample copy had been sent to the local secretary, who for some cause had failed to bring it before the union.

Brother Fuston asks for a personal reply, but I am publishing the matter because of the fect that the attention of union Secretaries ought to be directed to the evil of failure to bring ALL mail reaching them as Secretary before the local. They have no more right to do otherwise than a member of the local would have to "ditch" their (the Secretaries') personal mail.

Many secretaries arrogate unto themselves the right to censor the union mail, and quietly "ditch" that which they deem unessential, or which does not happen to meet with their approval.

MAIL ADDRESSED TO JOHN DOE, SECRETARY LOCAL 029, BELONGS TO EVERY MEMBER OF THAT UNION, and every member attending the next meeting has both a moral and a LEGAL RIGHT to know of its arrival, and what its contents are. In this case it was the duty of the Secretary to notify the union of the arrival of the paper, and to pass it around for personal examination by the members. If he failed to do that little thing, and such failure was deliberate, then IN THAT INSTANCE HE WAS A DISHONEST SECRETARY. He had failed in his duty and had taken into himself the right to withhold and presumably destroy property of the union.

NEW PRESIDENT

As I told you recently, A. C. Roebuck, who has long been President of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, Chicago, makers of the Motiograph projector, has stepped out, and O. F. Spahr, who has for the past twelve years had the active management of the affairs of the company, becomes President in his stead. I present herewith an excellent photograph of O. F. Spahr. Mr. Spahr, Gentlemen! Our motion picture projectionists and theatre managers, Mr. Spahr. Be ye acquainted.

Now let me qualify this by saying that this secretary probably did not really intend to do anything wrong. The trouble is that he, like hundreds of other secretaries, did not realize that he had absolutely no moral or legal right to refuse or wilfully fail to bring anything and everything which reaches him, addressed to him as secretary of the local, before the next meeting of the said local. It might further be said that under a strict interpretation of postal law any member of the local could make it very warm for him, did he care to complain to the post office department. That last was proven in the case of a secretary of a fraternal organization some years ago. That he, the secretary, may deem the mail non-essential, worthless or even injurious, gives him absolutely NO right to do other than his plain duty as secretary, and bring it before the next meeting of the local.

As to forming a chapter of the A. P. S. I doubt its practicability, but you may ascertain the facts by communicating with the American Projection Society, 304 West 58th street, New York City. If you take the American Projectionist why did you not write them direct? My reason for doubting the feasibility of forming a chapter in your city is that I don't believe a sufficient number of eligible men work there.

Bouquets

Wm. Burnett, Newton, Iowa, says:

> All I know about optics I owe to the Bluebook and "our" department, Brother Richardson. Every time I read the Bluebook I feel like handing you a bouquet, and without any brick concealed in its interior either.

All right, Old Timer! one doesn't mind a non-brickless bouquet once in a while.

Put the air on your payroll

Of course, your program is your biggest attraction—that is, for nine months of the year.

But during hot weather, the big attraction is COMFORT. You know that to be absolutely true, because:

1. Warm, uncomfortable theatres lose business in hot weather.
2. Cool, comfortable theatres keep their regular business—and keep up their profits.

It costs you nothing to put the air on your payroll—to cool your house with refreshing Typhoon Breezes. It costs you nothing because the receipts you save easily pay for your Typhoons.

You really ought to have full details on Typhoons. You owe it to yourself—to your pocketbook—to find out what Typhoon Cooling means to you.

Niagara Falls to Get $150,000 Theatre; Will Open in September

ONE of the most important building construction enterprises that will be carried into effect this year in Niagara Falls, N. Y., now is in progress on the north side of Niagara street, between 13th and Portage road, where the Niagara Theatre Corporation is erecting a splendid motion picture house which will be ready September 1 next. The theatre will be one of the most modern in design and attractive in appointments on the Niagara frontier.

The building is of brick, tile and steel construction and completely fireproof throughout. It has a frontage of 90 feet and a depth of 150 feet. The cost of construction will reach $150,000. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,400, including the balcony, which will seat 500. High-class motion pictures and vaudeville will be the policy of the house, according to Peter Paonessa, under whose personal management the theatre is being built. Mr. Panoessa formerly was manager of the Lumberg Theatre in the Cataract City.

Entering the theatre through the neatly decorated entrance through Niagara street, one will pass through fireproof decorated doors into the main foyer and auditorium, with entrance from the foyer to the balcony, ladies' and gentlemen's rest rooms. Entering the foyer the visitor's eyes will sweep a very beautiful interior, including a stage 86 feet wide by 27 feet deep, in the rear of which will be conveniently arranged dressing rooms. The stage curtain will be of heavy material made to harmonize with the general scheme of decoration.

Another outstanding feature of the auditorium interior will be the proscenium arch and its beautiful hangings. The sidewalks and dome ceiling will be of classic design and decoraton. The cornices, wall pilasters, capital and bases will present a pleasing effect. The interior decoration will be in delicate shades of gold and blue, this color scheme being carried out in the tapestry hangings, carpeted aisles and foyer. The stage has been carefully designed as to modern equipment, including a "fly" gallery, spot and foot lighting. The orchestra pit will be large enough to accommodate an orchestra of 15 to 20 pieces. The seating plans call for leather-covered chairs. The floors will be covered with soundproof material.

The theatre will be heated and ventilated through large Plenium chambers under the auditorium floor, which will supply an abundance of fresh air without draft at all times, or in summer may be used to cool the auditorium. The lighting system will be of the latest type, capable of giving several different color combinations, and all lighting fixtures will be of the crystal type.

$500,000 Motion Picture Theatre for Beaumont, Texas, by Clemmons

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed for the construction of a $500,000 photoplay theatre at Beaumont, Texas, it was announced recently by Joseph C. Clemmons, president of the Jefferson Amusement Co., of Beaumont.

The theatre will be erected jointly by the Jefferson company and the Saenger Amusement Company, operators of a large string of Southern city theatres. This became known at the conclusion of a conference between Mr. Clemmons and officials of the Saenger company held at New Orleans last Saturday.

The Saenger people have purchased a one-half interest in the Beaumont concern, owners of five theatres, for a consideration reputed to have been $300,000. The new house, to be situated in the heart of the downtown district, will be started as soon as plans are drawn, and will be patterned after the most modern motion picture houses.

While Beaumont now has the best pictures the American screen offers, its theatres with possibly one exception are not modern. The new house with the wide influence and experience of the Saenger company is headed for a successful career. Beaumont itself has a population of 50,000 with 50,000 more to draw from in her immediate vicinity.

Like Travel

H. C. Mallery, motion picture projectionist, Castle Rock, Washington, sends in his second dose of replies to Bluebook School questions, apologizes for having taken sides against me in a certain matter—but says he'll do it again whenever he thinks he can get away with it—and says:

> Am sorry I could not get started at the first of the "School," or at least to have read the answers. However, I hope there will some day be a fresh start, which will give me the chance to get what I've missed.
> The school is a good deal like travel, in that it broadens our views and knowledge, and gives us a more comprehensive understanding of projection, at the same time searching out the weak spots and faults in what knowledge we do possess.

Right you are, brother Mallery. It could hardly have been stated better. This is precisely what the "School" is for—that and the waking up of men who have had the idea that operating a machine is all there is to motion picture projection.

Beautiful Theatre Planned for Los Angeles; Miller Gets Lease

A NEW and beautiful theatre building is to be erected immediately in the fashionable and rapidly growing West Wiltshire District of Los Angeles, Cal. This district lying between the main residential section of the city and Beverly Hills is building up rapidly with beautiful and sightly homes and lies on the main traveled boulevard between the city and the Santa Monica Bay district. It is known as Carthay Center and besides the half million dollar theater project other large building operations are either under way or are being planned for immediate construction, by the McCarthy Company and Irving and Marco Hellman, founders and promoters of Carthay Center.

Fred A. Miller, former owner and operator of the California, Millers and other downtown Los Angeles theaters has secured the lease on this new theater which is to seat about 2,000, and it is his intention to make it another long run house for Southern California.

The theater is to be a beautiful one, built in a complete circle and is to be known as the Carthay Center Circle Theater. Many unique and unusual features will be installed and Architect Rosenthal, who designed the California and other big theaters of Southern California declares that it will be one of the show places of the Southland. Actual construction is expected to start within thirty to sixty days to insure its being ready to open when the new Fall season starts.

10 FACTS

1. In the Season 1924-1925 Metro-Goldwyn with its offering of fifty pictures established a record for consistent money-making at the box-office that has never before been equalled by any company at any time.

2. Backing up the verdict of the box-office is the report of the National Committee for Better Films which in its nationwide survey of motion pictures has listed Metro-Goldwyn first with ten out of forty films selected as the best of the Year.

3. Three world's records were established by "HE WHO GETS SLAPPED" at the Capitol Theatre in its two week run. First: it broke the house record for any one day with a business of $15,040 on November 9, 1924. Second: it brought in $71,500 during its first week, thereby establishing the world's record for one week. Third: it made a new world's record for a two week run by a business of $121,574.

4. "HE WHO GETS SLAPPED" broke records in many theatres scattered over the country. It was acknowledged as one of the very biggest money-makers of the year. At the Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, receipts were the largest ever taken in by this house. In Providence, at the Victory Theatre, the box-office was compelled to stop selling tickets night after night during the run.

5. Second only to "HE WHO GETS SLAPPED" was the historic engagement of BUSTER KEATON in "THE NAVIGATOR" at the Capitol Theatre, which brought in $113,454 during its two week run, starting October 18th.

6. Repeating its success of the East, "THE NAVIGATOR" equalled or broke records in the West. At the Warfield in San Francisco. At the State in Los Angeles.

7. At the Stanley Theatre, in Philadelphia, business done on "THE NAVIGATOR" was so phenomenal that the picture was held for an extended run. Reports from every section of the country confirmed the tremendous box-office results obtained on this production.

8. "HIS HOUR" broke the house record of the Tower Theatre, St. Paul, and was held over. The triumph of Elinor Glyn's production was nationwide, establishing new attendance records, playing to tremendous business. In Los Angeles at the State and Rialto Theatres. In St. Louis at the State. In Detroit at the Capitol. In Chicago at McVicker's.

9. Following closely in point of achievement were "EXCUSE ME!" "THE RED LILY," "SINNERS IN SILK," "CHEAPER TO MARRY," "WINE OF YOUTH," "THE SNOB," "LADY OF THE NIGHT," "SO THIS IS MARRIAGE," each of them an outstanding money-maker, whose performances at the box-office are acknowledged facts in the industry. "THE GREAT DIVIDE" in its early runs is proving to be one of the big money-makers of 1925. At the Capitol Theatre it did standing-room business. At Balaban & Katz' Chicago Theatre the lines were four abreast at the box-office.

10. These are business facts for 1924-25. No list of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's achievements would be complete without mentioning the rise to prominence and stardom of Norma Shearer and John Gilbert.

LIRTING

Ethel Shannon

Here is a whirlwind of mirth that played two years continuously on the stage. As a picture, endowed with the master touch of Al Christie, producer, and Scott Sidney, director, it represents a box-office knockout. The story is a rollicking, mile-a-minute gloom-chaser that begins with a chuckle and ends with a roar. You can mark this one down as a box-office riot that will pile up the dollars.

Does a woman sin who marries and lives with another man believing her husband dead?

Does a husband abet a sin if he returns from abroad to find his wife married to another, and keeps his identity secret?

To whom does the woman's duty lie, the first or the second man? To whom does the man's duty lie, to himself or his wife?

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

"For No Good Reason"

"Danny"—notice, Joe, free mention in the first word, first sentence, first paragraph—is inclined to excitement over the exhibitor who weeps over bad business and blames it on the mediocrity of product since the first of the year. And then goes on to the thought that we had so many big ones in Fall that the ordinarily good pictures don't appeal.

WE can't agree with you, Danny. You are too charitable. Even the faint praise of "fairly good" can't be applied to the sort of mediocrity that Broadway has viewed in recent weeks—to the mass that has been mixed with the real good ones.

Of course we can use the word "good" if we merely mean that the settings are beautiful, the acting adequate, and the direction standard. And we can wonder why the public doesn't respond to that sort of "goodness." But the public doesn't.

Have to tackle the problem from another angle. Here's our view: The chief trouble with production in the doldrum days—and, consequently, with box-offices—is that so many pictures reach the screen which should never have passed the stage of the first conference.

Experience is supposed to teach. But, as in all schools, the pupil has to play fifty-fifty with the "prof." And we are not doing it. Or there would not be so many pictures that leave us, after viewing seven thousand feet of celluloid, saying: "Why on earth did they ever start to make it?"

Novels are bought every day that by no stretch of imaginative genius can be turned into good screen material. One of the biggest producers has just concluded a struggle in the cutting room with a picture of that sort. And wondering why he parted with $7,500 for a first-novel. Pictures are turned over to sales departments under titles that all the high-powered wonders in the world couldn't sell. Pictures that should never have been started come into New York to be turned down bodily in the country's fattest territory by the censors. A leading distributor has one of those on his hands just now. And so it goes. Yet—"Experience teaches." Teaches what?

WE used to put all the blame for all the troubles in the picture business on the "mad scramble to meet release dates." Then we thought we passed that stage. In a way we have. Initial steps in production plans are now taken very far in advance.

But having reached that state of happy contentment we then set about defeating ourselves. Now we plan too much. We have to have "Fifty-Nine Nifties" or something or other to reach the exhibitor with at the beginning of the season. What matter if some are only titles, some ideas, and some "have nothing in particular"?

So that instead of having fifty-two domineering release dates to meet—and blame for our evils—we have one. THE FALL SEASON. And we must meet it in the Spring. With anything at all, so long as it is impressive enough to steal dates.

All of which, we grant you, doesn't constitute an insurmountable obstacle to good production. But it calls for work, harder work, better work. Rather—for judgment. For that clearness of judgment that comes of heeding the lessons taught by Experience.

Show me the man who has the final, absolute—unhindered—decision as to what should be made into a picture and what should never get beyond the synopsis stage—and I'll give you the rating on that organization's production average. With all due respect to the scenarists, directors, and players.

And if you can't show me a man who has that unhampered authority I'll show you an organization that hits today, and misses tomorrow—and misses again many times before it strikes the bell once more.

But back to the original argument. It isn't the folks who have seen too many GOOD pictures who are staying away from the theatres, Danny. It's the patrons who see too many pictures that should have been titled, as Wid used to put it, "For No Good Reason." Yessir!

* * *

A CONCLUDING line. We agree with you, Danny—notice, Joe, a mention in the last paragraph, too—when you say that the picture theatre must think more and more of "the complete show." That's why we have our new department, "THE FIRST RUN"—to be built of, for, and by the men who are leading the way in this new art of picture presentation. A few years from now such departments will constitute fifty per cent. of trade paper text space. We are satisfied to be "First in the Field."

Speaking Freely

Going to have an interesting chat to give you next week—with Joe Schnitzer. Seems strange to see Joe back before a Seventh Avenue desk. Six months at the studios makes us think of Joe as a producer rather than a distributor. As a matter of fact he's both. Which isn't a bad idea—putting executive sales thought behind the production line-up when the pictures are being planned. Anything that makes for sales ease necessarily makes for box-office pull. And we think you'll find it working out that way this year with F. B. O.'s Sixty.

F. B. O. is going to have some emphatic things to say within a few weeks. Some of which you will read in next week's interview. This organization has its feet set squarely and solidly on a platform of independence. "No theatres, no dickers with this or that group, just a fair, open market with entertainment to sell at a price that allows a profit."

You'll hear a lot of such platforms during the year to come. And this is the year that will give the answer.

Aside from the perennial battle of pictures against pictures there is going to be the competition this year of independence versus the steadily-growing, all-embracing, mammoth organizations.

The problem to be answered is: Will the exhibitor, who is most deeply concerned, watch the encounter from a neutral corner, or will he take sides?

I dunno. Many years of experience with exhibitor thought and with the shifting currents of this industry have left us with a dull, apathetic skepticism. Which isn't as it should be with an editor. Guess we are too close to the facts. Have to take a year off in the Sargasso Sea and then return with a clear perspective. Meanwhile we'll let everybody "say their say"—occasionally stick in a word of our own—and see if that helps.

* * *

Wonder if we'll have to start printing it "John Woody" now that he has annexed the title of "President." Bet he'll cancel his subscription if we do. So we'll have to keep it—"Jack." And here's to you, Jack! You've done a good job. You deserve all that's coming to you these days. And you deserve the bright prospect that is looming up for the coming year. Once again: Here's to you!

* * *

Jack Woody's job has not been an easy one. Think back a few months, a few more. Remember when he had things set nicely, after doing a pretty good piece of organization work? Along comes a Mabel Normand picture that looks as though it will burn rivers up. Test first runs breaking—and wiring glowing reports.

Then a group of damn fools get together over the home brew out in California—a super D. F. pulls a gun—and glory hallelujah starts popping.

That was a blow. If you don't know how serious—catch Jack Woody in a reminiscent mood some day. Mebbe he'll talk. Mebbe he'd rather forget it. But you can take our word. It was a wallop.

It took courage to pull through. And confidence on the part of others in Jack Woody to give him the chance to pull through. Pull through, he did.

Here's Henry Ginsberg in business a few weeks already as the Ginsberg Distributing Corporation and we haven't said our word of welcome. Which is all wrong. Because Henry is one of our pets in the independent field. We like his straight-shooting conversation, his square dealing, his feet-on-the-ground thinking processes. We like the sort of faith in him that is possessed by such men as E. V. Richards, Harry Nolan, Ben Amsterdam, and a host of others. And we like the idea of divorcing production and financing worries in the independent field from the problems of sales and exploitation. It should make for service to exchange and to producer.

..William Fox abandons the making of program pictures. That's news. Especially on top of the intimations that Universal is tending the same way.

It would seem that Bill Fox has been in training for the role for quite a few seasons now. Program type of pictures have been fewer and fewer, specials taking a more and more prominent place in his list. It is a rare thing now when Fox hasn't two or more pictures on Broadway at "legit" prices simultaneously. "The Iron Horse," "As No Man Has Loved"—the present Fox season has been just one special after another.

Which reminds us. It is pretty well understood that Fox is going to shoot these two mentioned specials to exhibitors pretty quickly. A good move. There is a lot of road show money in the pictures—enough to tempt any man to hold off as long as possible before general release. But exhibitors need some big ones now, and will need them this Spring and Summer. They'll give a rising vote of thanks to Fox when he turns "The Iron Horse" and "As No Man Has Loved" loose.

Came across an interesting article by Bert Glennon in the American Cinematographer. A real idea. Glennon says: "You critics had to study the principles of acting, story telling, and theatre mechanics to be able to criticize those subjects. Why not study the principles of photography and laboratory work before you attempt to say "The photography was poor!" Bert is right. Some of the comments on photography one hears—and reads—would make a Kleig light laugh. Occasionally the cameraman benefits by this lack of knowledge, for he is given credit for things that were purely laboratory creations. Most often he loses, for he is blamed for everything from actual bad lighting, something he should know, to poor projection, injudicious toning, prints that are too dark and prints that are too light. He gets all the brickbats in the phrase "The photography was poor."

Unfairness. Ray Johnston sold a couple of pictures to an exchange in Minneapolis. The contract specifically forbids non-theatrical showings. Now it is alleged that the exchange is booking such shows. And Bill Steffes—or someone out in Minneapolis—is writing letters saying "Don't book Rayart pictures" to a few states working with the Minnesota organization.

That isn't like Bill Steffes, who is a fair and square shooter. So we imagine someone flew off the handle and acted too hastily. The fight is with the particular exchange; the innocent party is Ray Johnston. He should have been given the first opportunity to know about the matter. He has a contract that could have been enforced. Instead he hears about it in a roundabout way. After much petty annoyance has been caused.

Incidentally, Ray Johnston is sitting pretty. Reed Howes, the Arrow collar boy, has gone over with a bang. Lots of interest being shown in the next year's line-up. But we'll tell you more of that later.

Stopped off the elevator after visiting Joe Schnitzer for a talk with Nat Rothstein. And found a busy room with all the bustle of a newspaper city room. Activity is the word. That crew must have to go some to live up to the exploitation reputation F. B. O. has had since its start. What's more, they do live up to it. And have to. No automatic first runs for them through theatre ownership—they've got to turn out the stuff that sells, to the exhibitor and the public. It's a constant high-pressure, and Nat's the man to entrust the accelorator to. —R. E. W.

Coming and Going

Adolph Zukor returned to New York from Europe late last week.

M. H. Hoffman and Abe Carlos left New York for the Coast early this week.

Harry M. Warner is back in the East from the Coast.

Al. Kaufman, managing director of Paramount houses in Los Angeles, is in New York.

Ethel Barrymore, motion picture and legitimate actress, who was forced to end her tour at Kansas City last week, due to illness, left for her home at Mamaroneck, N. Y., the remainder of her season's engagement with the Shuberts having been cancelled.

Samuel Spicer, who runs the Miami and Franklin theatres in Franklin, Ohio, was a visitor in the New York offices of Moving Picture World last week.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has returned to New York from Hollywood.

Mae Murray arrived in New York the middle of last week from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's studios in Culver City. She sailed for Europe on March 25.

David J. Mountain, president of Richmount Pictures Corporation, sailed on the Leviathan on Saturday, March 21st.

Hammons and Christie Buy Principal Plant on West Coast

On his return from his annual spring business trip to Los Angeles, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announced that he had purchased, in the interest of the several units producing comedies for the Educational Program, the studios previously occupied by the Principal Pictures Corporation, located on Santa Monica boulevard, Los Angeles. The property adjoins the studios now occupied by the Pickford-Fairbanks studio and is one of the most up-to-date studios on the West Coast. Charles Christie of the Christie Film Company is also financially interested in this transaction.

Before the start of the next producing season approximately $85,000 will be spent on further improvements on the existing studios and in the erection of several new stages. The companies producing Hamilton, Mermaid, Juvenile, Tuxedo and Cameo comedies will move into the new studio about June 1.

ROBBER TAKES COP'S PLACE

Miss Margery Rutherford, cashier of the Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., was held up and robbed of $700 on the night of March 16th just after she had been left by an accompanying patrolman who escorted her to the Star Amusement Company's offices with the day's receipts. She has been travelling under the protection of a patrolman ever since she was similarly held up several weeks ago. She was accompanied by Manager D. G. Inverarity at the time of the holdup, which was accomplished by two masked men.

Screen Advertisers Association Re-Elects Rothacker President

CONTINUED vigilance to protect the public against wildcat motion picture schemes was urged by Douglas D. Rothacker, president of the Screen Advertisers Association, in his address before the Association at the Cleveland convention. He told that during the last year the Association, in co-operation with the Hays organization, has been instrumental in disintegrating a number of propositions that otherwise might have cost the public dearly.

The Association, which is the screen departmental of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, is made up largely of advertisers and producers interested in industrial and advertising films.

"The Association," spoke Mr. Rothacker, "maintains a committee whose services are available to those contemplating using industrial or advertising pictures. The committee will give advice regarding production and an analysis of potential avenues of circulation."

To spread reliable information regarding practical pictures the Association, upon request, will send a program of industrial and advertising movies with a speaker to any advertising club in the country. The Association's plans include release center for such pictures in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

In association with the Eastman Kodak Company a card of instructions to non-theatrical projectionists has been compiled and hereafter will be included in all film shipments made by Association members.

Since the Association's reorganization several years ago its membership has grown until now it has representation in practically every American city of any size.

For president the Association re-elected Rothacker, who is a member of the National Commission of the A. A. C. of W. and vice-president of the Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce, Inc. The other elections were: vice-president, Elmer Kuhn, Atlas Educational Film Company, of Chicago; vice-president, Maurice Caplan, Metropolitan Motion Picture Company, of Detroit, and, secretary-treasurer, George Zherung, of the Y. M. C. A. motion picture department.

COL. JOY ADDRESSES BOSTON CLUB

"The kind of moving pictures children see is not the responsibility of the motion picture industry, but of the parents," asserted Colonel Jason J. Joy, representing Will Hays of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in an address at a meeting of the Boston City Federation of Women's Clubs on Friday, March 20. Colonel Joy was emphatic in his statement that the motion picture industry does not cater to children. "Its prime interest is the production of decent pictures for the adult. If we are to have worth-while pictures, we must have them as we have books, understandable to the grown-up, but not always suitable to the young," he said.

SUIT OVER OLEAN PALACE

Differences of opinion among the parties interested in Affiliated Theatres of Olean, Inc., developed the other day in the motion made on behalf of the Bordonaro Brothers, owners of the Palace Theatre, Olean, N. Y., in special term of Supreme Court in Buffalo, to bring in additional parties in a suit pending against the Bordonaros in the Cattaraugus county Supreme Court and brought by the Affiliated corporation. The suit was brought to recover possession of the Palace, which the Bordonaros are said to have refused Affiliated to occupy since early last fall.

"U"-Schine Deal is Consummated, R. H. Cochrane Says

Universal, according to an announcement by R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the corporation, has "bought an interest in the Schine Circuit." This transaction, the statement reveals, was the culmination of negotiations extending over the past three weeks.

"Mr. Laemmle and I are delighted at the prospect that this partnership arrangement in the Schine theatres offers us personally and offers to Universal pictures an important strategic territory in New York state," Cochrane comments.

The theatres involved in the deal just closed are the following, twenty of them owned by the Schines, and the rest under long term leases or booking arrangements:
